CONCORDANCE TO SWEDENBORG.

Kadesh. Kadesch.

A. 1678. 'They . . . came to En-Mishpat, this is Kadesh' (Gen.xiv.7)=continuation. . . By 'Kadesh' are signified truths, and also contentions about truths. As it here treats about the falsities and the derivative evils which the Lord overcame in His first combat, mention is made of 'En-Mishpat, this is Kadesh,' because there was contention about truths.

—<sup>2</sup>. That 'Kadesh'=truths about which there is contention, is evident from Ezek.xlvii.19; xlviii.28.

—<sup>3</sup>. It was also at Kadesh where Moses struck the rock . . . which waters were called 'Meribah,' from contention (Num.xx.1-13; xxvii.14; Dent.xxxii.51).

—<sup>4</sup>. It was also to Kadesh that the spies . . . returned, and where they murmured and contended . . . (Num.xiii.26).

—<sup>5</sup>. ('Thus) 'En-Mishpat,' or 'the fountain of judgment,' or 'the fountain of Mishpat-Kadesh'=contention about truths, and thus continuation.

1958. 'It is between Kadesh and Bared' (Gen.xvi.14)=the quality, namely, that He saw what was the quality of this truth . . . That 'Kadesh'=truth, and also contentions about truths. Ref.

2497. The state in which the Lord was when He first instructed Himself in the doctrinal things of charity and faith, is signified by 'Kadesh and Shur' (Gen.xx.1). 2502.

2503. That 'Kadesh'=the affection of the interior truth which proceeds from rational things . . . may be evident from the signification of 'Kadesh.' 'Kadesh'=truth about which there is contention, thus contention about truth, as to from what origin it is . . . But as all truth with the Lord was from a celestial origin, 'Kadesh' hence=the affection of truth. . . The affection of the interior truth which proceeds from rational things is here signified by 'Kadesh.'

S. 18<sup>g</sup>. By 'the wilderness,' and 'the wilderness of Kadesh' (Ps.xxix.8) is signified the Church where there is not any truth and good.

Kadmonite. Kadmonita. See KENITE.

Kaleidoscope. See CYLINDER.

Kalsenius. Kalsenius. D.4842. 4843. 5985. 6013.

VOL. IV.

Kapernaum. Kapernaum, Capernaum.

E. 447<sup>g</sup>. Occurs. 653<sup>g</sup>.

Kedarites. Kedares.

See ARABIA.

A. 2830<sup>g</sup>. 'The princes of Kedar' (Ezek.xxvii.21)=their intelligence.

3268. 'Nebaioth, Kedar,' etc. (sons of Ishmael) (Gen.xxv.14)=all things which are of the Spiritual Church, especially with the Gentiles . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That by 'Nebaioth' and 'Kedar' are represented those things which are of the Spiritual Church, especially with the gentiles; namely, its goods and the derivative truths. Ill.

—<sup>4</sup>. That Kedar is Arabia, is evident from the following passages; and that Arabia was named Kedar from the son of Ishmael, may be evident from the fact, that the things mentioned in these two verses are lands or nations which are all named from the sons and grandsons of Abraham . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. They, however, who are not in truth, because not in good, are they who are represented by 'the Arabians,' and by 'the Kedarites' in the wilderness. Ill.

—<sup>7</sup>. 'Kedar' (Is.xxi.16,17)=those who are in simple truth.

E. 357<sup>g</sup>. By 'Kedar,' or Arabia, are signified those who are in the Knowledges of good; and, abstractedly, these Knowledges themselves.

Keel. Carina. Coro.57<sup>g</sup>.

A. 9969. The inhabitants and Spirits (of the Second Earth) relate to the keeness of the external sight in the Grand Man . . .

9970. I replied that I . . . compared them to eagles as to their keeness of sight.

H. 97<sup>g</sup>. He who is in intelligence is said to be of sharp sight.

[H.] 462<sup>2</sup>. With the Angels, the internal sight inflows into the external sight, so that they act as a one; hence they have such sharpness of sight.

R. 455<sup>e</sup>. The sensuous man . . . is dull in the power of seeing truth.

M. 224<sup>e</sup>. By day they look at their wives with a retracted glance.

231<sup>4</sup>. Such judges appear to others to be endowed with a very sharp sight of the understanding, when yet they do not see a whit of what is just and fair.

293. I strained my eye sight to see what they were doing. 315.

380<sup>6</sup>. Elevate the keensightedness of your abilities a little higher, and you will see . . .

T. 40<sup>e</sup>. He believes himself to be endowed with the keensightedness of an eagle, although he sees the things of wisdom no more than a bat in the daylight.

Keep. See GUARD.

Keep, Preserve. Servare.

Keeper, Preserver. Servator.

R. 8. 'To keep the things which are written therein' (Rev.i.3)=to do the things which are therein.

185. 'Because thou hast kept the word of My endurance' (Rev.iii.10)=because they have fought against evils, and then have rejected falsities.

186. 'I will keep thee from the hour of temptation . . .' (id.)=that they will be protected and preserved in the day of the Last Judgment. E.215.

705. 'Blessed is he who watcheth and keepeth his garments' (Rev.xvi.15)= . . . Heaven for those who look to Him, and remain in a life according to His precepts . . .

944. 'Blessed is he who keepeth the words of this prophecy' (Rev.xxii.7)=that the Lord will . . . give eternal life to those who keep-custodiunt-and do the truths . . . of the doctrine of this book . . . 946.

E. 15. 'To observe and keep' (Rev.i.3)=to perceive, will, and act according thereto. —<sup>2</sup>, III.

214. 'Thou hast kept the word of My endurance'=those who have lived according to the Lord's precepts. . . . 'To keep'=to live.

391<sup>16</sup>. 'To keep-custodire-the Sabbath' (Is.lvi.6)=to be in conjunction with the Lord; and 'to keep His covenant'=conjunction by a life according to the Lord's precepts.

444<sup>6</sup>. 'Then Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell securely' (Jer.xxxiii.16)=that then they shall be saved who are in love to Him.

654<sup>9</sup>. 'A Preserver and a Prince' (Is.xix.20)=the Lord, who is called 'a Preserver' or 'Saviour' from the good of love; and 'a Prince' from the truths of faith.

811<sup>23</sup>. 'To keep them from afar' (Jer.xlvi.27; xxx. 10)=to save them although they are far from salvation. 'To keep from the land of captivity'=to deliver from falsities, whereby they had been secluded from the truths and goods of Heaven and the Church.

899<sup>7</sup>. 'If anyone keep My word, he shall never see death' (John viii.52). By 'to keep the Lord's words' is signified to live according to the Lord's precepts.

1007. 'And keepeth his garments' (Rev.xvi.15)=those who live according to His Divine truths.

D. Wis. xi. 3. 'To keep My precepts,' 'words,' and 'commandments' (John xiv.23; xv.10)=to do the goods of charity, which are uses to the neighbour.

Keep away. See CLOSE-arcus.

E. 357<sup>26</sup>. They who are kept down by the falsities of ignorance. Sig.

Kenan. Kenan.

A. 500. 'Enos . . . begat Kenan' (Gen.v.9) . . . By 'Kenan' is signified a fourth Church, which succeeded the former ones.

Kenissite. Kenissita. See KENITE.

Kenite. Kenita.

A. 1867. 'The Kenite, and the Kenissite, and the Kadmonite' (Gen.xv.19)=falsities, which are to be expelled from the Lord's Kingdom.

Kephas. Kephah, Kephaz.

E. 411<sup>13</sup>. 'Thou shalt be called Kephas, which, if thou interpretest it, is a rock' (John i.42). Kephas means a rock in the Syriac language, and therefore also Peter in that text is everywhere called 'Kephas;' and Kephas is also 'a rock' in the Hebrew language, as is evident in Jer.iv.29; and in Job xxx.6, where 'rocks' are mentioned in the plural.

820<sup>3</sup>. As truth from good . . . is the first of the Church, therefore Peter was the first called, and was the first of the apostles; and was also named by the Lord 'Kephas,' which is 'a rock;' but in order that it might be the name of a person, he is called 'Peter.' By 'a rock,' in the supreme sense, is signified the Lord as to Divine truth, or the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord. Hence, in the relative sense, by 'a rock' is signified truth from good which is from the Lord. In like manner by 'Peter.'

A. 1200<sup>e</sup>. Like a shell without a kernel. 6587<sup>e</sup>. 9925. 10194.

5563. As it were nuclei in the skull . . . Such nuclei, which are indurations, with those who are being reformed, are broken . . .

M. 267<sup>3</sup>. Of whom it may be said, that his shell . . . is wise, and his kernel . . . is insane.

364. The internals with the good are like the kernels within in their soundness and goodness . . . But . . . with the evil their internals are like kernels which are not eatable on account of their bitterness, or which are rotten, or worm eaten . . .

D. 250<sup>e</sup>. They thus pervert the nucleus or nature [of man].

3612. Such . . . form as it were nuclei in the left side of my head.

3696. The life of persuasion constitutes the shell, and the life of nature the kernel . . .

4074. By Noah is signified the Church which . . . lasted in the posterity as a nucleus or axis.

4287<sup>2</sup>. The opinion in which a man is, or his assumed principle of life, is like a nucleus . . .

6105. (The charity in which a man lives) may be compared to a kernel . . .

— Then all these things are like a shell without a kernel . . .

Kesia. See under CASSIA.

Kesithae. Kesithae.

A. 4400. 'A hundred kesithae' (Gen. xxxiii. 19) = what is full. . . By 'the kesithae,' which were coins, in the internal sense, are signified such (interior) truths; for this word is derived from a word which means truth (Ps. lx. 6).

Keturah. Keturah.

See under ABRAHAM.

A. 3235. 'Abraham and Keturah' = the Lord as to the Divine Spiritual. Ex.

3236. Abraham's woman (Keturah) represents the Lord as to Divine truth adjoined to Divine spiritual good. Ex.

3237. 'Her name was Keturah' (Gen. xxv. 1) = the essence of this Divine truth.

3243. 'All these were the sons of Keturah' (ver. 4) = as to doctrinal things and the worships thence. . . 'Keturah' represents Divine spiritual truth conjoined with Divine spiritual good; thus the things which are of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, the worship of which is according to doctrinal things. . .

Key. Clavis.

A. 2356<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident what is signified by . . . the keys with which is opened (the door of Heaven).

2760. Pref.<sup>2</sup>. To this faith belong the keys of the Kingdom of the Heavens . . .

3750<sup>2</sup>. That Pope spoke to me . . . about Peter and his keys, which he supposed himself to have . . . He was instructed what is meant by Peter's keys, namely, the faith of love and of charity . . . D. 3648.

4368<sup>3</sup>. 'I will give thee the keys of the Kingdom of the Heavens' (Matt. xvi. 19) . . . By 'the rock,' here, . . . is signified the faith of charity . . . and thus the keys to open and shut Heaven are given to this faith.

9410<sup>3</sup>. That 'keys' = power. Ill.

10182<sup>2</sup>. One Angel prevails against a thousand who are from the Hells. It is this power which is meant by 'the keys' of Peter . . .

J. 57. I spoke with some from that nation concerning the keys given to Peter . . .

W. 184. The knowledge of degrees is like a key to open the causes of things.

R. 62. 'I have the keys of Hell and of death' (Rev. i. 18) = that He alone can save. . . The reason 'to have the keys of Hell and of death' does not mean the power to cast into Hell, but the power to save. Ex. E. 86.

174. 'He who hath the key of David, and who openeth and no one shutteth, and shutteth and no one openeth' (Rev. iii. 7) = who alone has omnipotence to save. By 'David' is meant the Lord as to Divine truth. By 'the key' is signified the Lord's omnipotence over Heaven and Hell . . .

421. 'There was given to him the key of the pit of the abyss' (Rev. ix. 1) = their Hell open. By 'a key' is signified the power to open, and also the act of opening. Refs.

768. What the Lord said to Peter about the keys of the Kingdom of the Heavens. Ex.

798. By 'the keys of the Kingdom of the Heavens,' which are that whatever that 'Rock,' which is the Lord, shall bind on earth shall be bound in the Heavens, and that whatever it shall loose on earth shall be loosed in the Heavens, is meant that the Lord has the power over Heaven and earth . . . thus the power to save the men who from faith of the heart are in that confession of Peter.

840. 'To have the key of the abyss' (Rev. xx. 1) = the Divine power to open and shut Hell.

M. 43<sup>2</sup>. He handed me the key, and said, Write.

376. Not even to look through the key hole.

T. 730<sup>2</sup>. The Holy Supper . . . is like the key to their house in Heaven.

D. 2136. By Peter is meant faith, and to faith are given the keys of the Lord's Kingdom; because no one can be admitted into Heaven except by faith in the Lord, and no one gives faith except the Lord; therefore the Lord alone has the keys of the Heavens . . .

5012<sup>2</sup>. (The English) give keys to strangers, which are signs that they would be received.

D. Min. 4823. He came to those who said that they have Peter's keys . . .

E. 86<sup>3</sup>. The reason 'keys' are mentioned, is that all the Hells are closed, and are opened only when evil Spirits are cast in, and when some are taken out . . . Hence 'keys' are mentioned, by which is signified the power to open and to shut . . . The like is signified by 'the keys' given to Peter . . .

205. 'He who hath the key of David' = Who has power by Divine truth. 'A key' = the power to open and to shut; here, Heaven and Hell . . . Hence by 'a key' is here meant the power to save; because to open Heaven and to close Hell is to save.

—<sup>2</sup>. The like is meant by the key of Peter as by 'the key of David;' namely, that the Lord has all the power; and that He has Power by His Divine truth. 206<sup>3</sup>.

209<sup>4</sup>. This is also meant by the keys given to Peter; for by Peter there . . . is meant truth from good which is from the Lord, thus faith from charity; and by the keys given to him is meant power over evils and falsities. 411<sup>15</sup>.

[E.] 536. 'There was given to him the key of the pit of the abyss' = communication and conjunction with the Hells. 'A key' = the act of opening. —<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. A key (as used in the Spiritual World) corresponds to admission and opening from one part (of the mind) into another.

—<sup>3</sup>. From these things it may be known whence it is that 'a key' is mentioned; and that it = admission and opening. Ill.

—<sup>4</sup>. Therefore it is said that they 'carry the keys of Heaven' (Luke xi. 52); that is, that by truths they can open communication with Heaven for those whom they teach . . .

820<sup>4</sup>. By 'the keys of the Kingdom of the Heavens' is signified intromission into Heaven for all those who are in truths from good from the Lord.

Inv. 35. The reason the keys of the Kingdom of the Heavens were given to Peter, is that he represented the Lord as to Divine truth.

Key-bearer. Claviger.

R. 531<sup>7</sup>. Papists . . . who do not adore any key-bearer of Christ, are saved.

T. 562<sup>3</sup>. They make only a general confession before their key-bearer.

Khesib. Kesib.

A. 482<sup>7</sup>. 'He was in Khesib when she bare him' (Gen. xxxviii. 5) . . . 'Khesib' = the state of the Idolatrous signified by 'Shelah,' in which the Jewish nation was.

Kick. Recalcitrare.

Kicking, A. Recalcitratio.

A. 621<sup>2</sup>. There he lay with the horse kicking at him.

—<sup>3</sup>. The horse which . . . kicked signified the Jewish and Israelitish people, that they were solely in externals, and thus that the Intellectual rejected, and as it were by kicking, removed them. D. 2276.

Kid. Haedus, Hoedus.

A. 294. 'A kid' = the affections of good.

2781. Voluntary things are signified by 'kids,' etc.

—<sup>4</sup>. That the truth and good of the innocence of the external or natural man is signified by 'a kid,' and 'a she-goat.' Ill.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The leopard shall lie down with the kid' (Is. xi. 6) . . . 'A kid' = those who are in innocence.

—<sup>5</sup>. When all the first-born of Egypt were smitten, it was commanded that they should slay a small cattle perfect and male of the lambs or kids, and should put the blood on the posts . . . (Ex. xii. 5) . . . 'Lambs and kids' = the states of innocence [which cause] those who are in them to be protected from evil . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. When Jehovah appeared to anyone by an Angel, a kid of the she-goats was sacrificed, lest he should die. Ill. The reason was that . . . the Lord cannot appear to anyone, not even to an Angel, unless he to whom He appears is in a state of innocence . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. As genuine conjugal love is innocence, it was customary in the Representative Church to enter in to a wife by a gift of a kid of the she-goats. Ill. 4871.

—<sup>8</sup>. That 'a kid' and 'a she-goat' = innocence, is evident also from the sacrifices of guilt, when anyone had sinned through error. Ill. Sin through error is sin of ignorance, in which there is innocence.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk' (Ex. xxiii. 19; xxxiv. 26) . . . = that they should not destroy the innocence of infancy.

3540. 'She made him put on the skins of the kids of the she-goats' (Gen. xxvii. 16) = the external truths of domestic good. . . 'Kids of the she-goats,' being from the flock at home, = the truths of domestic good.

7840. 'A she-goat,' or 'a kid' = the good of truth, in which there is innocence.

—<sup>10</sup>. 'A kid,' or 'a she-goat' = the exterior good of innocence. Ex.

9301. 'Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk' = that the good of innocence of the posterior state is not to be conjoined with the truth of innocence of the prior state. . . 'A kid' = the good of innocence. Ex.

Kidneys. Renes.

Renal. Renalis.

A. 3884<sup>4</sup>. The fourth general operation (of Heaven) was into the kidneys. D. 1616.

3941<sup>2</sup>. 'The fat of the kidneys of wheat' (Deut. xxxii. 14) = the Celestial of love and charity.

5378. (These modest Spirits) were infested by . . . those who constitute the province of the kidneys, the ureters, and the bladder. The former answered them modestly, but still the latter infested and harassed them, for such is the nature of the renal ones. (The modest Spirits therefore terrified them) in consequence of which the renal ones fled away; and then there appeared a certain one who pursued them in their flight, and another who flew in front between the feet of that great one; and that great one was seen to have wooden shoes, which he threw towards the renal ones. See PERITONEUM, here. D. 991. 992. Ex.

5381. Those who, in the Grand Man, constitute the province of the kidneys, ureters, and bladder, are of such a genius that they want. . . to explore and scrutinize the quality of others; and some of them desire to chastise and punish, provided there is something of justice in the cause. Such, also, are the offices of the kidneys, ureters, and bladder; for they explore the blood which is projected into them, to discover whether it contains any useless and hurtful serum; and they also separate it from what is useful, and afterwards castigate it; for they detrude it towards the lower parts, and in the way and afterwards agitate it in various ways. Such are the offices of those who constitute the province of these parts. But the Spirits. . . to which the urine itself. . . corresponds, are infernal. . .

5382. That those who constitute the province of the kidneys and ureters are at hand to explore or scrutinize the quality of others, as to what they are thinking, and what they are willing, and that they are in the cupidity of finding out causes, and of making them guilty of some fault, chiefly in order that they may be able to chastise them, I have frequently experienced, and have spoken to them about this cupidity and end. Many of this kind in the world had been judges, and had then rejoiced at heart when they found out what they believed to be a just cause for fining, chastising, and punishing. The operation of such is apperceived in the region at the back where are the kidneys, ureters, and bladder. Those who belong to the bladder extend themselves towards Gehenna, where also some of them sit as it were in judgment.

5383. The methods in which they explore or scrutinize the lower minds of others are very numerous; but it is allowable to adduce only this one. They lead other Spirits to speak, which in the other life is effected by means of an influx which cannot be described to the apprehension: if, then, the train of the induced speech is easy, they thence judge that they are such. They also induce a state of affection. But they who explore in this way are among the grosser ones. But others explore in a different way. There are some who, the moment they arrive, at once apperceive another's thoughts, desires, and acts, and also what past deed gives him pain. This they seize on, and if they suppose there is just reason, they condemn. . .

5384. The methods in which those who constitute the province of the kidneys, ureters, and bladder. . . chastise, are also various. For the most part they remove things delightful and glad, and induce things undelightful and sad. Through this cupidity these Spirits communicate with the Hells, and through the justice of the cause, which they inquire into before they chastise, they communicate with Heaven; and therefore they are kept in that province.

5385. From these things it may be evident what is signified by its being said in the Word that 'Jehovah proves and searches the reins and the heart'; and also that 'the reins chastise.' Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. By 'the reins,' here, are signified spiritual things, and by 'the heart,' celestial things; that is, by 'the reins' are signified the things which are of truth; and by 'the heart,' the things which are of good. The reason is that the kidneys purify the serum; and the heart, the blood itself. Hence, 'to prove,' 'explore,' and 'search,' 'the reins' = to prove, explore, and search the quantity and quality of truth, or the quantity and quality of the faith with man.

5391. There are also kidneys which are called the subsidiary kidneys, and also the renal capsules. Their office is not so much to secrete the serum, as the blood itself, and to transmit the purer blood by a short circuit towards the heart; and thus also to prevent the spermatie vessels, which are near, from carrying off all the purer blood; but they perform their chief work in embryos, and also in new-born infants. Chaste virgins constitute this province in the Grand Man, who are prone to anxieties, and are fearful of being disturbed. They lie quiet at the left part of the side below. If anything is thought about Heaven, or about a change of their state, they become anxious and sigh. . . When my thoughts were led towards infants, they felt a remarkable comfort and internal joy. . . and when anything was thought in which there was nothing heavenly, they were tormented. Their anxiety arose chiefly from their being of such a nature that they keep their thoughts fixedly in one thing. . . The reason they belong to this province, is that thus they constantly detain the lower mind of another in certain thoughts, whence such things arise and manifest themselves as cohere in a series, and which are to be withdrawn, or from which the man is to be purified; and in this way the interiors are better open to the Angels. . . D.968-972, Ex.

10032. 'The two kidneys, and the fat upon them' (Ex.xxix.13) = the interior truth of the external man and its good. 'The kidneys' = interior truths.

— By 'the kidneys' are signified truths which explore, purify, and chastise. This signification is derived from their function. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'To search,' and 'to prove,' 'the reins' = to explore the truths of faith. . .

— The truths of faith are signified by 'the kidneys, is very evident from David : 'Jehovah, behold Thou desirest Truth in the reins' (Ps.li.6).

[A. 10032]<sup>o</sup>. The reason 'the kidneys'=interior truth, and its exploration, is that the ureters and the bladder, which go forth from the kidneys,=exterior truth, and its exploration, and also its chastisement. Refs.

10074. 'The two kidneys, and the fat which is upon them' (Ex.xxix.22)=the purified interior truth of the natural man and its good. 'The kidneys'=the interior truth of the external or natural man. . . The reason it is truth purified which is signified by 'the kidneys,' is that the kidneys are organs which purify the blood; and the blood=truth.

H. 96<sup>o</sup>. Those in the Grand Man who are in the kidneys, are in truth which examines, separates, and corrects.

97. Hence it is that by . . . 'the kidneys' is signified the examination of truth.

P. 336<sup>o</sup>. How the . . . kidneys separate the blood from impure humours.

R. 140. 'That I am He who searcheth the reins and the hearts' (Rev.ii.23)=that the Lord sees the quality of the truth and the quality of the good which everyone has. . . By 'to search the reins and the hearts' is signified to see all things which a man believes and which he loves, thus the quality of his truth and of his good. That this is signified . . . is from correspondence . . . (which) is from this,—that as the kidneys purify the blood from impure things, which are called urinous . . . so the truth of faith purifies man from falsities . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the ancients placed . . . intelligence and its perceptions in the kidneys. III.

—<sup>e</sup>. By 'the kidneys,' in these passages, are signified the truths of intelligence and of faith.

T. 496<sup>o</sup>. In such freedom . . . do the kidneys secrete.

D. 367. The Spirits who form the kidneys are they who want to dissipate falsities from truths, and thus to purify spiritual things . . .

825. The Spirits who represent the kidneys, ureters, and bladder in man, are on the left side of the face, but in front, at a distance between the region of the temples and that of the forehead, nearer to the forehead. These are such as care nothing for interior things, still less for those which are more interior; nor do they understand them . . . The same are prone to indignation, as from a certain species of envy; as because good Spirits . . . were with me. At this they were indignant, and wanted in various ways to harass them, in order to drive them away. Many such things they do from indignation; and they are restless in mind; and are not content with their lot, so that a kind of faculty of the urine may be thence inferred. They are present, and I speak to them; they are indignant, go away, return; they are numerous and in series. They, moreover, are not deceitful, because they act from a kind of angry envy, but not from deceit; and are like those in the bodily life who are called merely choleric.

827. The same, who are as it were kidneys, ureters, and bladders, do not well understand the thoughts of man. They do not penetrate, except only to those things which are exterior . . .

924. These examiners are of that kind who constitute the province of the secretive organs in man; as the kidneys, the ureters, the bladder; for these members do nothing else than explore the several things which are presented to them; nay, which they snatch to themselves.

959. Whenever any Soul comes, and is met by those who constitute the province of the kidneys, ureters, and bladder, they are at hand in order to examine, or explore; and they desire to have causes, and solicitously seek them wherever they can find them; for they desire to explore for the sake, of chastising and punishing, in which cupidity they are much delighted; but they explore only those things which the Soul has brought with him from the body; for the kidneys, ureters, and bladder secrete from the blood only the obsolete and filthy liquids.

960. That those who are in the province of the kidneys and of the subsidiary kidneys, draw the grosser things into them, and thus purify those things which are to be more pure.

— . Both the urinary and the subsidiary kidneys draw unclean things into them; the kidneys the unclean things of the serum, and the subsidiary kidneys the more unclean things of the spirit of the blood; and therefore the spermatic vessels descend from the emulgents.

961. While the purer thoughts are being taken away from man, they who are in the province of the kidneys then pursue the corporeal things also, thus the more unclean things, in a twofold order or degree. As these things are in agreement with those who constitute that province, because they introduce them, they also withhold their minds in them, and thus abstract them from the purer things, and therefore the purer things are taken away to Heaven unaccompanied by what is unclean.

962. Therefore the subsidiary kidneys take away the unclean things of the spirits of the blood, as the kidneys take away the unclean things of the serum of the blood . . . They act by attraction . . . In like manner do the Spirits in that province . . . As soon as anything which corresponds is excited in a purer sphere . . . these Spirits associate themselves together, and by their co-operative force, which is exerted at a distance . . . they excite and attract, and thus liberate the better and purer things from the more unclean ones . . . and therefore it is evil Spirits who wipe them away, whereby, however, they do not become worse, but they must perform such offices before they can become better, or be reformed.

966. The subsidiary kidneys thus draw to themselves by a fixed view into those things which are not so grossly unclean, but which are interiorly unclean. They attract because they fix the serum of the spirits or of the purer blood . . .

968. On those who constitute the province of the renal capsules.

1004. Those who secrete the inmost essences pertain to the renal capsules . . . They are harmless Spirits, who perform their chief work in fetuses and infants; and therefore they can be referred to the sanguineous part.

1221. The quality of these Spirits (who exercise the Judgment of Gehenna) may be evident from a comparison of their phantasies and life with the operation of the kidneys, ureters, and bladder. Des.

1239. Those who constitute the province of the kidneys and ureters [exercise] exterior Judgment . . .

E. 167. 'I am He that searcheth the reins and the hearts' = . . . that the Lord alone knows and explores the exteriors and the interiors, and the things which are of faith and love. . . 'The reins' = the truths of faith, and their purification from falsities. —<sup>2</sup>, III.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins' (Jer. xii. 2) = truth only in the memory and thence in some thought when the man is speaking, but not in the will and thence in the act. Truth in the will and thence in the act is what separates and dissipates falsities . . . This truth is what is meant in special by the 'reins.'

—<sup>3</sup>. 'To prove the reins' (Jer. xvii. 10) = to purify truth by separating what is false.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'Reins' (Ps. li. 6) are here expressed in the Original Language by another word, which involves the separation both of falsities from truths, and of evils from goods. Hence it is evident that by 'the reins' are signified purification and separation.

—<sup>6</sup>. The combats of truths with falsities is signified by; 'My reins chastise me in the nights' (Ps. xvi. 7).

— . 'To possess the reins' (Ps. cxxxix. 13) = to know the falsities and the truths with man.

—<sup>6</sup>. As the kidneys = truths purified from falsities, in the sacrifices only the fats and the kidneys were burned. III. . . The reason was that the fats = the good of love; and the kidneys, the truths of faith.

—<sup>7</sup>. The reason 'to search the reins and the hearts' = also to explore the exteriors and the interiors of man, is that truth is without and good is within; and spiritual good, which in its essence is truth, and is in special signified by 'the reins,' is exterior good . . .

710<sup>16</sup>. 'To possess the reins' = to purify truths from falsities.

Kill. See SLAY—maclare.

Kill. Interficere.

A. 8086. 'Jehovah killed all the first-born in the land of Egypt' (Ex. xiii. 15) = that all who were in faith separated from charity were damned.

R. 322. 'There was given to them the Power of killing over the fourth part of the earth' (Rev. vi. 8) = the destruction of all the good of the Church. As by 'death' is meant the extinction of man's spiritual life, and as by 'Hell' is meant damnation, it follows that by 'to kill' is here meant to destroy the life of man's soul.

D. 1383. On the right side of the lake . . . are those who seek to kill each other with cruel instruments . . . 1396, Gen. art.

3145<sup>2</sup>. If he could have killed the universal human race for the mere glory of his name, he would have had the highest pleasure from it.

3383. He would have killed me.

5500. They are such as have killed men in cold blood . . .

E. 384. 'There was given to them the Power of killing over the fourth part of the earth' = the deprivation of all good and thence of all truth from the Word, and thence in their doctrine of the Church from the Word. . . 'To kill,' or 'to kill—occidere,' = to deprive of good and truth.

397. 'Their fellow-servants and their brethren who should be killed as they were' (Rev. vi. 11) = evils; for 'to kill' them = evil.

7021<sup>e</sup>. 'To kill the soul' (Ezek.xiii.19)= . . . to die spiritually or be damned.

7039. 'I will kill thy son, thy first-born' (Ex.iv.23)=the extinction of the faith which is devoid of charity, and the consequent devastation of truth with them.

7043. 'Jehovah . . . sought to kill (Moses)' (ver.24)=that a representative Church could not be instituted with that nation. 'To seek to kill'=not to receive.

7089. In the Heavens they do not know what it is 'to commit murder;' for they live to eternity; but instead of 'to commit murder' they understand to bear hatred, and to injure the spiritual life of anyone.

7162. 'To put a sword in their hand to kill us' (Ex.v.21)=that hence they feel such ardour to destroy by falsities the truths of the Church. . . 'To kill'=to destroy the things which are of faith and charity.

8413. 'To kill all this congregation with hunger' (Ex.xvi.3)=that from defect of delight and of good they would expire. 'To kill'=to deprive of life; here, of the life which is from delight and from good; for in these the life of man consists. Ex.

8902. 'Thou shalt not commit murder' (Ex.xx.13)=not to take away spiritual life from anyone; also not to extinguish faith and charity; and also not to bear hatred to the neighbour. (For) 'to kill'=to deprive of spiritual life . . . because, in the internal sense, it treats of the spiritual . . . life of man; and as spiritual life or the life of Heaven with man is the life of faith and charity, therefore by 'not to commit murder' is also signified not to extinguish faith and charity with anyone. The reason 'not to commit murder'=not to bear hatred to the neighbour, is that he who bears hatred continually wants to kill, and also would kill in act unless prevented by the fear of the penalty, etc.; for hatred . . . breathes nothing but the murder-necem-of him whom it hates, in the world the murder of his body, in the other life the murder of his soul. This is meant by the Lord's words in Matt.v.21,22.

—<sup>2</sup>. That 'to commit murder' or 'kill'=to take away spiritual life from anyone, and consequently to extinguish faith and charity, is evident from almost all the passages in the Word where 'killing' is mentioned, or the expression 'to kill' is used. Ill.

—<sup>10</sup>. 'Killers' (Jer.iv.31)=those who destroy goods and truths.

—<sup>12</sup>. 'They shall kill you' (Matt.xxiv.9). 'The hour cometh, that everyone who killeth you will think that he offers holy worship to God' (John xvi.2). Here also by 'to kill' is signified to deprive of spiritual life; that is, of faith and charity.

—<sup>15</sup>. 'The slain' (Rev.xviii.24)=those who have perished as to spiritual life.

—<sup>16</sup>. As by 'one slain' or 'thrust through' is signified the extinction of good and truth . . .

—<sup>17</sup>. (Thus) the commandment about 'not committing murder' involves not only that a man is not to be killed as to the body, but also that he is not to be killed as to the soul . . .

9011<sup>4</sup>. In order that these things might be signified by those who kill their companions by mistake (Deut. xix.4-6).

9013. 'To kill him with deceit' (Ex.xxi.14)=malice thence to deprive the neighbour of eternal life. 'To kill'=to take away faith and charity from the neighbour, and thus to deprive him of spiritual life.

9073. 'And (the ox) hath slain a man or a woman' (ver.29)=if it has destroyed the truth and good of faith.

9093<sup>4</sup>. Belshazzar's being 'slain in that night' (Dan. v.30)=the privation of the life of truth and good, thus damnation.

9205. 'I will kill you with the sword' (Ex.xxii.24)=that by falsities they deprive themselves of good and truth. 'To kill,' when said of those who defraud those who are in good and truth . . . =to deprive them of such things. That 'to kill'=to deprive of spiritual life. Refs.

9262. 'The innocent and the just kill thou not' (Ex.xxiii.7)=aversion to the destroying of interior and exterior good. . . 'To kill'=to destroy. 9264.

9320<sup>2</sup>. Such are permitted to destroy, and to kill . . . but not those who are in externals and at the same time in internals, because these act from good, and good is from the Lord.

9324<sup>4</sup>. 'The slayer' (Hos.ix.13)=one who deprives of spiritual life, or of life from good and truth. Refs.

10288. 'To be cut off,' and 'to be killed,'=to be separated from those who are in good and the derivative truths, and to perish as to spiritual life.

10438. 'For evil He hath brought them forth to kill them in the mountains' (Ex.xxxii.12)=that those who are in good would perish. 'To bring forth to kill'=to destroy; but, when said of Jehovah, who never destroys anyone, it=to perish by their own evil.

10490. 'Kill ye a man his brother, and a man his companion, and a man his neighbour' (ver.27)=a closing up as to the influx of good and truth, and of things in affinity with them, lest there should be any reception and communication. 'To kill'=to take away spiritual life, thus the good of love and the truth of faith; here, therefore, to close up lest there should be any reception and communication of them . . .

H. 531<sup>2</sup>. Although he does not commit murder, still he bears hatred to everyone who opposes him . . . and unless external bonds . . . restrained, he would commit murder.

570. Therefore it is the delight of their life to want to destroy and kill . . .

S. 67<sup>4</sup>. By 'to commit murder,' man understands to bear hatred, and to desire revenge even to murder-necem. . . A spiritual Angel understands by it to act as a devil, and to murder-necare=a man's soul. A celestial Angel understands by it to bear hatred to the Lord, and to the things which are of the Lord. E.1083<sup>6</sup>.

R. 112. 'Antipas . . . was slain among you where Satan dwelleth' (Rev.ii.13)=when all Truth has been extinguished by the falsities in the Church. (=when all are hated who acknowledge the Lord's Divine Human. E.137.)

139. 'I will kill her sons with death' (ver.23)=that all truths from the Word with them will be turned into falsities. . . 'To kill sons'=to turn truths into falsities, for so they perish. (=that thus falsities are extinguished. E.166.)

269. 'A lamb standing as if slain' (Rev.v.6)=the Lord as to the Human not acknowledged in the Church to be Divine. (=as yet acknowledged by few. E.315.)

307. 'That they should kill one another' (Rev.vi.4)=intestine hatreds, infestations by the Hells, and internal unrest. (=the falsification or extinction of truths. E.366).

325. 'The souls of them that were slain for the Word of God, and for the testimony which they held' (ver.9)=those who had been hated, reproached, and rejected by the evil, on account of a life according to the truths of the Word, and the acknowledgment of the Lord's Divine Human. E.392. R.329.

—<sup>3</sup>. That by 'the slain' are meant those who are rejected, treated with abuse, and held in hatred by the evil in the World of Spirits, and who can be seduced; and also those who long to know truths, but cannot on account of the falsities in the Church. Ill.

427. 'Not to be able to kill them' (Rev.ix.5)=not to be able to take away from those who are not in the faith of charity the faculty of understanding and willing truth and good; for when this faculty is taken away the man is spiritually killed. E.547.

[R.] 446. 'To kill a third part of men' (ver.15)=to take away from the men of the Church spiritual light and life. (=to deprive themselves of all the understanding of truth, and thence of spiritual life. E.572.)

453. 'By these three was a third part of men killed' (ver.18)=that it is from these things that the men of the Church perish. (=that all the understanding of truth and the derivative spiritual life was extinguished by them. E.579.)

— 'To be killed'=to be spiritually killed, which is to perish as to the soul.

495. 'If anyone will hurt them, thus must he be killed' (Rev.xi.5)=that he who condemns them shall in like manner be condemned. (=that they perish according to the endeavour to inflict evil. E.643.)

500. 'The beast . . . shall kill them' (ver.7)=that those who are in the internals of the doctrine of faith alone . . . will themselves reject them, and, so far as they have influence, will cause others to reject them. (=the destruction thereby of all the good and truth of the Church. E.651.)

516. 'There were killed in the earthquake names of men seven thousand' (ver.13)=that in that state all those who professed faith alone . . . perished. (=that in that change of state all truths of good perished with them, and thereby all things of Heaven and the Church. E.676.)

589. 'Slain from the foundation of the world' (Rev. xiii.8)=the Lord's Divine Human not acknowledged from the establishment of the Church. E.807.

592. 'If anyone shall kill with the sword, he must be killed with the sword' (ver.10)=that he who by falsities destroys the soul of another, shall be destroyed and shall perish by falsities. E.812.

603. 'As many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed' (ver.15)=damnation upon those who do not acknowledge the doctrine of their faith. E.833.

— 'To be killed'=to be spiritually killed, which is to be damned; and (therefore) 'to be killed'=to be declared a heretic, and to be excluded from the communion of the Church . . .

801. By 'them that are slain' (Rev.xviii.24) are signified those who have been spiritually slain; and those are said to be spiritually slain who perish by falsities. Ref. E.1194.

836. 'The rest were slain with the sword of Him who sat upon the horse . . .' (Rev.xix.21)=that all from the various heresies among the Reformed who have not lived according to the Lord's precepts . . . having been judged from the Word, perish.

847. 'To be killed,' 'pierced,' or 'dead' . . . (means) that they have been rejected by those who are in evils and falsities.

T. 309. 'Thou shalt not commit murder,' in the natural sense, means not to kill a man, not to inflict on him any wound of which he may die, and also not to mutilate his body; and it means, moreover, not to bring any deadly evil upon his name and reputation, because with many reputation and life go hand in hand.

310<sup>2</sup>. Those who are destroyed by falsities, are meant by 'the slain.' Ill.

311. In the celestial sense, 'to commit murder' means to be rashly angry with the Lord, to hate Him, and to want to blot out His name. . . This is meant by 'the lamb standing as it had been slain.'

312. Devils and Satans bear continually in mind to kill the Lord; and, as they cannot do this, they are in the endeavour to kill those who are devoted to the Lord; and as they cannot do this like men in the world, they make every effort to destroy their souls; that is, to destroy faith and charity with them.

D. 1863. On those who in life deceitfully kill men.

2662. A tumult under the sole of the left foot (indicated) those who have been obsessed by the cupidity of fighting and killing men. . . In the other life they seem to themselves to kill and lacerate each other . . . They are miserably treated there . . .

3653. That the endeavour of the interior evil Spirits is to kill.

3710. Among the magical arts is this,—that they inspire others with anger . . . in order that they may kill themselves . . .

4803. (The Moravians) killed a man who had divulged their secrets. 4806. 4807. 4808.

E. 1863. 'To kill the souls that ought not to die (Ezek.xiii.19)=to deprive them of life from truths.

315<sup>2</sup>. The Lord is said to be spiritually 'killed' when the truth which is from Him is denied, and the good rejected . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'to be killed'=to be spiritually killed. Ill.

328. 'For Thou hast been slain, and hast redeemed us to God in Thy blood' (Rev.v.9)=the separation of all from the Divine, and conjunction with the Divine by the acknowledgment of Him and by the reception of Divine truth from Him. 'To be slain,' when said of the Lord,=the separation of all from the Divine; for 'to be slain,' in the Word,=to be spiritually slain; that is, to perish from evils and falsities; and as the Lord is not with them—for He is denied—therefore by 'slain,' when said of the Lord, is signified not acknowledged, and also denied; and, when the Lord is denied, He is as it were slain with them, and thereby they are separated from the Divine . . .

329<sup>28</sup>. 'The slain'=those who have perished by falsities and evils. —.

337. 'The lamb that was slain' (Rev.v.12)=the Lord's Divine Human not acknowledged, and by many denied.

355<sup>16</sup>. 'To kill'=to extinguish. 589<sup>9</sup>.

374<sup>6</sup>. Their damnation is signified by their being 'slain.'

418<sup>3</sup>. 'The slain'=those with whom there is not any spiritual life.

427<sup>2</sup>. 'To smite,' and 'to kill,' = to be damned . . .

513<sup>13</sup>. 'To kill' = to destroy.

584. 'The rest of the men who were not killed' (Rev. ix. 20) = all those who did not perish. 'To be killed' = to be spiritually killed, which is to perish in eternal death.

589. 'To kill,' spiritually, = to extinguish the spiritual life, which is done through the falsities of evil.

644<sup>8</sup>. 'To kill the prophets' = to destroy the Divine.

655<sup>9</sup>. (Thus) 'to kill' relates to the truth of doctrine of the Church . . . 'to crucify,' to the good of doctrine.

721<sup>19</sup>. 'Murderers' (Jer. iv. 31) = those who destroy the spiritual life of man by falsities and evils.

863<sup>9</sup>. 'Slay to destruction' (Ezek. ix. 6) = to completely destroy.

935<sup>2</sup>. 'Thou shalt not commit murder' contains also not to bear hatred to the neighbour, and not to love revenge; for hatreds and revenges breathe murder-necem.

1012<sup>3</sup>. The proximate sense of this precept, 'Thou shalt not commit murder,' which is the spiritual moral sense, is, Thou shalt not hate thy brother or neighbour, and thus not treat him with contumely and ignominy; for thus thou injurest and killest his reputation and honour, from which is his life among his brethren, which life is called civil; whence he will afterwards live in society as it were dead . . . This, when done from enmity, from hatred, or from revenge, is murder-homicidium . . . and he who does it is as guilty before the Angels as if he had killed his brother as to the life of the body; for enmity, hatred, and revenge breathe murder-necem—and will it . . . These three are an endeavour to murder; and all endeavour is as it were an act . . .

—4. But the more remote sense of . . . 'Thou shalt not commit murder,' which is called the celestial spiritual sense, is, Thou shalt not take away from a man the faith and love of God, and thereby his spiritual life. This is murder-homicidium—itself. (Continued under MURDER, here.)

1014<sup>3</sup>. The delight of doing evil from hatred, which breathes forth from Hell, is the delight of killing; but as they cannot kill the body, they want to kill the spirit . . . From these things it is evident that the precept, 'Thou shalt not commit murder' involves also, Thou shalt not bear hatred to thy neighbour; likewise, Thou shalt not bear hatred to the good of the Church and its truth; for if thou hatest good and truth, then thou hatest the neighbour, and to hate is to want to kill. Hence it is that the devil . . . is called 'a murderer-homicida—from the beginning.'

D. Wis. xi. 54<sup>4</sup>. Take the fifth precept, 'Thou shalt not commit murder.' The Spiritual in it is, Thou shalt not deny God, thus the Lord; for to deny Him is to kill and crucify Him in yourself: and also, Thou shalt not destroy the spiritual life which a man has; for thus thou killest his soul. The Moral is, Thou shalt not bear hatred to the neighbour, and wish for revenge against him . . . And the Civil is, Thou shalt not kill his body.

A. 337<sup>2</sup>. The Lord is called 'the King;' and the celestial man, 'the King's son.' (Ps.lxxii.1).

665<sup>e</sup>. All the kings of Israel and Judah, even the worst, represented the Royal of the Lord; and so did Pharaoh who exalted Joseph over the land of Egypt.

1259<sup>e</sup>. The Lord's Royal is predicated of peoples, because they relate to truths . . . In the Jewish Church they were a nation before they had kings; but after they had received kings they became a people.

1361<sup>2</sup>. Every king, whoever he was, in Judah and Israel, or even in Egypt and elsewhere, could represent the Lord. Their Royal itself is representative. So could the worst king of all, as Pharaoh . . . Nebuchadnezzar, Saul, and all the other kings of Judah and Israel . . . The anointing itself, from which they are called 'Jehovah's anointed,' involves this.

1409<sup>4</sup>. All the kings of Judah and Israel represented the Lord's Royal . . .

1416<sup>2</sup>. 'Kings of peoples' (Gen.xvii.16)=the derivative spiritual things of faith, which are of the Lord alone. —.

—<sup>4</sup>. The Lord's 'Kingdom,' from His Royal, is predicated of the spiritual things of love, and is called 'a holy people' (Ex.xix.6); and therefore 'kings from the loins'=spiritual things.

1482<sup>2</sup>. By the kings of the other kingdoms are signified the same as by the kingdoms themselves.

1652. Apparent goods and truths are signified by the kings here named (Gen.xiv.1); and the evils and falsities which are to be fought against are signified by the kings named in verse 2. 1654. 1662. 1672. 1682.

1672. 'Kings,' 'kingdoms,' and 'peoples,' in the historicals and propheticals of the Word, =truths, and the things which are of truths.

1723. 'The king's valley' (Gen.xiv.17)=the truths of the external man.

1728. There are two things which are predicated of the Lord, namely, that He is a King, and that He is a Priest. A king, or what is royal, =holy truth . . . This is the Divine Spiritual. The Lord as a King governs each and all things in the universe from Divine truth . . . These are the things which the kings and priests in the Jewish Church represented, and which Melchizedek represented, as king of Salem, and priest to God Most High.

2015. 'Kings shall go forth from thee' (Gen.xvii.6)=that all truth is from Him. (For) 'a king,' in the Word, =truth.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'To suck the breast of kings' (Is.lx.16)=to be instructed in truths.

—<sup>6</sup>. Those who are in truths are called in the Word 'king's sons.'

—<sup>10</sup>. Kings represented the Lord's Divine truth . . . All the laws of order by which the Lord governs the universe as a King, are truths . . .

—<sup>11</sup>. As kings represented truths, which ought not to command, because they condemn, therefore their appointment was so far displeasing that the people were blamed for it, and the quality of truth regarded in itself was described by the right of a king (1 Sam.viii.11-18); and it was before commanded by Moses (Deut.xvii.14-18) that they should choose the genuine truth which is from good, not spurious, and that they should not defile it with reasonings and scientifics. These things are what are involved in the prescription concerning a king in the passage last cited.

2069. 'Kings of peoples shall be from her' (Gen.xvii.16)=truths from conjoined truths and goods. 'Kings,' in general, =all truths.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The kings' which were to come from Abraham=the celestial truths which inflow from the Lord's Divine good; and 'the kings of peoples,' which were to come from Sarah, =the spiritual truths which inflow from the Lord's Divine truth.

2468<sup>3</sup>. 'The king of the south' (Dan.xi.40)=those who are in goods and truths. 'The king of the north'=those who are in evils and falsities.

2504. 'The king of Gerar' (Gen.xx.)=the truth itself of faith.

2567<sup>9</sup>. The 'right of kings' (1 Sam.viii.)=the right of truth, and also of falsity, when it begins to exercise dominion over truth and over good.

2607<sup>2</sup>. 'A king'=truth.

2826<sup>4</sup>. 'A king'=the truth of faith; for the Royal represented the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom.

2832<sup>2</sup>. 'Our king to the Holy One of Israel' (Ps. lxxxix.18)=Divine truth to the Lord.

285<sup>19</sup>. 'Her king and princes are among the nations' (Lam.ii.9)=truths immersed in evils.

2906<sup>5</sup>. 'A king'=the truth of the Church.

3007. See CHRIST, here.

3009<sup>3</sup>. The truth which 'a king' signified, was from good, thus the truth of good; and thus the Royal with them represented the Lord as to the Divine truth which is from Divine good; thus the Divine marriage of good in truth...

3105<sup>6</sup>. For the Royal was representative and significative of the Divine truth which is with the Lord.

3183<sup>9</sup>. 'Kings thy nurses' (Is.xlix.23)=intelligence.

3242<sup>1</sup>. 'The kings' whom they slew (Num.xxxi.8)=falsities.

3448<sup>3</sup>. 'The king of the north'=falsities... 'The king of the south'=truths. 3708<sup>8</sup>.

3670<sup>2</sup>. For all kings, whoever they are and whatever their quality, by the Royal itself with them represent the Lord... The Royal itself... is holy, whatever be the quality of him who ministers... (thus) no king can ever claim for himself anything of the Holy which is of his royalty... in proportion as he does so he is a spiritual thief... and also in proportion as he does evil—that is, acts contrary to what is just and fair and to what is good and true—a king puts off the representative of the holy royalty... and represents the opposite.

3703<sup>12</sup>. 'King's daughter' (Ps.xlv.13)=the love of truth.

3704<sup>5</sup>. As kings and priests represented the Lord, the kings by the royalty with them represented the Lord as to Divine truth...

3863<sup>9</sup>. 'A king'=the truth of faith. Refs.

3969<sup>15</sup>. The Divine Spiritual of the Lord is what is called His Royal; for the Lord's Royal is Divine truth... The Lord's Royal itself is what is represented by Joseph, in that he was made a king in the land of Egypt, 4669<sup>6</sup>.

4581<sup>2</sup>. In like manner as in the creation of a king, setting a crown on his head, anointing him on the forehead and wrists with oil out of a horn, putting into his hand a sceptre, a sword, and keys, clothing him with a crimson robe, setting him on a silver throne, and then on horseback in his royal pomp; and also afterwards having him waited upon at table by the great men of his court, besides many other things; unless these things represented holy things, and were themselves holy through correspondence with the things of Heaven and thence of the Church, they would be nothing else than plays like those of children... But all these rituals derived their origin from the Most Ancient times... At this day also they are accounted holy, not because it is known what they represent, or to what they correspond, but by interpretation as of emblems which are in use. But if it were known what a crown, oil, a horn, a sceptre, a sword, keys, riding on a white horse, being waited upon at table by the great ones of the court, represented, and to what holy thing they each correspond, people would think of them much more holily... 4966<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. In so far as the Lord is a Judge from Divine truth, He is there called 'King' (Matt.xxv.).

5321<sup>8</sup>. 'The kings who will enter through the gates of that City' (Jer.xvii.25) are not kings, but the truths of the Church. Refs.

5323<sup>2</sup>. Before kings, when, formerly, they were borne in a chariot, the knees were bent, for the reason that kings represented the Lord as to Divine truth, and 'a chariot' signified the Word. The rite of this adoration was commenced when it was known what was represented, and at that time the kings did not attribute the adoration to themselves, but to the Royal itself separated from them although adjoined. The Royal was to them the law, which, being from Divine truth, was to be adored in the king in so far as he was the guardian thereof. Thus the king himself attributed to himself nothing of the Royal except the guardianship of the law; and in proportion as he receded from this, he receded also from the Royal . . . That the Royal is Divine truth. Refs. Consequently the Royal is the law, which in itself is the truth of the kingdom . . .

6071<sup>2</sup>. The laws are from the king, but the evils of penalty are not from the king, but from those who do evils.

6148<sup>3</sup>. Divine truth was represented by kings. Hence it is that by . . . kings are signified truths.

— The priesthood and the royalty in the Ancient Church were conjoined in one person, because the good and truth which proceed from the Lord are united; and are also conjoined in Heaven with the Angels. The person in whom these two things were conjoined . . . was called 'Melchizedek,' or 'King of Justice.' Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. But as the Israelitish people were such that . . . only the representative of a Church could be instituted with them . . . it was permitted that they should be separated, and the Lord as to Divine truth was represented by the kings . . .

6482<sup>2</sup>. Some confirm . . . that the Universal may exist without the particulars, from the case of a king, who rules universally but not singularly; but they do not consider that the royalty is not only with the king himself, but also with his ministers . . .

6508<sup>2</sup>. 'According to the days of one king' (Is.xxiii.15) = the state of truth within the Church.

6651. 'There arose a new king over Egypt' (Ex.i.8) = separated scientifics which are against the truths of the Church. Pharaoh, who is here 'the king,' represents the Scientific in general. He is called 'a king,' because, in the genuine sense, 'a king' = truth; and, in the opposite sense, falsity; and when by 'the king' Pharaoh is meant, there is signified a false Scientific; that is, a Scientific which is against the truths of the Church. Hence, also, he is called 'a new king;' for he who was in the time of Joseph represented the Scientific which was in agreement with the truths of the Church.

6740<sup>2</sup>. 'Kings thy nurses' = the insinuation of truth, which is of intelligence.

7041. For everywhere in the Word a leader or a judge, and also a king, represents the nation and people of which he is the leader, judge, or king, because he is its head.

7220<sup>8</sup>. Because mere falsities [are meant], it is said 'Pharaoh king of Egypt' (Ex.vi.11); for by 'a king,' in the genuine sense, is signified truth; and, in the opposite sense, falsity. 8142.

7224<sup>8</sup>. For the king is the head of the people; and therefore by the king is signified the like as by the people.

8543. When I told (the Spirits of Jupiter) that in our Earth their Lord is called Christ Jesus, and that Christ means the Anointed or King . . . they said that they do not worship Him as a king, because what is royal savours of what is worldly.

8625. For 'a throne' is predicated of the Lord's royalty, and to the Lord's royalty corresponds His Spiritual Kingdom. There are two things which are predicated of the Lord, namely, the priesthood and the royalty . . . the Spiritual Kingdom corresponds to His royalty; for the Lord is called . . . 'a King' from Divine truth . . .

8717<sup>2</sup>. By the truth which proceeds from Himself the Lord rules all things . . . not like a king in the world, but as God in Heaven and the universe. A king in the world has only a universal care . . .

8770<sup>2</sup>. With the descendants of Jacob there was first a kingdom of judges, afterwards a kingdom of priests, and finally a kingdom of kings . . . and by the kingdom of kings was represented Divine truth without Divine good. But when to the royalty there was added also something of the priesthood, there was then represented by the kings Divine truth in which there was so much of good as there was of the priesthood adjoined to the royalty.

—<sup>3</sup>. These things were instituted in order that by them might be represented the states of Heaven, for there are two Kingdoms there . . . and the Spiritual Kingdom is what is called the Lord's royalty: in this reigns Divine truth . . . and as the representative of the Celestial Kingdom began to perish, when they asked for a king, therefore, in order that the representative of the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens might still be continued, the Jews were separated from the Israelites . . .

9642<sup>7</sup>. 'The king of the south' = the light of truth from the Word; and 'the king of the north' = reasoning from scientifics about truths.

9806<sup>2</sup>. They who discharged the ministry of Judgment were called judges, and afterwards kings . . . and as all Judgment is effected by means of truth . . . by 'judges,' in the Word, is signified . . . truth from good; but by 'kings,' the truth from which is good . . .

9809<sup>5</sup>. 'He hath smitten kings in the day of His anger' (Ps. cx.5) = the destruction of falsities then.

10793. Governors over those things which are of the world, or over civil things, are called magistrates, and their chief, where there are such governments by command-imperia, is called a king.

10799. So kings and magistrates are [appointed] to administer the things which are of civil law and Judgment. N.319, et seq.

10800. As the king alone cannot administer all things, there are governors under him . . . These governors, taken together, constitute the royalty, but the king himself is the chief.

10801. The royalty itself is not in the person, but is adjoined to the person. The king who believes that the royalty is in his own person . . . is not wise.

[A.] 10803. The king who regards the laws as above himself . . . places the royalty in the law, and the law dominates over him; for he knows that the law is justice, and all justice which is justice is Divine; but he who regards the laws as below himself . . . places the royalty in himself, and believes himself either to be the law, or the law which is justice to be from himself; hence he arrogates to himself that which is Divine . . .

10804. The law which is justice is to be enacted by wise persons in the kingdom who are skilled in the law and who fear God, and the king and his subjects are then to live according to it. The king who lives according to the law which is justice, and therein sets an example to his subjects, is truly a king.

10805. The king who has absolute Power, and who believes that his subjects are such slaves that he has a right to their lives and possessions, if he exercises it, is not a king, but a tyrant.

2359. No one can be admitted into the Lord's Kingdom, that is, into Heaven, unless he is in the good of love and of charity . . .

2385<sup>5</sup>. Then there was the Lord's Kingdom on earth as in the Heavens.

2405<sup>8</sup>. The rise of a new Church . . . is the Lord's Kingdom on earth; and this both in general and particular . . . Ex.

2425<sup>3</sup>. The Lord's Kingdom on earth, which is the Church, they acknowledge still more as their neighbour . . .

2618. The heavenly marriage is the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens and on earth; and therefore the Lord's Kingdom is so frequently called 'a marriage' in the Word. Ex. 2649.

2669<sup>2</sup>. The Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens and on earth is celestial and spiritual . . .

2737. They who live in conjugal love . . . have the Lord's Kingdom in them . . .

2803<sup>2</sup>. From Whom descends the heavenly marriage, which is the Lord's Kingdom itself in the Heavens.

2853<sup>2</sup>. The Lord's Kingdom on earth consists of all those who are in good, who, although scattered through the whole world, are still one, and as members constitute one body. Such is the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens . . .

2904<sup>2</sup>. All things in the Word . . . regard the Lord's Kingdom; for the Lord is everything in His Kingdom. The Divine things which are from the Lord in His Kingdom, make His Kingdom. Therefore, in proportion to the amount of good and truth which an Angel, Spirit, or man, receives from the Lord, and believes to be from the Lord, is he in His Kingdom. But in proportion as he does not receive it, nor believe that it is from the Lord, he is not in His Kingdom. Thus the Divine things which are from the Lord make His Kingdom, or Heaven; and this is what is meant by the Lord's being everything in His Kingdom.

2910<sup>2</sup>. In the beginning of a Church . . . everyone is affected . . . for the sake of the Lord's Kingdom . . .

2928<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord's Kingdom on earth is the Church.

—4. The New Jerusalem, that is, the spiritual Kingdom of the Lord.

2982. Which (new Church) is one in the Lord's Kingdom. Sig. and Ex.

3000. Hence it is that each and all things in the universe represent the Lord's Kingdom . . . 3483.

3081. 'Virgin,' in the Word, = the Lord's Kingdom, and also the Church; and thence everyone who is a Kingdom of the Lord, or who is a Church. Ex. and Ill.

3245<sup>3</sup>. For the Divine of the Lord makes His Kingdom.

3310. 'Land' . . . = the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens and on earth, thus the Church, which is the Lord's Kingdom on earth. In like manner 'ground,' but in a more restricted sense; and the same is signified also by 'field,' but in a still more restricted sense.

3379. In this light are those alone who are in the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens, that is, in Heaven; and who are in the Lord's Kingdom on earth, that is, in the Churches.

3384<sup>9</sup>. Not to be in a state of the good of love, thus not in the Lord's Kingdom. Sig.

3439. The Divine is in the internal sense, because there is the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens . . . The Divine is also in the literal sense . . . because there is the Lord's Kingdom on earth . . .

3451. The conjunction of the Lord's Kingdom on earth with the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens . . . by the Word. Tr.

3454<sup>2</sup>. For in these things is the Lord's Kingdom itself.

3483<sup>9</sup>. (Thus) the visible universe is nothing else than a theatre representative of the Lord's Kingdom; and this is a theatre representative of the Lord Himself. 3648<sup>9</sup>.

3645. The universal Kingdom of the Lord is a Kingdom of ends and uses . . .

3796<sup>4</sup>. When the good of the neighbour, the common good, the good of the Church, and of the Lord's Kingdom, is the end, then as to his soul the man is in the Lord's Kingdom, thus with the Lord; for the Lord's Kingdom is nothing but a Kingdom of ends and uses for the sake of the good of the human race.

3858. For truth and good, or faith and love, make the Lord's Kingdom . . . and as the Jewish Church was instituted to represent the Lord's Kingdom, the partitions of that people into twelve tribes signified these things.

3863<sup>13</sup>. 'To see the Kingdom of God' (Luke ix. 27) = to believe.

3880. For the Lord is Divine love itself, and the influx of this makes His Kingdom, and this by the Word which is from Him.

3913<sup>4</sup>. To put on ends for the neighbour and for the Lord's Kingdom . . .

3934<sup>8</sup>. The Lord's Kingdom with man begins from the life which is of works; for he is then at the beginning of regeneration. But when the Lord's Kingdom is with man, it is terminated in works, and he is then regenerate.

3935<sup>9</sup>. Before man can enter into the Lord's Kingdom, that is, by regeneration become a Church.

3960<sup>2</sup>. The heavenly marriage is what is called the Lord's Kingdom, and also Heaven; and this because it comes forth from the Divine marriage, which is the Lord.

3994<sup>7</sup>. As innocence is the primary thing in the Lord's Kingdom . . .

4137<sup>14</sup>. As . . . the Lord's Kingdom is the marriage of good and truth . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. Hence it is evident how the heavenly marriage, that is, the Lord's Kingdom, is in each thing of the Word.

4221<sup>9</sup>. (The lot of those who have no love towards the Lord's Kingdom.)

[A.] 4255<sup>2</sup>. When a man is becoming a Church, or a Kingdom of the Lord . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. 'The new earth,' or 'Holy Land' = the Lord's Kingdom, and also the New Church, which is the Lord's Kingdom on earth. Refs.

4263<sup>o</sup>. (For) all who are in good are in the Lord's Kingdom.

4279<sup>2</sup>. Its internal sense, in which it treats of the Lord's Kingdom, is for the Second Heaven.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is that the Lord's Kingdom is within man. Ex.

4286<sup>4</sup>. 'Israel' . . . = the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom in Heaven and earth . . . 'Jacob' . . . = the Lord's Kingdom such as it is in the First Heaven . . .

4394. When man is in interior truths in faith and life, he is in the Lord's Kingdom.

4434<sup>7</sup>. Hence the Lord likened the Kingdom of the Heavens, that is, His Kingdom in Heaven, and His Kingdom on earth, which is the Church, to 'a man a king, who made a wedding for his son . . .'

4576. For good is the essential itself of the Lord's Kingdom and Church.

4638. 'The Kingdom of the Heavens shall be likened to ten virgins' (Matt. xxv. 1) = the last time of the Old Church and the first of the New; the Church is the Lord's Kingdom on earth.

4735<sup>5</sup>. The calling of all to the Lord's Kingdom. Tr.

4918. The heavenly marriage is Heaven itself, or the Lord's Kingdom; and the Lord's Kingdom on earth is the Church.

5044<sup>e</sup>. 'The new earth' = the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens and on earth.

5097<sup>e</sup>. As there is what is representative of the Lord's Kingdom in each thing of nature . . . 5116<sup>2</sup>.

5212<sup>4</sup>. 'The Kingdom of God' which is compared to grass, an ear, and corn' (Mark iv. 26–28) is Heaven with man by regeneration; for he who is regenerate has in him the Kingdom of God, and becomes the Kingdom of God, or Heaven, in an image . . .

5236<sup>3</sup>. 'To receive the Kingdom of God as a child' (Luke xviii. 17) = charity and faith from innocence.

5433<sup>2</sup>. When he is in the affection of truth for the sake of truth, that is, for the sake of the Lord's Kingdom . . . he is among the Angels.

5826<sup>2</sup>. When man is in this good and truth, the Lord's Kingdom is in him, consequently he is a Church . . .

5886<sup>4</sup>. 'The Kingdom of the Heavens' = good and truth with man, thus Heaven with Him.

6023<sup>2</sup>. The Lord's Kingdom is still more the neighbour (than the Church). 6819<sup>o</sup>.

6233. The Lord's Kingdom for those who are in this good and truth. Sig.

6276<sup>e</sup>. For the good and truth themselves which are in the Lord's Kingdom, proceed from His Divine and Divine Human, and cause the Lord Himself . . . to be His Kingdom.

6389. They are among those in the Lord's Kingdom who are in the lowest place.

6392. That in this happiness are they who are in the Lord's Kingdom. Sig.

6396. They who are such (as are meant by 'Dan') are in the Lord's Kingdom . . . but are among those in the Lord's Kingdom who are in the First Heaven.

—<sup>e</sup>. In this prophetic utterance of Israel, by his twelve sons there are described in general as to their quality all who are in the Lord's Kingdom.

—<sup>2</sup>. Thus the ultimates of the Land of Canaan represented the ultimates in the Lord's Kingdom.

—<sup>e</sup>. But if truth is completely separated from good, it is then not in any boundary of the Lord's Kingdom, but is outside of it.

6405<sup>3</sup>. They who are such (as are signified by 'Gad') are also in the Lord's Kingdom, but at the threshold.

6443. Their possession in the Lord's Kingdom while they are still in what is obscure. Sig.

6574<sup>e</sup>. Hence the Lord's Kingdom is called a Kingdom of ends and uses.

6589<sup>2</sup>. For by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob . . . in the representative sense, is meant the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens, and His Kingdom on earth, which is the Church.

6821<sup>2</sup>. He who loves his country, and from goodwill does good to it, in the other life loves the Lord's Kingdom; for there the Lord's Kingdom is his country: and he who loves the Lord's Kingdom, loves the Lord, because the Lord is the all in all of His Kingdom; for that which is properly called the Lord's Kingdom is good and truth which are with those who are there, from the Lord.

6823. The Lord's Kingdom is the neighbour in a higher degree than the Church where anyone is born; for the Lord's Kingdom consists of all who are in good, both on earth and in the Heavens. Thus the Lord's Kingdom is Good with all its quality in the complex. When this good is loved, the individuals are loved who are in the good. Thus the whole, which is all good in the complex, is the neighbour in the first degree, and is that Grand Man . . . This Man, that is, the Lord's Kingdom, is loved, when from inmost affection good is done to those who are man through that Man from the Lord, thus those with whom is the Lord's Kingdom.

7236. That the sons of Israel were to be distinguished . . . into classes according to the qualities of good . . . in order that they might represent the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens . . .

7337. Hence it is that all Divine miracles represent the states of the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens, and of the Lord's Kingdom on earth, or the Church.

7396<sup>e</sup>. This communion, or this Church, is the Lord's Kingdom on earth conjoined with the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens . . .

8054<sup>e</sup>. For by the Land of Canaan is signified the Lord's Kingdom, thus Heaven and the Church.

8443. The internal sense treats of the Lord's Kingdom. 8694<sup>2</sup>. 8943.

8772. He who knows the formation of good from truths . . . knows the arcana of the formation of man anew, that is, of the formation of Heaven or of the Lord's Kingdom with him . . .

8897. 'Honour thy . . . mother' = love for . . . the Lord's Kingdom.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Mother,' in the supreme sense, = the Lord as to Divine truth, thus His Kingdom; for the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord makes Heaven. Ex.

8900. 'Mother' = the Lord's Kingdom, or Heaven . . . (for) the Lord's Kingdom is the same as the Church, with the sole difference, that the Lord's Kingdom on earth is called the Church . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Moreover, the Lord's Kingdom is the country of all who are therein; and our country is mother in the natural sense . . .

8988<sup>3</sup>. He is then a Heaven or Kingdom of the Lord, in particular.

9587<sup>e</sup>. 'The Kingdom of God' (Mark iv. 26) = Heaven with man, thus the good of love and the truth of faith.

10357<sup>e</sup>. Whether you say the Church with a man, or Heaven with him, or the Kingdom of God with him, or the Lord with him, it is the same; for the Church is the Lord's Heaven on earth; and the Kingdom of God is Heaven and the Church together . . .

H. 64<sup>3</sup>. They who in the world love the good of their country more than their own, and the good of their neighbour as their own, are they who in the other life love and seek the Lord's Kingdom; for there the Lord's Kingdom is in place of our country. T. 414<sup>e</sup>.

112. The Lord's Kingdom is a Kingdom of ends which are uses; or, what is the same, it is a Kingdom of uses which are ends . . . 387<sup>e</sup>.

J. 9<sup>e</sup>. The same is meant by . . . 'the Kingdom of God is within you.' 'The Kingdom of God' = the Divine good and truth in which are the Angels.

L. 42. That Heaven and the Church are called 'the Kingdom of the Lord.' Ill.

S. 17<sup>2</sup>. 'The Kingdom of God' = Heaven and the Church.

78<sup>e</sup>. 'The Kingdom of God is within you.' By 'the Kingdom of God' is here meant the Lord, and the Church which is from Him.

P. 26. For the Lord's Kingdom, which is not only over Heaven, but also over Hell, is a Kingdom of uses.

R. 284. That they will be in the Lord's Kingdom . . . Sig.

285. The Church everywhere is the Lord's Kingdom.

478. That then the Lord's Kingdom will come. Sig. and Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. That it is the Lord's Kingdom which will be evangelized in the days of the voice of the seventh Angel. Ill.

—<sup>5</sup>. That 'to evangelize' = the Advent of the Lord, and His Kingdom then. Ill.

553. 'The Kingdom of our God, and the Power of His Christ' (Rev. xi. 10) = because the Lord alone reigns in Heaven and in the Church. . . This is meant by 'the Gospel of the Kingdom,' and by 'the Kingdom of God.' Ill.

664. Hence Heaven and the Church are called the Lord's 'Kingdom.' Ill.

956. That he who knows anything of the Advent of the Lord, and of the New Heaven and the New Church, and thus of the Lord's Kingdom, should pray that it may come. Sig.

— Like things are also signified by . . . 'Thy Kingdom come.' The Lord's 'Kingdom' is the Church which makes one with Heaven . . .

958<sup>e</sup>. That they will not have their lot with those who are in the Lord's Kingdom. Sig. For all things written in this Book regard the New Heaven and the New Church, which make the Lord's Kingdom . . .

M. 7<sup>3</sup>. The Kingdom of Christ, which is Heaven, is a Kingdom of uses.

T. 199<sup>2</sup>. 'The Kingdom of the Heavens' = Heaven and the Church.

415. That the Church is the neighbour which is to be loved in a higher degree, and the Lord's Kingdom in the highest. Gen.art.

416. Because by the Lord's Kingdom is meant the Church in the whole world which is called the Communion of Saints, and there is also meant Heaven; and therefore He who loves the Lord's Kingdom, loves all in the universal world who acknowledge the Lord, and have faith in Him, and charity towards the neighbour . . . They who love the Lord's Kingdom love the Lord above all things; consequently, above others they are in love to God; for the Church in the Heavens and on earth is the Lord's Body . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore, love towards the Lord's Kingdom is love towards the neighbour in its fulness; for they who love the Lord's Kingdom not only love the Lord above all things, but also love the neighbour as themselves . . .

— Therefore the Lord says, 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of the Heavens and its justice, then all things shall be added to you' (Matt. vi. 33). That 'the Kingdom of the Heavens' is the Lord's Kingdom. Ill.

572. That unless a man is generated anew . . . he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. Gen.art.

— By 'the Kingdom of God' is meant Heaven and the Church; for the Kingdom of God on earth is the Church. Ill.

Ad. 520-522. A description of the Kingdom of God.

D. 2567. The Lord's Kingdom is now turned from those called Christians to others.

3872. On the Lord's Kingdom.

5814<sup>e</sup>. They can serve as ultimates in the Lord's Kingdom.

E. 43<sup>2</sup>. 'The Kingdom of God' = the Church as to truths, thus also the truths of the Church.

176<sup>2</sup>. 'Kingdom' = the Church, and therefore it is called 'the Kingdom of God.'

252<sup>8</sup>. 'The Kingdom of the Heavens,' to which the ten virgins are likened, = Heaven and the Church. (= the Church. 548<sup>3</sup>.)

426<sup>3</sup>. 'The Kingdom of the Heavens' (Matt.xiii.)=the Spiritual World and the Church.

456. Those in the Lord's Kingdom. Sig.

— The Lord's Kingdom is Heaven and the Church, where the Lord is worshipped, and where the Divine in His Human is acknowledged . . .

612<sup>7</sup>. 'The Kingdom of God,' in these passages, = a New Heaven and a New Church from the Lord.

683<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord's Kingdom is the reception of Divine good and Divine truth . . . These are the things by which the Lord reigns; consequently they are properly the Lord's Kingdom with those who receive them . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The Lord . . . rules also those who do not receive, as all in Hell; but still it cannot be said that the Lord's Kingdom is there . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. That that is the Lord's Kingdom which proceeds from Him and is received, is evident from the places in the Word where 'the Kingdom of God' is mentioned. III.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of the Heavens . . . ' By 'the Kingdom of the Heavens,' in the spiritual sense, is meant the Divine truth . . . and, in the supreme sense, by 'the Kingdom of the Heavens' is meant the Lord, because He is the all of His Kingdom.

—<sup>6</sup>. As Heaven is Heaven from the reception of Divine truth from the Lord, in like manner the Church, therefore, in the common sense, Heaven and the Church are meant by 'the Kingdom of God,' and 'the Kingdom of the Heavens' . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. That 'the Kingdom of God' = the Church as to truths from good, and also Heaven; and that the Kingdom of God with man = to be in truths from good from the Lord, thus in wisdom, and thence in the power to resist evils and falsities. Ref.

911<sup>3</sup>. 'The Kingdom of the Heavens' (Matt.xiii.)=the Lord's Church in the Heavens and on earth; for the Church is everywhere. 1044<sup>3</sup>.

1073. Therefore the Third Heaven is called the Lord's 'Dominion,' and the Second Heaven, the Lord's 'Kingdom' . . .

1193<sup>4</sup>. 'The Kingdom of the Heavens' (Matt.vi.33)=the Lord and His Church.

1217<sup>2</sup>. This is meant by 'Thy Kingdom come on earth as in the Heavens.' The Lord's Kingdom was also before the Last Judgment, for the Lord always rules Heaven and earth, but the state of the Lord's Kingdom became different after the Last Judgment . . .

Inv. 58. The Lord is 'the Kingdom of God;' thus is Heaven and the Church.

Kir. Kir. A.9340<sup>6</sup>.

Kiriathaim. Kiriathaim.

A. 2468<sup>7</sup>. The falsities with which they are imbued are signified by, 'Nebo, Kiriathaim,' etc. (Jer.xlviii.1).

Kirjath-arba. Kiriath-Arba.

A. 2909. 'In Kirjath-arba, this is Hebron in the Land of Canaan' (Gen.xxiii.2)=in the Church; (for) 'Kirjath-arba'=the Church as to truth.

—<sup>2</sup>. As to Kirjath-arba which is Hebron, it was the region where dwelt Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. III. From the representation of these three . . . it is evident that Kirjath-arba which is Hebron represented the Church before Jerusalem did so.

—<sup>3</sup>. That in course of time every Church decreases, until nothing of faith and charity remains, and that it is then destroyed, was represented by Kirjath-arba which is Hebron, in that it was possessed by the Anakim. III.

2981. It is there called 'Kirjath-arba this is Hebron,' because by 'Kirjath-arba' is signified the Church as to truth, and by 'Hebron,' the Church as to good. Here, however, it is no longer called Kirjath-arba, but 'Hebron,' because it treats of one who is regenerate, who no longer acts from truth but from good.

4613. 'Mamre Kirjath-arba' (Gen.xxxv.27)=the state of the Natural as to truth. . . 'Kirjath-arba'=the Church as to truth, thus truth.

Kiss. Osculari.

Kissing. Osculatio.

A. 3573. 'Kiss me my son' (Gen.xxvii.26)=whether he could be united. 'To kiss'=union and conjunction from affection. Kissing, which is an external thing, is nothing else than the affection of conjunction, which is an internal one: they also correspond.

3574. 'He approached and kissed him' (ver.27)=presence and union. . . 'To kiss'=union or conjunction from affection. III.

— 'To kiss the Son' (Ps.ii.12)=to be conjoined with the Lord by the faith of love.

— 'Let justice and peace kiss' (Ps.lxxxv.10)=let them conjoin themselves.

—<sup>2</sup>. They are said to 'kiss the calves' (Hos.xiii.2), that is, embrace magic, and adjoin themselves to it.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Every mouth which hath not kissed Baal' (1 Kings xix.18). 'To kiss'=to conjoin themselves from affection, thus to worship.

3800. 'Jacob kissed Rachel' (Gen.xxix.11)=love towards interior truths. 'To kiss'=union and conjunction from affection; consequently love . . .

3808. 'And kissed him' (ver.13)=initiation. 'To kiss'=conjunction from affection; here, initiation to this conjunction; for initiation is what precedes conjunction.

4139. 'And hast not permitted me to kiss my sons and my daughters' (Gen.xxxi.28)=disjunction . . . as to truths and goods.

—<sup>2</sup>. Conjunction from affection produces kissing (by the correspondence) . . .

4353. 'He kissed him' (Gen.xxxiii.4)=interior conjunction from love. 'To kiss'=conjunction from love; here, interior conjunction.

5312. 'Upon thy mouth all my people shall kiss' (Gen.xli.40)=that everything there shall be under obedience to him. 'To kiss upon his mouth'=to acknowledge and do what he commands, thus to obey.

5929. 'He kissed all his brethren' (Gen.xlv.15)=adjunction from grace. 'To kiss'=conjunction from affection; here, adjunction from grace. Ex.

6260. 'He kissed them' (Gen.xlviii.10)=conjunction from the affection of truth . . . because there follows 'he embraced them,' by which is signified conjunction from the affection of good; for embracing is a more interior and thence closer affection than kissing, as is the affection of good than the affection of truth.

6501. 'He kissed him' (Gen.l.1)=the first conjunction. 'To kiss'=conjunction from affection; here, the first conjunction, because in what follows it treats of a closer conjunction.

7057. 'And kissed him' (Ex.iv.27)=the affection of conjunction. 'To kiss'=conjunction from affection. 8664.

Knee. Genu.

See GENUFLECTION.

A. 3054. 'He made the camels fall down on their knees' (Gen.xxiv.11)=a holy disposing of the general scientifics. . . 'To make fall down on the knees'=to dispose one's self to what is holy.

3915. 'Let her bear upon my knees' (Gen.xxx.3)=acknowledgment by the affection of interior truth, from which is conjunction. . . 'The knees,' or 'thighs'=the things which are of conjugal love, thus which are of the conjunction of the truth of faith and the good of love . . . —.

5323. 'Abrech,' in the Original Language, is 'Bend the knee;' and the bending of the knees is adoration . . . Holy fear, and the consequent humiliation, and consequently adoration, have an act which corresponds to them, namely, the bending of the knees, falling down upon the knees . . . In this state, if the adoration is from genuine humiliation . . . there is a failing of the spirits, and a consequent giving way of the joints in the boundary or intermediate where the Spiritual is conjoined with the Natural, thus where the knees are . . . Hence it is that the bending of the knees is a sign representative of adoration . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Formerly, when kings were carried in a chariot, the knees were bent. Ex.

5328<sup>2</sup>. Therefore . . . by the knees, which are intermediate, is signified the influx, and the communication of spiritual things with natural things.

[A.] 6585. 'Were born upon Joseph's knees' (Gen.1.23)=from good conjoined with truth from the Internal. 'To bear upon the knees'=the conjunction of good and truth.

6602°. A Society in the plane of the knees.

7478°. They remained upon their knees until the Lord should raise them . . .

8947. The Spirits of Saturn, and also that Earth itself, appear . . . in the plane of the lower part of the knees.

10379°. (The Spirits of the Third Earth act) into the left knee . . . D.1686.

—°. The feet correspond to natural things; the thighs to heavenly ones; thus the knee to their conjunction.

H. 65°. The Second Heaven forms the breast down to the loins and knees.

D. 1081. His keeping (a semi-devil) upon his knees=that he was cherishing a like filthy love . . .

1189°. Hence they then occupied the left knee, because the loves and pleasures of such are signified by the left thigh and the left knee.

3496°. A colder afflatus is now felt chiefly in the region of the left knee.

4638. The Hell of those who insidiate against conjugal love is under the hinder part of the knees . . .

5509°. He said that he would carry them upon his knees, which are between the Natural and the Spiritual.

E. 365°. That thence is . . . celestial love, by which is effected conjunction with the Lord, is signified by, 'Ye shall be delighted upon the knees' (Is.lxvi.12). 'The knees'=celestial love.

—°. That 'the knees'=conjugal love, and thence celestial love. Refs.

455°. 'Unto Me every knee shall bow' (Is.xlv.23)=that all will adore Him who are in natural good from spiritual; 'the knee'=the conjunction of natural good with spiritual; whence it is evident that bendings of the knees=acknowledgment, thanksgiving, and adoration from spiritual good and delight in natural.

629°. 'The waters to the knees' (Ezek.xlvii.4)=intelligence such as is possessed by the spiritual natural man; for 'the knees'=the Spiritual Natural.

677°. 'All knees shall go away into waters' (Ezek.vii.17)=grief because the good of love is destroyed . . . 'The knees'=the love of good.

De Conj. 74°. From the presence (of solidifians) there came a pain into the left knee.

Knife. Culter.

A. 2046°. This is why stone knives, or swords of rock, as they are called, were employed for circumcision.

2799. 'He took in his hand the fire and the knife' (Gen.xxii.6)=the good of love and the truth of faith. . . That the knife which was employed in sacrifices . . . signified the truth of faith, may be evident from the signification of 'a sword,' or 'little sword,' in the Word; for instead of 'knife,' 'little sword' is used. Both have the same signification, but with this difference, that the knife which was employed for the victims signified the truth of faith, but 'a sword'=truth combating; and as 'a knife' is rarely mentioned in the Word, for a secret reason . . . we may show what 'a sword' signifies.

—°. The reason 'a knife' is scarcely ever mentioned in the Word, is that in the other life there are evil Spirits, who are called Knifers-cultrarii (See CUT-THROAT), at whose sides knives appear to hang, on account of their having a nature so savage, that they want to cut the throat of everyone with a knife. Hence it is that knives are not mentioned, but 'little swords,' and 'swords;' for these, being used in combats, excite the idea of war, thus of truth combating.

—°. As it was known to the Ancients that a sword, a small lance, and a knife=truth, the Gentiles . . . used to pierce and cut themselves (therewith), in connection with their sacrifices . . .

2817. 'He took the knife' (ver.10)=temptation as to truth. 'A knife'=the truth of faith.

8950. Little knives then appear in their hands, with which they seem to want to smite their breasts . . .

9088°. The stone knife with which circumcision was performed,=the truth of faith.

R. 835°. Sometimes knives appear in their hands, with which they threaten.

D. 1336. (One who had committed suicide) had a knife in his hand, and wanted to plunge it into his breast; and when he had laboured much with the knife, he wanted to cast it away, but in vain.

2627. Bread cut with a knife is what counterfeits what is celestial . . .

2922. They took counsel to kill me . . . by means of such as had knives.

2974°. I observed in sleep a knife in my hand . . .

3653. I was in the street and saw knives, and it was induced by phantasy that with the knives they would cut my throat . . .

3924. The lascivious wife . . . had a knife in her hand . . .

4049. Under the buttocks there is a direful Hell where they try to strike each other with knives . . . but the knives are constantly taken away when they are in the act of striking. They are those who have so hated their companions, that they wanted to destroy them completely.

4101. They want to cut the throat of every innocent person with knives.

4314. He was manifested by a knife which he put into the hand of another . . .

4530°. Before speaking with Spirits was opened to me, it happened that I wanted to kill myself with a knife, which cupidity grew so strong that I hid the knife in my desk . . . It is now disclosed that it was that woman (Sara Hesselia), who was excited whenever she saw the knife . . .

4648. They appear with knives . . .

4653°. When James is thought about . . . it appears as if a knife flew out thence, to kill those who are of that opinion. J.(Post.)198.

4745. It was shown by means of a knife which he (Charles XII.) devoured in her presence twice or thrice, that he held her in deadly hatred, and then by his plunging the knife into her back . . .

5008. He had also a knife for pens, which had also been made magically.

5038. There appeared a certain one above with a knife and scissors (knif och sax). The knife represents and signifies the good of civil life; and the scissors, the truth of civil life . . . It was observed that the knife and scissors had such efficacy that it could penetrate to the inmost things of man; which was a sign that they can completely adulterate goods and also truths . . .

E. 734<sup>3</sup>. 'They shall beat their swords into pruning hooks' (Is.ii.4) . . . 'Pruning hooks' = the truths of doctrine, from the fact that the trees in gardens=perceptions and Knowledges of truth.

A. 5. Stupendous things in the other life which never came to the Knowledge of any man . . .

8. Remains, here, are especially the Knowledges of faith which the man has learned from infancy; which are stored up, and do not appear until the man comes into this (second) state (of regeneration) . . .

12. (In the sixth state) his spiritual life is delighted and sustained with those things which are of the Knowledges of faith . . .

19. Remains . . . are the Knowledges of truth and good, which never come into the light until external things have been devastated. These Knowledges are here called 'the faces of the waters.'

22. 'Morning'=every subsequent state, being one of . . . Truth and of the Knowledges of faith.

24. After the Spirit of God . . . has brought forth into day the Knowledges of truth and good . . . He then distinguishes . . . between the Knowledges which are with the internal man, and the scientifics which are of the external man . . . The Knowledges which are with the internal man are called 'the waters above the expanse;' and the scientifics of the external man are called 'the waters under the expanse.'

27. When he knows that there is an internal and an external man . . . then the Knowledges of truth and good, which are with him, are stored up in his memory, and are referred among scientifics; for whatever is insinuated into the memory of the external man . . . remains there as a scientific, and is produced thence by the Lord. These Knowledges are 'the waters gathered together to one place,' and are called 'seas.'

28. 'That 'waters'=Knowledges and scientifics. III.

34. The celestial Angels . . . from love, are in all the Knowledges of faith . . .

36. Faith is not only the Knowledge and acknowledgment of all things which are embraced in the doctrine of faith . . .

42<sup>o</sup>. That he has swallowed up the Knowledges of faith . . . as the whale did Jonah; where 'a whale'=those who possess the generals of the Knowledges of faith as scientifics, and act thus.

44. Man . . . can produce nothing of good, unless the Knowledges of faith are first sown in him . . .

61. All things are called spiritual which are of the Knowledges of faith . . .

78. The 'second river' is the Knowledge of all things which are of good and truth . . . which is of the internal man. 116.

117. 'The Ethiopians'=Knowledges.

125<sup>o</sup>. In place of the perception of the Most Ancient Church there afterwards succeeded the Knowledge of good and truth from things before revealed . . .

188. It is then insinuated that (the novitiate Spirit) should be instructed in the Knowledges of good and truth. 189. 2762<sup>2</sup>.

199. 'The fruit of the tree of which they might not eat'= . . . the Knowledges of faith.

213. 'They Knew that they were naked' (Gen.iii.7)=that they Knew and acknowledged that they were not, as before, in innocence, but in evil.

229<sup>o</sup>. They desired to Know whether it was true . . .

338. 'The man Knew Eve his wife' (Gen.iv.1).

—<sup>c</sup>. That with those called 'Cain,' faith is Known and acknowledged as a thing by itself. Sig.

371<sup>2</sup>. Conscience is formed from things revealed and Knowledges from the Word . . .

393. It was therefore provided . . . that by the Knowledges of faith men might receive charity . . . so that Knowledge or hearing would precede, and through Knowledge or hearing charity might be given . . .

400. 'Cain Knew his wife' (ver.17). Ex.

419. The Knowledges of faith involve both (celestial and spiritual things).

[A.] 459°. The spiritual are they who, through the Knowledges of faith, have received charity from the Lord.

620°. Faith is the containant of the Knowledges of faith, which are being inseminated.

654. Faith is never the Knowledge of the things which are of faith, or the Knowledge of the things to be believed; this is only Knowledge: but it is acknowledgment . . .

854. The first light of the regenerate never comes forth from the Knowledges of the Truths of faith, but from charity . . .

867°. Is only in the Knowledge of the most general things . . .

1114. All whom they have Known in the world . . . they can meet.

1132. They who cultivated Knowledges, scientifics, and rituals, and separated them from internal things, are 'the sons of Ham.'

— They who cultivated the Knowledges of spiritual things, are 'the sons of Cush.'

— They who cultivated the Knowledges of celestial things, are 'the sons of Raamah.'

1134. On those who, out of the Knowledges of faith, make mere knowledge.

1136. Are of wisdom, intelligence, knowledge, and Knowledges . . .

1162°. 'The sons of Ham'=all who have the knowledge of the Knowledges of faith, and not charity . . .

1163. Nations by which are signified Knowledges, knowledge, and rituals, which are of faith separated from charity. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Phut,' or Lybia=Knowledges from the literal sense of the Word by which they confirm false principles. 1166.

—<sup>e</sup>. By the same nations are also signified simply Knowledges and knowledge . . .

1164°. 'Cush'=the Knowledges of the interior things of the Word, which are the boundaries to which knowledge reach.

1171°. For without Knowledges no one can become a man of the Church.

1197. 'Philisthim'= . . . the knowledge of the Knowledges of faith and charity.

— They could not but make the Knowledges of faith a thing of the memory; for the Knowledges of spiritual and celestial things . . . become no other than things of the memory, when the man who is skilled in them is devoid of charity. . . Knowledges and Knowledges are nothing with a man in the other life . . . unless they have imbued life.

1198. That the Knowledges with these are scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Thus the knowledge of the Knowledges of faith is distinct from the knowledge of natural things, so that they scarcely communicate . . .

1203. 'Heth'=the exterior Knowledges of celestial things. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. The Knowledges of spiritual things are those which regard faith, thus doctrine; but the Knowledges of celestial things are those which regard love, thus life.

1210°. (Thus) Knowledges extend themselves to faith even to charity, which is their last boundary.

1212. The other (origin of Falsities) is Knowledges and scientifics, by reasonings.

1226. Hence come true intelligence, true knowledge, and true Knowledge, all which are sons of charity . . .

1231. 'Lud'=the Knowledges of truth; (for) the Knowledges of truth are . . . from the Lord through charity, and thus through faith, by means of reason and knowledge. Ill.

1232. Hence by 'Aram,' or Syria, are signified the Knowledges of good. Ill.

1234. 'The sons of Aram'=the Knowledges derived from (the Knowledges of good), and the things which belong to Knowledges. These derived Knowledges are natural Truths; and the things which belong to Knowledges are deeds according to them. . . (Thus) 'Uz, Hul, Gether, and Mash'=so many kinds of these Knowledges, and of deeds according to them.

1409°. When that Knowledge (of significatives) began to perish . . .

1450. These celestial things are insinuated . . . without Knowledges . . .

1451. 'Bethel'=the Knowledge of celestial things.

— Celestial things are insinuated into man both without Knowledges, and with Knowledges. Ex.

1453. That as yet the Lord's state was obscure, as to the Knowledges of celestial and spiritual things. Sig. and Ex.

— It is one thing to be in celestial things, and another to be in the Knowledges of celestial things. Ex.

— 'Ai'=the Knowledges of worldly things.

—<sup>2</sup>. When a man is being regenerated, he is introduced by means of the Knowledges of spiritual and celestial things; but when he is regenerate, he has been introduced, and is in the celestial and spiritual things of Knowledges.

1457. Here begin the progressions of the Lord into Knowledges.

1458. 'The south'=intelligence, which is procured by means of Knowledges. Knowledges are celestial and spiritual Truths, which are so many radiations of light in Heaven . . . As the Lord was now to be imbued with Knowledges, in order that as to His Human Essence also He might become the Light itself of Heaven, it is here said that 'he journeyed . . . towards the south.'

—<sup>e</sup>. Knowledges are the things which open the way to behold celestial and spiritual things. By Knowledges the way is opened for the internal man to the external, in which are the recipient vessels, which are as many as are the Knowledges of good and truth. Into these, as into their vessels, celestial things inflow.

1460. 'A famine in the Land'=a scarcity of Knowledges as yet with the Lord when He was a child.

—1. The Knowledges with a man never come in childhood from the interior, but from the objects of the senses, especially from hearing. For with the external man there are recipient vessels, which are called things of the memory, and these are formed by means of Knowledges . . . with the influx and aid of the internal man; consequently Knowledges are learned and implanted in the memory according to the influx of the internal man. So, also, was it with the Lord when He was a child . . . But with Him the interiors were celestial things, which adapted the vessels for the reception of Knowledges, and that the Knowledges might afterwards become vessels to receive the Divine.

—2. That 'a famine,' or 'hunger,' = a scarcity of Knowledges. Fully ill.

—3. For the life of good Spirits and Angels is supported by no other food than the Knowledges of good and truth, and by the goods and truths themselves.

1461. 'Abram descended into Egypt to sojourn' = instruction in Knowledges from the Word.

—'. 'Egypt' = the knowledge of Knowledges. 1462, Ex.

—'. The external man cannot be reduced to correspondence and agreement with the internal man otherwise than by Knowledges. . . Knowledges must be implanted in it as in ground; for in these celestial things can have their recipient vessels. But the Knowledges must be from the Word. Knowledges from the Word are such that they are open from the Lord Himself . . . Hence it may be evident that the Lord in His childhood did not will to imbue any other Knowledges than those of the Word, which was open to Him from Jehovah Himself . . .

1463. Changes of the state of the thoughts are Knowledges; which, in the World of Spirits, are presented to view by means of instructions . . .

1469<sup>2</sup>. The scientifics and Knowledges which [a man] has learned, are not truths or Truths, but are only recipient vessels . . . These vessels were to be formed by the Lord by means of instruction in Knowledges from the Word; or, rather, they were to be opened thereby . . .

1472. The knowledge of Knowledges, the quality of which is described, when they see celestial Knowledges. Sig. and Ex. (See Know-scire, here.)

1474. That they would not care for celestial things, but only for mere Knowledges. Sig.

1475<sup>e</sup>. (The Lord's external man was made Divine) by means of Knowledges. Tr. Without Knowledges, as media, the external man cannot even become man.

1504. The quality of another is Known there . . .

1536. When the external man in childhood . . . was first imbued with scientifics and Knowledges. Tr.

1548<sup>e</sup>. The second state (from which comes heavenly light) is that the man is introduced into spiritual and celestial things through Knowledges, which must be implanted in the celestial things conferred from infancy . . .

1551<sup>3</sup>. 'Ships of Tarshish' = Knowledges.

—'. 'Gold' = the Knowledges of celestial things; 'silver,' of spiritual things.

1555. That is called the light of intelligence which is procured by means of the Knowledges of the Truths and goods of faith . . .

—2. Man is introduced to wisdom or life . . . by means of knowledges and Knowledges.

—3. As the understanding cannot be procured except by means of knowledges and Knowledges . . .

—'. When the intellectual part has been instructed in knowledges and Knowledges, especially in the Knowledges of truth and good, then first can the man be regenerated; and, when he is being regenerated, truths and goods are implanted by the Lord by means of Knowledges in the celestial things with which he had been endowed by the Lord from infancy, so that his intellectual things make a one with his celestial ones.

1557. For worldly things cannot be dispelled before truth and good are implanted in celestial things by means of Knowledges . . . Knowledges make a general and obscure idea distinct . . .

1561. When Knowledges are implanted in (that) state, they make it lucid. When, by means of Knowledges, truth and good are conjoined to that prior celestial [state] . . .

1563. These organic vessels (of the external man) . . . are opened . . . by means of scientifics and Knowledges . . .

—2. (Thus) it must happen that such scientifics and Knowledges will insinuate themselves with the external man as cannot agree with spiritual truths . . . (and) such things must be dispelled . . .

1573. The falsity from evil cannot be born until the man has been imbued with scientifics and Knowledges. Ex.

1616<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) the Lord's external man, or Human Essence, was conjoined with the Divine Essence by degrees, according to the multiplication and fructification of Knowledges.

—'. No one, as a man, can ever be conjoined with the Lord, except by means of Knowledges; for by means of Knowledges man becomes man. So it was with the Lord, because He . . . was instructed like another man; but into His Knowledges as receptacles celestial things were constantly being insinuated, so that the Knowledges were continually made the recipient vessels of celestial things, and these vessels themselves were also made celestial . . .

—4. If a man is such that he can be regenerated, (his) knowledges and Knowledges are infilled with celestial things . . . and thus are implanted in the celestial things with which he has been endowed from infancy; and thus his external man is conjoined with his internal man. They are first implanted in the celestial things with which he has been endowed in adolescence; then in those with which he has been endowed in childhood; and finally in those with which he has been endowed in infancy . . . This implantation is effected by the Lord alone . . .

—5. But the Lord by His Own power . . . infilled His Knowledges with celestial things, and implanted them in celestial things . . . first, in the celestial things of childhood, then in the celestial things of the age between childhood and infancy, and finally in the celestial things of His own infancy . . .

[A. 1616<sup>b</sup>]. The innocence of infancy is of no use unless by means of Knowledges it becomes the innocence of wisdom; and therefore in the other life infants are imbued with Knowledges.

— As the Lord implanted Knowledges in celestial things, so He had perception . . . He had His first perception when He implanted the scientifics of His childhood, which perception is signified by 'the oak-grove Moreh;' and He had the second one, which is interior, when He implanted Knowledges, which perception is signified by 'the oak-groves, Mamre, which is in Hebron.'

1636. I have spoken with almost all I have Known . . .

1659<sup>2</sup>. The Lord's external man, which, by the media of knowledges and Knowledges, was to be conjoined with His internal man.

1661<sup>2</sup>. Every man at first of all fights from the goods and truths which he has received by means of Knowledges . . .

1685<sup>2</sup>. Therefore such combats never come forth before the man has been imbued with the knowledges and Knowledges of truth and good.

1774. They remain outside of Heaven; for they are unwilling to be imbued with the Knowledges of truth, and thus to be affected with good . . .

1791. His perception was . . . the sensation and perceptive Knowledge of all things which were taking place in Heaven . . .

1802<sup>2</sup>. No one can perceive that which he does not know and believe, thus he cannot be endowed with the faculty of perceiving the good of love and the truth of faith, except by means of Knowledges, in order that he may know what it is, and of what quality it is . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Then first are they heirs . . . when they are in the affection of good, that is, in mutual love, into which they are introduced by means of the Knowledges of good and truth, and their affections.

1839<sup>6</sup>. 'Darkness' = the falsities which have possession of those who are in Knowledges; which is greater than the darkness of the gentiles who have not Knowledges.

1842. 'In Knowing thou shalt Know' (Gen. xv. 13) = that it is certain.

1861. He who has the Knowledges of truth, and still does not acknowledge them, but at heart denies them, and leads a life in things contrary to the truth. Sig.

1866<sup>e</sup>. The lands which the Euphrates bounds and divides from the Land of Canaan = the scientifics and Knowledges of celestial things . . .

1893. Infants . . . become rational . . . as they are imbued with knowledges and Knowledges.

—<sup>2</sup>. As the Rational is formed by means of scientifics and Knowledges, which enter through external sensuous things . . .

1895. Rational truth . . . is born from knowledges and Knowledges vivified by an affection which corresponds to them . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The Rational is not born from knowledges and Knowledges . . . but from the affection of knowledges and Knowledges; as may be evident from the fact, that no one can ever become rational, unless he breathes some delight or affection of knowledges and Knowledges . . . In themselves, knowledges and Knowledges are nothing but dead things, or instrumental causes, which are vivified by means of the life of affection.

1900. The life itself of man is from the internal man, which cannot have any communication with the external man, except a very obscure one, until there have been formed recipient vessels, which are of the memory, which is done by means of Knowledges and knowledges. The influx of the internal man is into the Knowledges and scientifics of the exterior man, by the medium of affection . . . Thus is perfected the correspondence of the external man with the internal . . . but still not so that they agree, unless the Knowledges, by means of which these [vessels] are formed, are Truths . . .

1901. Infants cannot know a whit of truth until they have been imbued with Knowledges; but in proportion as they are better and more perfectly imbued with Knowledges, so much the better and more perfectly can intellectual truth . . . be communicated.

—<sup>2</sup>. This intellectual truth . . . inflows through an internal way . . . and constantly comes to meet the Knowledges which are insinuated by means of sensuous things, and are implanted in the memory.

1902<sup>2</sup>. This is the reason why the Rational of man is to be formed . . . by means of scientifics and Knowledges insinuated through the senses . . . and thus in inverted order. Tr.

1909. There are many affections of the exterior man . . . but the affection of Knowledges and knowledges excels them all, when it has as an end to become truly rational . . .

1910. The life of the affection of Knowledges and knowledges gives to the Rational as it were a body, or clothes the life of the internal man as the body does the soul. Knowledges and knowledges are circumstanced no otherwise.

1911. To the Rational which is first conceived there adhere many fallacies from knowledges received from the world and nature, and many appearances from the Knowledges taken from the literal sense of the Word. Examps.

1964. The Rational can never be conceived and born, or formed, without scientifics and Knowledges; but the scientifics and Knowledges must have use as the end; and when they have use, they have life as the end . . . Unless they are learned for the sake of a life of uses, they are of no moment . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. They who learn Knowledges in order to be perfected in the faith of love . . . are in the use of all uses, and receive spiritual and celestial life from the Lord . . .

2025. As man acquires life for himself especially through instruction in scientifics, doctrinals, and Knowledges of faith . . .

2039<sup>6</sup>. For without the Knowledges of truth there is never any purification.

2046. Therefore, man is reformed and regenerated through the Knowledges of truth, and not until he has been imbued with them.

2049. Those who are not in the goods and truths of faith because they are not in the Knowledges of them. Sig.

—<sup>3</sup>. In the other life, the knowledge of the Knowledges of faith is of no avail; for the worst, even the infernals, can be in the knowledge of them . . . But [what avails] is a life according to Knowledges; for all Knowledges have life as the end. Unless they were learned for the sake of life, they would be of no use . . . Hence it is evident that the life of the Knowledges of faith is no other than the life of charity . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. Still, doctrinal things, or the Knowledges of faith, are in the highest degree necessary for the formation of the life of charity, which cannot be formed without them.

2072<sup>2</sup>. Because the Rational is formed by means of the Knowledges of truth . . . The Knowledges of good are truths, equally with the Knowledges of truth.

2184<sup>4</sup>. The Celestial Spiritual is the same as . . . the affection of Knowledges and knowledges from the affection of charity . . . such as is with those who love the neighbour and confirm themselves therein from the Knowledges of faith, and also from scientifics, and hence love these.

2189<sup>2</sup>. Man is reformed and regenerated . . . by means of Knowledges and scientifics, which are of truth; and which are continually being implanted in good . . .

2219. As the perversity of the human race is thence Known . . .

2228<sup>2</sup>. Thus they err in the mere Knowledge of what faith is . . . It is not Knowledge . . . Man is saved by the life which he has acquired in the world through the Knowledges of faith . . .

2230. 'To Know' anyone, properly, = to know that he is such. In like manner when applied to a thing . . .

2240<sup>5</sup>. 'They found no waters' = no Knowledges of truth.

2280<sup>5</sup>. The Knowledges of good and truth cause a man to be wise as a man.

2292. Infants are successively introduced into the angelic state through the Knowledges of good and truth . . . 2306.

2354. 'Let us Know them' (the Angels) (Gen. xix. 5) = that they want to show that it is false to acknowledge them.

2357<sup>2</sup>. They who are in a life of evil are admitted no further than to the Knowledge of good and of the Lord; and not to the veriest acknowledgment and faith . . .

2362. 'They have not Known a man' (ver. 8) = that falsity has not contaminated them.

2385. 'The door' = the Knowledges which introduce to truth.

2389. 'Sons-in-law' = the Knowledges of truth, with which are associated the affections of good . . .

2401<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the Knowledges of truth, but at the same time in a life of evil . . . believe nothing . . .

2466<sup>3</sup>. The Knowledges of good and truth from the Word by which they confirm falsities. Sig.

2485. One I had not Known in the life of the body . . .

2551<sup>2</sup>. How (the Lord) by means of knowledges and Knowledges, which He revealed to Himself, perfected His Rational . . . Tr.

2576<sup>9</sup>. 'Mantles,' and 'garments of embroidery' = Knowledges from scientifics, thus lower truths.

2632<sup>2</sup>. The Lord's first Rational was born as it is with others, namely, by means of scientifics and Knowledges . . . thus through an external way; (and therefore) could not but have with it many worldly things . . . which the Lord successively expelled . . .

2636<sup>2</sup>. Man is prepared (for regeneration) by the Lord, by the insinuation of such things as may serve for ground to receive the seeds of truth and good, which things are . . . also the Knowledges of good and truth, and the thoughts thence derived.

2657<sup>2</sup>. The first Rational . . . is procured by means of . . . knowledges and the derivative reasonings, and also by means of the Knowledges of spiritual things from the doctrine of faith, or from the Word.

2689<sup>3</sup>. With those who are able to become spiritual men this Affirmative is confirmed by means of scientifics and Knowledges . . .

2691<sup>2</sup>. 'Hagar' = the affection of the Knowledges of truth, which is what has grief. For the Rational of man is born from the affection of knowledges as a mother; but his Spiritual, from the affection of the Knowledges of truth from doctrine, especially from the Word . . . The affection of the Knowledges of truth, here, is 'Hagar.'

2722<sup>6</sup>. The Ancient Church, being spiritual, was not in the perception that it was so, but in Knowledge; for it was in what is relatively obscure.

—<sup>e</sup>. But when trees are predicated of the Spiritual Church, they = Knowledges; because the man of the Spiritual Church has no other perceptions than those which he has through Knowledges from doctrine or from the Word; for these become of his faith, thus of his conscience from which is his perception.

2781<sup>2</sup>. 'Beasts of the south' = those who are in the Knowledges of good and truth, but who make them to be not of life but of knowledge. 3048<sup>3</sup>.

2832<sup>2</sup>. That the strength is in knowledges and the Knowledges of truth. Sig.

2850<sup>2</sup>. Knowledges relate to the Rational . . . scientifics to the Natural.

2960<sup>2</sup>. Because good is perfected by the imbuements of the Knowledges of truth.

2967. 'A merchant'=those who have the Knowledges of good and truth; and 'merchandise'=these Knowledges themselves. Fully ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Waters'= Knowledges; and 'the sea,' a gathering together of them.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'The merchandise with which they traded'=the Knowledges of good and truth; for thence exclusively come wisdom and intelligence... But when the Knowledges are for the sake of self... they have no life, and they are utterly deprived of them; in the life of the body by embracing falsities... and evils... and in the other life by a complete deprivation of all truths. Sig.

—<sup>8</sup>. That all the Knowledges of good and truth are from the Lord. Sig.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'To buy and sell'=to acquire the Knowledges of good and truth; and, through them, good itself.

2972. 'Every tree in the field'=the interior Knowledges of the Church.

2973. The exterior Knowledges. Sig. . . Exterior Knowledges are those of the rituals and doctrinals which are of the External Church; but interior Knowledges are those of the doctrinals which are of the Internal Church.

2992<sup>8</sup>. Which can never come to the Knowledge of man. 2994<sup>9</sup>.

3030<sup>4</sup>. That to the good of (the Lord's) Rational, truth should be adjoined, and this by the common way, that is, by means of scientifics and Knowledges from the natural man.

3033<sup>2</sup>. When a man has the affection of good... then when anything is to be thought which is to be willed and done, his good will inflows into his thought, and there applies and injoins itself to the Knowledges which are therein, as to its recipient vessels...

3048<sup>2</sup>. For the Rational as to truth can never be born and perfected without scientifics and Knowledges.

—<sup>6</sup>. 'Arabia,' and 'the kingdoms of Hazor'=those who are in the Knowledges of celestial and spiritual things... merely to be thought wise and intelligent.

3051. 'Aram Naharaim'=the Knowledges of truth; (for) 'Aram,' or Syria,=the Knowledges of good.

3079. Vessels = receptacles, as are scientifics and Knowledges relatively to truths.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'The vessels of gold and silver' (out of which Belshazzar drank)=the Knowledges of good and truth, which were profaned; for 'the Chaldeans'=those who are in Knowledges...

—<sup>4</sup>. 'Empty vessels'= Knowledges in which there is no truth.

—'. 'Water flowing from buckets'= truths from Knowledges.

3081. 'A man had not Known her' (Gen.xxiv.16)=pure from everything false.

3122<sup>9</sup>. 'No Knowledge of God' (Hos.iv.1)=no reception of the influx of the truth of faith.

3161<sup>2</sup>. A man becomes rational by means of scientifics, namely, by means of Knowledges of many genera and species, the first of which are media to those which next follow, and so in order down to the last ones, which are of the spiritual things of the Lord's Kingdom, and are called doctrinal things...

3219. When the Angels are discoursing about Knowledges... birds appear... (and also objects of the vegetable kingdom. 3220.)

3240<sup>2</sup>. 'Sheba and Dedan'=the Knowledges of celestial things; or, those who are in the Knowledges of celestial things, that is, who are in the doctrinals of charity; for doctrinals are Knowledges.

—<sup>6</sup>. In the proper sense, 'Sheba'=those who are in Knowledges of good; 'Dedan' those who are in Knowledges of truth from good.

3242<sup>4</sup>. 'Women who had Known a man' (Num.xxxi.17)=affections of falsity.

3304<sup>2</sup>. Therefore infants are devoid of all Knowledge of truth.

3353<sup>2</sup>. 'There shall be famines and pestilences'=that there will no longer be any Knowledges of good and truth.

3364. A lack of the Knowledges which are of the natural man (is treated of there); and a lack of the Knowledges which are of the rational man (is treated of here).

3391. The doctrine of faith regarding rational things in Knowledges. Sig. and Ex.

—'. The things which appear by the internal sight in general are Knowledges, which are of the external man. Rational things... that is, spiritual truths, are not Knowledges, but are in Knowledges; for they are of the Rational, thus of the internal man; and it is the internal man who regards the things which are of the external man, thus who regards truths in Knowledges; for Knowledges, being of the natural man, are vessels recipient of rational things.

3408. The natural good (here meant) is that which is procured by means of the Knowledges of truth joined to the affection of good.

3420. That those who were in the mere knowledge of Knowledges denied these truths. Sig.

—'. They are in the knowledge of Knowledges who are in the doctrinal things of faith, and do not want to know the truths of Knowledges or of doctrinal things. The truths of Knowledges or of doctrinal things are those things which are of life... Doctrine, to which belong doctrinal things and Knowledges, only teaches these truths...

3502<sup>2</sup>. The Natural is not made new... except through doctrinal things, or the Knowledges of good and truth; the celestial man first through the Knowledges of good, and the spiritual man first through the Knowledges of truth. Doctrinal things, or the Knowledges of good and truth, cannot be communicated to the natural man, thus neither can they be conjoined and appropriated, except through delights accommodated to him; for they are insinuated through an external or sensuous way. Tr.

3508<sup>2</sup>. It is according to order that (regeneration) be effected through truth, that is, through the Knowledges of good and truth; for without them the Natural cannot be enlightened by the Rational . . . thus cannot be regenerated, Knowledges being the vessels which receive the good and truth inflowing from the Rational . . . The vessels which receive the good and truth from the Rational are the truths themselves of the Natural, which are nothing but scientifics, Knowledges, and doctrinals.

3518<sup>2</sup>. By the good which he derives from his parents . . . scientifics are introduced, and afterwards the Knowledges of truth . . .

3570<sup>6</sup>. To foods correspond scientifics and Knowledges . . .

3603<sup>2</sup>. As they do not live according to them, they have no perception of this good and truth, but have only Knowledges separated from them.

3639<sup>6</sup>. From the situation itself it is Known . . .

3665<sup>2</sup>. Interior truths are no other than the Knowledges of such things as inmosty contain Divine things. For there are Knowledges of things in which inmosty there is not anything Divine, and there are those in which there is. The Knowledges in which there is inmosty what is Divine are such that they can admit interior truths more and more successively and in order; but the Knowledges in which there is not what is Divine are such that they do not admit, but reject them. For the Knowledges of external and corporeal good and truth are like ground which according to its own nature admits seeds of this and of no other nature, bringing forth one kind of seed, and suffocating another. The Knowledges in which there is inmosty what is Divine admit into themselves spiritual and celestial truth and good; for from the Divine which is within and disposes, they are such: whereas the Knowledges in which there is not what is Divine admit only falsity and evil; for they are of such a nature. Those Knowledges of external and corporeal truth which admit spiritual and celestial truth and good, are here signified by 'the daughters of Laban from the house of Bethuel;' but those which do not admit it, are signified by 'the daughters of Canaan.'

—<sup>3</sup>. The Knowledges which are learned from infancy to childhood are as it were most general vessels, which are to be filled with goods; and, as they are filled, the man is enlightened. If the vessels are such that genuine goods can be in them, the man is enlightened from the Divine which is within them, and this successively, more and more: whereas, if they are such that genuine goods cannot be in them, he is not illuminated. He indeed appears as if he were enlightened, but it is from fatuous lumen, which is of falsity and evil; but he is really obscured by them more and more as to truth and good.

—<sup>4</sup>. Such Knowledges are manifold, so manifold, that they can scarcely be enumerated as to their genera, still less be distinguished as to their species; for they are derived from the Divine in a manifold way through the Rational into the Natural. For some inflow immediately through the good of the Rational, and thence into the good of the Natural, and also into the truth of this 'good,' and thence again into the external or corporeal Natural, and there too they go off into various streams; and some inflow immediately through the truth of the Rational into the truth of the Natural, and also into the good of this truth, and thence again into the external or corporeal Natural. They are circumstanced like nations, families, and houses, and like the relationships by blood and marriage therein, in that there are some which descend in a direct line from the first father, and some which descend in an oblique line, or more and more collateral . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. As to the Knowledges themselves of external or corporeal truth, which are from collateral good, and have in them what is Divine, and thus can admit genuine goods, such as are with infant children who are afterwards regenerated, they are in general such as are those of the historicals of the Word. Enum. These are Knowledges which have in them what is Divine, and admit into themselves spiritual and celestial goods and truths, because they represent and signify them. Such Knowledges also are the rest which are in the historicals of the Word. Enum. When these and such Knowledges are known and thought of by an infant child, the Angels who are with him think about the Divine things which they represent and signify; and as the Angels are affected with these things, their affection is communicated, and causes the delight and pleasure which the child has from those Knowledges, and prepares his mind to receive genuine truths and goods. Such and very many others are the Knowledges of external and corporeal truth from collateral good.

3675. 'He went to Paddan-aram' = the Knowledges of this truth.

3676<sup>2</sup>. External truth, from which is the good which here is 'Jacob,' is nothing else than Knowledges; for these are the truths which are first of all imbibed, and are also accounted as truths by those who are at the beginning of regeneration. But Knowledges are not truths in themselves, but from the Divine things which are in them; when these shine forth they then first become truths. Meanwhile they are only as it were general vessels, through which and in which truths can be received . . . as are all scientifics when they are first learned.

3679<sup>6</sup>. From these ultimate or extreme things all the regeneration of the Natural begins. These extreme or ultimate things are the first Knowledges, such as are those of infants and children.

3680. The beginning of coming forth through the Knowledges of this good. Sig.

— They are called Knowledges of good, because all truths are Knowledges of good . . . But in so far as truths regard doctrine, they are called Knowledges of truth.

3685. 'He went to Paddan-aram' = to imbue the Knowledges of that good and truth.

3688<sup>2</sup>. The truth of good . . . inflows thus into these [acts], and operates this according to the Knowledges in which the child is.

[A. 3688]<sup>f</sup>. For the interior good of charity cannot inflow into any other truth than that which is of his Knowledge . . .

3693<sup>f</sup>. They are imbued with the Knowledges of good and truth as to this thing, which is signified by 'to wash themselves with waters in the evening.'

3701<sup>f</sup>. For without knowledge, or Knowledge, man cannot be imbued with any good . . . To this end such Knowledges are insinuated into him as are not quite contrary to those which he had before. Examps. . . These and the like Knowledges are those of the infancy of his new life . . .

3726<sup>f</sup>. It has been said that good from the Lord can be implanted in Knowledges . . . They who have no other idea about Knowledges . . . than that they are abstract things . . . cannot possibly apprehend what it is for good to be implanted in Knowledges . . . But it is to be known that Knowledges and truths are no more things abstracted from the purest substances . . . of the spirit, than sight is abstracted from . . . the eye . . . There are purer substances, which are real, from which they come forth, the variations of the form of which, animated and modified by an influx of life from the Lord, present them . . .

3735<sup>f</sup>. They who have been in the life of good, after death come into the Knowledges and perception of all these things . . .

3762. The truths of love, (or) celestial truths . . . are Knowledges about charity towards the neighbour and about love to the Lord. Tr. and Ill.

—<sup>6</sup>. 'The sons of the east,' in the opposite sense, = the Knowledges of evil and falsity, thus those who are in them. Ill.

3863<sup>f</sup>. 'To see in seeing and not to Know' (Is. vi. 9) = to understand what is true, and still not to acknowledge.

3913. 'A maid-servant' = the affection of the Knowledges which are of the exterior man.

—<sup>3</sup>. The spiritual man is in his bliss when he is in the Knowledges of good and truth; which are his wealth . . .

3989. Knowledge. Sig. 4714. 5255.

4017. 'Waters' = Knowledges and scientifics, which are the truths of the Natural.

4027<sup>f</sup>. They who are not regenerate . . . are outside of Knowledges, because they are outside of perceptions.

4096<sup>f</sup>. He who has spiritual Knowledges as an end . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. The good which is of love and charity inflows . . . into no other things with man than the Knowledges which are with him; and as the good is fixed there, the thought is kept in the truths which are of Knowledges . . .

4107. 'Which he had acquired in Paddan-aram' = the Knowledges of good and truth in the Natural.

4136<sup>f</sup>. Man has no Knowledges of this subject, and at this day does not desire any; and as the Lord does not inflow immediately with man, and teach him, but inflows into his Knowledges, thus mediately, therefore he cannot possibly know . . .

4231. No one is born into (spiritual) good; but is led into it by the Lord through the Knowledges of good and truth.

4247<sup>f</sup>. Good . . . then, has no vessels . . . for at the beginning of regeneration man is not as yet in Knowledges . . . But when the man is being regenerated, which takes place in adult age, when he is in Knowledges, then good manifests itself.

— . All the Scientific and all the Cognitive are insinuated through the sight or hearing into the thought, and thence into the will, and from the will through the thought into the act . . .

4248<sup>f</sup>. Before this, the man cannot undergo temptations, because he is not yet in the Knowledges by which to defend himself, and to which he may have recourse for comfort . . .

4255. 'Jordan' = initiation into the Knowledges of good and truth. —<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

— . That he had little of truth when he was being initiated into Knowledges; and that afterwards he had many truths and goods. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For the Knowledges of good and truth are the first things; and, at last, when the man becomes a Church . . . they become the last.

4334<sup>f</sup>. 'And Knew not till the flood came' (Matt. xxiv. 39) = that they will not know that 'they are inundated . . .

4345. The affections of knowledges and of Knowledges are in the highest degree external; for the knowledges and Knowledges themselves are the things from which and in which are truths.

4360<sup>f</sup>. All infants are in sensuous scientifics, and they serve as planes . . . for the Knowledges of spiritual things.

4395. Exterior Knowledges, which serve to introduce genuine goods and truths. Sig.

4424. For the Knowledges of good and truth are separated from such in the other life. Sig.

4429. 'To see' = to Know.

4453. 'To trade' = to acquire Knowledges. Ex. and Ill.

4539. Knowledges are in the Natural, or in the ultimate of order.

4598. Progression towards interior things . . . is not progression into the Knowledges of interior truth; for Knowledges effect nothing unless the man is affected with them. But (it) is progression towards Heaven and the Lord through the Knowledges of truth implanted in the affection thereof . . .

4599<sup>f</sup>. The Knowledges of interior truth. Sig.

4638<sup>f</sup>. He who is in the Knowledges of truth, and does not do them, is called 'a foolish man.'

4791. They who love the Word of the Lord, and desire thence the Knowledges of truth and good, belong to the province of the tongue . . .

4844<sup>17</sup>. The Knowledges of truth and the scientifics (of the Ancient Church) were to Know and know what the rituals of their Church represented . . .

4914. 'To Know' = to be conjoined.

5248. From their garments they can be Known . . .

5276°. Knowledges are nothing else than the truths of the natural man, but which have not as yet been appropriated to him. The multiplication of such truths is here meant (by 'the seven years of plenty'). Knowledges do not become truths with a man until they are acknowledged with the understanding, which takes place when they are confirmed by him; and these truths are not appropriated to him, until he lives according to them.

5280. 'The plenty shall not be Known . . . ' 'To be Known'=to be apperceived.

5309. 'To Know,' when predicated of God,=foresight and Providence; for it cannot be said of God that He Knows [or takes knowledge], for He knows=novit—all things from Himself; and the faculty of Knowing with man is from Him; and therefore to Know, in God, is to foresee and provide. To foresee is to Know from eternity to eternity; and to provide is to do it.

5402. By the scientifics of the Church . . . are meant all the Knowledges of truth and good before they have been conjoined with the interior man, or through the interior man with Heaven, and thus through Heaven with the Lord . . .

5649°. The Knowledge of a thing must precede the perception of it.

6025. Their being born in Paddan-aram represented that the man of the Church must be regenerated through the Knowledges of good and truth.

6110°. That the angelic Heaven has such an appetite for truths and goods, and for the Knowledges of them, scarcely anyone can believe . . . They will say, What are the Knowledges of good and truth to me?

6240. He who has not the perception of good, but only the Knowledge that it is true, because he has been so instructed . . . is not a truly rational man . . .

6385°. The Knowledges of good and truth are described by such things as belong to a ship. Enum.

6386°. Doctrinal things are those which are from the Word; Knowledges are those which are from these doctrinal things on the one side, and from scientifics on the other; and scientifics are those which are of experience from self and from others.

6390°. 'The classes of Reuben'=those who are in the Knowledges of the truth of faith.

6435°. The Knowledges of good and truth (which) flow from the goods of celestial and spiritual love. Sig.

6471. A Spirit who supposed that he excelled in the Knowledges of faith.

6538°. For the Knowledges of good and truth are the first things through which man is initiated into the things of the Church.

6539. For before the Knowledges of good and truth, which are the initiaments, can be implanted in good . . . there is grief. Sig.

6596. At that time, the scientifics of the Church were Knowledges of the representatives and significatives which had been in the Ancient Church.

6696. The Spirits of Mercury are allowed to wander about, and to acquire for themselves the Knowledges of the things which are in the universe. 6811. 6926.

6727. 'To Know what would be done to him' (Ex.ii. 4)=observation.

6806. 'And God took knowledge' (ver.25)=that He endowed with charity. . . For it is charity which conjoins the Lord with man, and causes the Lord to be present with him, consequently to Know him. The Lord does indeed Know all in the universe, but not as a father does his sons, except those who are in the good of love and of charity. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) 'to be Known,' when said by the Lord,=to be in the good of charity; that is, to be endowed with that good . . . and 'not to be Known,'=to be in evil.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'To Know' involves conjunction; and a man is said to be so far 'Known' to the Lord, as he is conjoined with Him. The Lord also Knows those who are not conjoined . . . but as these are in evil, they are in a different presence, which is as it were absence . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. So Angels and Spirits who are alike as to states of life . . . mutually Know each other; whereas they who are unlike as to states of life . . . do not so well Know each other . . .

6814°. The Spirits of Mercury excel but little in the faculty of judgment . . . for bare Knowledges delight them.

6815. It was granted to insinuate to them, whether they wanted to perform any use from their Knowledges; for to be delighted with Knowledges is not sufficient, because Knowledges regard uses, and uses must be the ends; that from Knowledges alone they have no use, but others have to whom they may be willing to communicate their Knowledges; and that it is not at all proper for a man who wants to be wise to stand still in Knowledges alone, because these are only instrumental causes . . . But they replied that they are delighted with Knowledges, and that to them Knowledges are uses.

6865°. The false Scientific is what most infests those who are of the Spiritual Church. The reason is that they have no perception of truth from good, but only the Knowledge of truth from doctrine.

6926. The Spirits of Mercury . . . act as a one, so that the Knowledges of each are communicated to all, and the Knowledges of all to each.

6990. 'One who sees, or one who is blind'=faith through Knowledges, and no faith through no Knowledges.

7072. For flying things=the Knowledges of things.

7175°. Moreover, the Knowledges of immaterial things are represented in the other life by crystals.

7209. 'Ye shall Know that I am Jehovah your God' (Ex.vi.7)=apperception then that the Lord is the only God. 'To Know'=to apperceive.

7245°. That nation rejected the very Knowledges of internal things.

7280. 'The Egyptians shall Know that I am Jehovah' (Ex.vii.5)=that they shall have fear of the Divine.

[A.] 7324. 'Pools'=intelligence from the Knowledges of good and truth; for . . . collections of water, and lakes, =Knowledges in the complex through which is intelligence. Ill.

7553<sup>6</sup>. 'Trees burnt up'=the Knowledges of truth destroyed by the evil of cupidities.

7647. The consuming of all the Knowledges which they have from the Church. Sig.

7743<sup>3</sup>. The bird turned into stone=the life of Knowledges without love . . .

7749. They who love Knowledges alone, and not a life according to them, for the most part glory on account of them, and seem to themselves wiser than all others; thus they love themselves, and despise others, especially those who are in good, these they regard as simple and unlearned. But the lot is inverted in the other life; there, those wise persons seem to themselves to become fools, and those simple persons wise.

7750. As by the bird of stone was represented those who are in Knowledges alone, and not in the life of love, and as consequently they have almost no spiritual life, we may show that those only have spiritual life who are in heavenly love, and thence in Knowledges; and that love contains in itself the whole Cognitive which is of that love. (Shown by the case of animals and birds.)

7770<sup>2</sup>. 'Take the talent from him, and give it to him who hath ten talents' . . . 'Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, so that he shall have abundantly; but whosoever hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away from him.' The reason is, that the Knowledges of good and truth with the evil are applied to evil uses; and the Knowledges of good and truth with the good are applied to good uses. The Knowledges are the same, but the application to uses makes the quality of them with each person; as is the case with the riches of the world . . . from which it is evident, that the same Knowledges—like the same riches—which had been with the evil, can be with the good, and can serve for good uses. (This was also represented by) the sons of Israel borrowing from the Egyptians vessels of silver and vessels of gold . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. 'Merchandise and meretricious hire'=Knowledges applied to evil uses. That these shall be given to the good, who will apply them to good uses. Sig.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The profit which is devoted to Jehovah'=the Knowledges of truth and good.

8426. 'In the evening ye shall Know . . . ' (Ex.xvi.6) . . . 'To Know'=to be revealed.

8449. 'Ye shall Know that I am Jehovah' (ver.12)=that they may know that the Lord is the only God.

8562. For as water and drink recreate the natural life, so do truths and the Knowledges of truth the spiritual life . . .

8568<sup>7</sup>. 'Springs of waters'=the Knowledges of truth from the Word.

8963. Therefore, man is not admitted into combat until he is in the Knowledges of truth and good . . .

8994<sup>4</sup>. Therefore, knowledges and Knowledges are represented by 'men-viros.'

—<sup>e</sup>. But with those who are in the Celestial Kingdom . . . the wives are in the Knowledges of good and truth.

9011<sup>6</sup>. 'The forest'=the Church as to the Knowledges of truth; 'Carmel'=the Church as to the Knowledges of good. In like manner, 'Lebanon and Hermon.'

9103<sup>4</sup>. Therefore, the Knowledges of spiritual things must be with a man in his Natural, in order for spiritual perception to come forth; and the Knowledges of spiritual things must be from revelation. When the light of Heaven inflows into these Knowledges, it inflows into its own . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. This influx (of light from Heaven) accommodates itself according to the analogous and corresponding Knowledges of truth in the Natural.

9230<sup>2</sup>. So long as the truths of the Church go no further (than the memory and the understanding), they are only Knowledges and scientifics; and, relatively to goods, are outside the man himself . . .

9231<sup>3</sup>. 'The crimson and fine linen' with which the rich man was clothed,=the Knowledges of good and truth from the Word. 9467<sup>5</sup>, Ex.

9279<sup>2</sup>. The things which have relation to truth are called scientifics and Knowledges . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. It is the Knowledges of the truth and good of faith from the Lord, and thence of faith in the Lord, which open the intellectual things of the internal man . . .

9297<sup>6</sup>. Hence it is that Spirits are instantly Known there as to their quality . . .

9325<sup>9</sup>. 'A new cruse,' or new vessel,=scientifics and Knowledges of good and truth.

9372<sup>8</sup>. John the Baptist's 'meat'=spiritual nourishment from the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word.

9391<sup>5</sup>. Here are described those who are in abundance of the Knowledges of good and truth, and still live evilly.

—<sup>6</sup>. By 'the prodigal son' are meant those who have been prodigal of heavenly riches, which are the Knowledges of good and truth.

9394. As scientifics are Knowledges, they serve the sight of the internal man as a kind of mirror in which to see such things as are of service to him; for they fall under the view of the internal man as do fields full of plants, flowers, etc. . . under the view of the external man.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) scientifics and Knowledges, which are things of the memory, serve those who are in the loves of self and of the world as means to confirm falsities against truths, and evils against goods . . . Hence it is that the learned, who are such, are more insane than the simple . . .

9544. (The vessels of the table of the bread of faces)=the Knowledges of celestial good and truth. The Knowledges of these goods are signified by these vessels; and as Knowledges are signified, and Knowledges are of the memory of the natural man; and as the Natural is external, therefore it is said, 'with which the table shall be covered.'

9688<sup>3</sup>. The Knowledges of truth and good are the scientifics of the Church. 9755<sup>6</sup>.

9723<sup>3</sup>. The scientifics which have served these uses are signified by 'the ashes' which are to be removed; and the Knowledges of truth and good, through which man has spiritual life, after they have served their use, that is, after they have imbedded life, are signified by 'the ashes of the altar,' which also are to be removed.

9724. Vessels, in general, = the things of the external memory, or scientifics; and, in holy things, the Knowledges of good and truth, which are means for the worship of the Lord . . .

9755<sup>6</sup>. It here treats of the vastation of the Knowledges of good and truth.

9841<sup>4</sup>. The truths of faith from love are not the bare Knowledges of such things in the memory, and thence in the understanding . . .

9768<sup>3</sup>. The Knowledges of good are the truths of celestial love.

9945. 'Thou shalt make with the work of the embroiderer' = the Knowledges of good and truth. 'The work of the embroiderer' = scientifics; and the reason it is said the Knowledges of good and truth, is that by these are meant interior scientifics, such as are of the Church concerning faith and love . . . and all things in the Spiritual World are held in connection by means of Knowledges and the derivative affections.

10021<sup>3</sup>. That the Knowledges of truth and good are implanted in the innocence of infancy, as in their plane. Refs.

10026. For Knowledge must precede, before man can have faith, and live the life of faith . . .

10037<sup>4</sup>. 'They who have eaten delicacies' = those who have the Word, and thence the Knowledges of truth; 'those brought up upon crimson' = those who are in the Knowledges of good.

10155. 'They shall Know that I am Jehovah their God' (Ex.xxix.46) = what is perceptive that all good and truth are from the Lord. 'To Know' = to understand, believe, and perceive . . . because it is said of both the Intellectual and the Voluntary of man. When it is said of the Intellectual only, it = to understand; when of the Intellectual and at the same time of the Voluntary, it = to believe; and when of the Voluntary only, it = to perceive: and therefore with those who are solely in the knowledge of a thing, and thence in thought concerning it, 'to Know' = to understand; but with those who are in faith, 'to Know' = to believe; whereas with those who are in love, 'to Know' = to perceive.

—<sup>2</sup>. But when 'to Know' is conjoined with 'to understand,' 'to see,' and 'to believe,' then 'to Know' = to perceive; because to understand, to see, and to believe, relate to the understanding, consequently to truth; but to perceive, to the will, consequently to good. Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. In these passages, 'to Know' = to perceive; and to perceive is from good.

—<sup>4</sup>. As 'to Know,' in the proper sense, = to perceive from good, it is said, 'It is Known from the heart' (Deut.viii.5); . . . and to do what is good is called 'to Know Jehovah' (Jer.xxii.16).

10182<sup>5</sup>. Hence it is that from the evil . . . there is taken away persuasive faith, and also all Knowledge of truth . . .

10199<sup>6</sup>. 'Sheba and Raamah' = those who are in the Knowledges of celestial and spiritual things.

10227<sup>16</sup>. It here treats of the Church which places everything of the Church in bare Knowledges . . . when yet Knowledges are nothing but means to amend and perfect the life; and therefore he who possesses them without a life according to them, is 'miserable, needy, blind, and naked.'

—<sup>17</sup>. It here treats of those who acquire Knowledges without the end of any use, except that they . . . may know, when yet life is that to which they should be of service.

10258<sup>2</sup>. 'Dan and Javan' = those who are in the Knowledges of celestial things.

10272<sup>2</sup>. By ministering goods and truths, are meant the goods and truths which are in the external man, which are called Knowledges and scientifics . . .

10367<sup>4</sup>. Hence it is that the Knowledges of truth and good must precede, and must enlighten the understanding of man; for the understanding of man has been given in order that it may be enlightened through the Knowledges of good and truth, to the end that they may be received by his will, and become good . . .

10400<sup>6</sup>. Hence man has illustration when he is reading the Word, but according to the light which he is able to have by the means of the Knowledges which are with him. 10402<sup>9</sup>.

10445. (The multiplication of) goods and truths and their Knowledges. Sig.

10551<sup>2</sup>. The light of Heaven inflows and enlightens, although the man is unaware of it. The reason (of which) is, that that light inflows into the Knowledges which are in the man's memory, and these Knowledges are in natural light; and as the man thinks from these Knowledges as from himself, he cannot apperceive the influx . . .

10565. 'To Know Jehovah' = to know the quality of the Divine with them.

H. 46. (In Heaven) all who are in like good Know each other . . .

352<sup>3</sup>. If man were born into the order of his life . . . he would be born into intelligence and wisdom, and thence also into the faith of all truth, in proportion as Knowledges accede.

355<sup>6</sup>. Therefore, in proportion as the spirit of a man has been made rational by Knowledges and knowledges in the world, he is rational after (death) . . .

356. But they who through Knowledges and knowledges have acquired intelligence and wisdom—who are they who have applied all things to the use of life, and at the same time have acknowledged the Divine, loved the Word, and lived a spiritual moral life—with these, knowledges have served as means of being wise, and also of strengthening the things which are of faith . . .

[H. 356]<sup>3</sup>. From these things it is evident that through Knowledges and knowledges man becomes spiritual, and that these are means of being wise, but only with those who have acknowledged the Divine in faith and life.

356. App.<sup>1</sup>. That man is to be imbued with knowledges and Knowledges, because by these he learns to think, afterwards to understand what truth and good are, and at last to be wise. Refs.

— That Knowledges open the way to the internal man, and afterwards conjoin him with the external man according to uses. Refs.

427<sup>2</sup>. They who come out of the World of Spirits into Heaven, (or Hell), see each other no more, and do not Know each other, unless they are alike in mind from a like love.

457<sup>2</sup>. I have seen some recently from the world, and I Knew them from their faces and speech; but when they were seen afterwards, I did not Know them.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is that all who have Known each other in the world, Know each other also in the World of Spirits; but not in Heaven or in Hell.

469. Hence it is that Spirits and Angels, equally with men, are perfected in intelligence and wisdom through the Knowledges of truth and good. . . I have seen . . . that those who have been in any truth from simple good, were imbued with Knowledges, and through these with intelligence, and afterwards were carried up into Heaven.

—<sup>2</sup>. But it is to be known that they are not imbued with Knowledges, and through them with intelligence, any further than to the degree of the affection of good and truth in which they had been in the world . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. That Spirits and Angels are continually being perfected in intelligence and wisdom through the Knowledges of truth and good. Refs.

481<sup>2</sup>. After the first and second states (after death) are passed, they are separated so that they no longer see, nor Know each other; for everyone becomes his own love . . .

494. As the spirit of a man just after his life in the world is such, he is then Known by his friends . . . for Spirits perceive this not only from his face and speech, but also from the sphere of his life when they approach.

517<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) Knowledges, which are external truths, do not cause that anyone comes into Heaven; but the life itself, which is the life of use, which has been implanted through Knowledges.

518. But (these learned Spirits) were explored, as to whether their Knowledges resided in the memory, or in the life . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But those with whom Knowledges resided in the memory only . . . at the influx of the light of Heaven began to be darkened . . . They were afterwards instructed that Knowledges do not make an Angel, but the life itself which they have obtained through Knowledges; because, regarded in themselves, Knowledges are outside of Heaven; but life through Knowledges is within Heaven.

552. After the first and second state (after death) are passed, a Spirit is at once Known, as to his quality, when he is looked at; not only from his face, but also from his body, and also from his speech and gestures . . .

N. 1<sup>2</sup>. By 'the foundations of the wall which were of every precious stone,' are meant the Knowledges upon which that doctrine is founded.

48<sup>5</sup>. That the truths which are in the natural man are called scientifics and Knowledges. Ref.

51. (Passages on the subject of the knowledges and Knowledges, through which the internal spiritual man is opened.)

—<sup>2</sup>. For the sake of distinction, the scientifics which belong to the spiritual state and life are called Knowledges, which are chiefly doctrinal things. Ref.

—<sup>3</sup>. That the sight of the internal man calls forth nothing else from the scientifics and Knowledges of the external man than those which are of the love of the former. Ref.

— That scientifics and Knowledges are disposed and conjoined fascicularly according to the loves through which they have been introduced. Ref.

— That the scientifics and Knowledges with a man are implanted successively in his loves, and dwell in them. Ref.

—<sup>4</sup>. That scientifics and Knowledges, being of the external or natural man, are in the light of the world . . . Ref.

52. That scientifics and Knowledges are of the exterior memory. Refs.

J. 12<sup>2</sup>. There is (a mental) extension according to the increments of wisdom, thus according to the plurality of the Knowledges of truth which have been implanted in the understanding . . .

C. J. 14<sup>e</sup>. Spiritual light . . . enters with man into his understanding, in proportion as he is in the faculty of perceiving, from the Knowledges he has received.

Life 27<sup>2</sup>. These are Knowledges without life . . . and such, in time, perish . . .

F. 25. That the Knowledges of truth and good are not of faith before man is in charity; but that they are the storehouse from which the faith of charity can be formed. Gen.art.

28. This storehouse is most necessary, because without it faith cannot be formed; for the Knowledges of truth and good enter faith, and make it. If there are none, faith does not come forth . . . If they are few, faith is small and needy. If they are many, faith is rich and full . . .

29. The Knowledges of genuine truth and good make faith, and not at all the Knowledges of falsity . . .

31. The Knowledges of truth and good which precede faith . . . —<sup>e</sup>.

— As soon as charity is implanted, these Knowledges become of faith . . .

32. Spiritual heat in its essence is charity, and it vivifies the Knowledges of truth and good which are therein, and from them forms faith.

33. The Knowledges of truth become truths with one who is regenerate; and also the Knowledges of good; for the Knowledge of good is in the understanding.

—e. The Knowledges of good and truth from the Word, when there is in them what is spiritual from the Lord, are not called Knowledges, but truths; whereas if (that) is not in them they are nothing but scientifics.

901. That the Knowledges of truth and good, in which there is spiritual life from the Lord, and through which there is introduction into the New Church, are for those who are more or less in love, or the affection of good; and for those who are more or less in wisdom, or the affection of truth. Sig. and Ex.

916. That the acknowledgment and Knowledge of the Lord conjoin into one all the Knowledges of truth and good which are from the Word, and introduce into the Church. Sig. and Ex.

— The reason each gate was of one pearl, is that all the Knowledges of truth and good . . . relate to one Knowledge, which is the containant of them, which one Knowledge is the Knowledge of the Lord. It is called one Knowledge, although there are many which make up that one Knowledge; for the Knowledge of the Lord is the universal of all things of doctrine, and thence of all things of the Church . . .

—e. 'The one precious pearl' = the acknowledgment and Knowledge of the Lord.

937<sup>o</sup>. Faith and thence the presence of the Lord exist through the Knowledges of Truths from the Word, especially concerning the Lord Himself there.

T. 11<sup>o</sup>. Knowledges concerning God are mirrors of God . . .

— The faith of God enters into man by a prior way . . . but Knowledges concerning God enter by a posterior way, because they are imbibed from the revealed Word, by the understanding, through the senses of the body; and in the middle of the understanding there is a meeting of the influxes . . .

24. Because there have been lacking the Knowledges through which man ought to ascend to meet God; for everyone should prepare the way for God; that is, should prepare himself for reception; and this should be done by means of Knowledges. The Knowledges which have been lacking . . . are the following . . .

—2. The Knowledges by means of which the human understanding ascends . . . may be compared to the steps of the ladder seen by Jacob . . . But it is quite otherwise when these Knowledges are lacking, or when the man spurns them . . .

457°. God inflows with every man with the acknowledgment of Himself into the Knowledges concerning Himself . . . (Such a man) receives this influx in the understanding and not in the will, and he remains in the Knowledges without an interior acknowledgment of God . . . But the man who receives . . . the influx in the will . . . has an interior acknowledgment of God, which vivifies with him the Knowledges concerning God.

3288. How the Spirits of Mercury acquire the Knowledges of things. Des.

3386°. Such things with angelic Spirits and Angels are not fallacies, but are appearances; and are as it were vessels, to which can be applied the Knowledges of faith. Therefore it was told what the Knowledges of faith are, which are not appearances; namely, that the Knowledges of faith are, that the Lord rules the universe; that all good and truth are from the Lord alone; that with us there is nothing but evil; and the like.

3428. Such are those who reject faith, so that they do not want to hear about faith, nor about Knowledges, which they suppose to be the tree of knowledge which deceived Eve and Adam. They remain in life only, speaking about life . . .

3437. I spoke to him many things about the Knowledges of faith: that there cannot possibly be true life except through the Knowledges of faith; that without life through the Knowledges of faith, or through the doctrine of faith, that is, through faith, there would be no need of the revelation of the Word . . . and there would be no need of his preaching . . . as life might be infused immediately, without the Word . . . He now wants to insinuate, that he had supposed that man is regenerated while he is unaware of it, and that he thus obtains life: concerning which it was given to say, that such is the case with regeneration, but still through the Knowledges of faith; and that although the man is then unaware of it, still, in a state of misfortune and temptation, when corporeal things recede, those things which are of faith are recalled by the Lord into his mind.

3438°. Such a life (as men are born into) cannot possibly be amended except through the Knowledges of truth and good, and thus through the Knowledges of faith.

3445. True conscience is not possible without the Knowledges of faith . . . (and) man is not born into any Knowledge . . . and unless he were to receive the Knowledges of truth and good from education, he would be much viler than the brutes . . .

—c. True conscience is never born with man, but first there must be Knowledges ; thus it is procured . . .

3459°. (So long) they cannot come to the courtyard of Knowledges.

3537. It was given to say, that all the Knowledges of faith are Truths . . .

3549. That evil Spirits are dispersed from those who are kept by the Lord simply in the Knowledges of faith.

3564. That the Knowledges of faith are the food of Spirits.

3590. Man ought to think from Heaven, that is, from the Knowledges of faith, which are heavenly, and which have been revealed ; and thus are to be confirmed, if need be, by sensuous things. For the Angels are in the sphere of faith, consequently, are in the Knowledges of faith.

3591<sup>2</sup>. It is of the Lord's Providence that one finds so many contrary things . . . in order that we may remain in universal Truths or in the Knowledges of faith, and that these may rule the thoughts ; and that when they reign we may abstain from such things.

3602. That objections are not to be made against the Knowledges of faith.

3603. Faith means the universal Knowledges and Truths of faith . . . Without these, there is no faith ; but the Knowledges of faith are faith, because faith is to be had in them . . . Thus do the ideas become determinate.

3614. That those who do not admit objections against the Knowledges of faith, are secure from evil Spirits.

3875. Conjugal love is attended with all the [necessary] Knowledge . . . Thus all Knowledge follows from affection. Therefore, he who is in the affection of true faith, is in the Knowledges of all things ; but when the affection has ceased, then the Knowledges remain to be insinuated through another way, namely, through an external one, or through the ear ; which indeed appears to the ignorant as if it were the Lord ; for, from the things said from the Knowledges of faith, it is Known whether there is a Lord. But as they are Knowledges, and not affections, they are nothing else than images of the Lord without life . . . It was shown me to the life, how the Knowledges which do not come forth from affection, are like such inanimate birds of pearl . . .

3904. A certain one . . . who had known above others . . . what the Knowledge of faith is, came to me and said that now he knows nothing . . . (This was) because in the other life Knowledges are confirmed, that they may be Truths of faith . . . For, although anyone is in the light of Knowledges, yet if his life is repugnant, he does not love the things confirmatory of the Knowledges of faith against his life ; but he rather loves the things confirmatory of his life against the Knowledges . . . It was given to console him [by saying] that this is the state into which those are first reduced who are in the Knowledges of the truth of faith, and with which the life does not agree, which is a species of vastation ; and then for the first time the Lord inseminates truths . . .

3977. On things confirmatory of the Knowledges of faith.

—c. The Knowledges of faith cannot be otherwise than at first confirmed by sensuous things and natural Truths ; for man cannot believe without things confirmatory ; but afterwards, when they have been confirmed, the Lord endows him with conscience, in order that he may believe without things confirmatory. He then rejects all reasonings. This sphere is angelic, in which evil Spirits cannot be . . .

4037°. So is it with those things which are of the Knowledges of faith . . . Confirmatory things then accede, which are all in the corporeal memory, where also are the Knowledges of faith.

4058. In proportion as anyone is in love from the Lord, he is in Knowledges ; which Knowledges come from the Lord alone, both immediately, and also through Heaven.

4172. From this it was evident that Knowledge must precede . . . and that unless there is Knowledge, one is not endowed with the charity of faith ; thus the Knowledge of truth precedes.

4263. They who are in charity and conscience know as it were from themselves all the Knowledges of faith . . .

4264. So it is with charity ; he who is in charity is in all things of faith, or in all Knowledges which are called of faith ; so that he does not think at all about the Knowledges, because he then has them in himself . . . But the reason man must have Knowledges, is that he knows nothing about spiritual and celestial things ; they are above his apprehension ; and thus he must have Knowledges, in order that he may be regenerated by means of them, and receive charity from the Lord . . . and may know these things, and innumerable things more.

4295. Discourse concerning Knowledges falls with man into the things which he is eating . . . because Knowledges are spiritual foods . . .

4696. I supposed at first that when in good . . . Heaven could be granted to those who are devoid of the Knowledges of truth and good ; but it was shown how changeable they were, so that they could not be led when they were in any sensuous natural state, but they then seized upon any opinions whatever, so that all things were indeterminate. When he turned himself, he then changed his mind into the opposite, like a revolving wheel . . . Hence it is evident that a plane must be formed in the world from the truths of faith, or from the Knowledges of good and truth, in both doctrine and life . . . and that otherwise their state is changeable and evil.

4697. Women were also seen who were deceived by evil women . . . because they had not given heed to the Knowledges of truth and good from preaching. Those who had lived well were brought to a place where they can be amended.

[D.] 4731. That all who are like are Known . . .

5450. Ugly black horses were seen, like dusky clouds. They approached me, and I felt behind me the sphere of adulteration . . . Some at my back were then heard to say, What need is there of Knowledges? thus of truths? It is sufficient to be in holy worship. . . They were then told that an external Holy, without the Knowledges of truth and good, is not holy, because there is nothing from Heaven in it; for it is from an empty man, from whom nothing is perceived . . . and also that man cannot have Heaven in himself without Knowledges; for instance, if he does not know about the Lord, that all good is from Him; and about himself, that all evil is from him. Hence comes the humiliation which is of worship; and if these things are not in the humiliation, there is nothing in it . . . Those who were of this character were monks, because they keep all in . . . thick darkness . . . They who are such, namely, those who are averse to Knowledges, through which however is the way to Heaven, and who place the whole of worship in externals, are the Gog and Magog of the Apocalypse.

5696. Such, at first, are accepted, and they are delighted with Knowledges not for the sake of any uses except for the sake of delight. In the other life such delight is increased with them . . . They appear on mountains . . . and believe that they can never be disturbed. They do not trust in the Divine, except intellectually when it is well with them . . . Such care nothing as to how their neighbour is circumstanced . . . They bind themselves with the evil everywhere . . . Such are they who interpose themselves between the Lord and the evil in the other life; nay, between the Lord and man . . .

5899. Some, when inspected by the Angels, appear like cats . . . Such was B. Stiernerona, who only sang Amen; and did not attend to any Knowledges.

5971<sup>e</sup>. For before faith, knowledge and Knowledge must precede . . .

D. Min. 4597<sup>e</sup>. Hence it may be evident how necessary it is to imbue the Knowledges of what is right and true, and to act according to them, and to confirm the love.

4613. Hence it may be evident how important it is to know the Knowledges of truth; and to believe that this is the truth.

E. 71. As the Knowledges of truth are in ultimates . . .

93. By 'the Angel of the Church of Ephesus,' are meant all those in the Church who are in the Knowledges of truth and good, thus in the Knowledges of such things as are of Heaven and the Church, and yet are not, or are not as yet, in a life according to them. By these Knowledges are especially meant doctrinal things; but doctrinal things, or the Knowledges of truth and good, alone, do not make a man spiritual, but a life according to them; for doctrinal things, or Know- ledges, without a life according to them, reside only in the memory and thence in the thought; and all things which reside there only, reside in the natural man . . .

95. For the remembrance of those within the Church who are in the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. The reason those who are in the Knowledges of good and truth from the Word are meant . . . is that by the Knowledges of truth and good are meant the doctrinal things of the Church, and these cannot be had from any other source than the Word.

96. From Whom are all the Knowledges of good and truth. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. The reason the Knowledges of good and truth are here treated of first, is that these are the first things of the Church; for no one can be initiated into faith and charity, which make the Church, except through the Knowledges which are of the Church from the Word.

105. That a life according to Knowledges is what is essential of the Church, and not Knowledges without a life according to them, may be evident to everyone who considers; for Knowledges, so long as one does not live according to them, reside solely in the memory; and so long as they reside there only, they do not affect the interiors of man . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Before the Knowledges of truth and good enter man's will or love, they effect nothing whatever towards his salvation, because they are not within the man, but are without him. But still Knowledges are necessary, because without them man can know nothing concerning spiritual life, and he who knows nothing about this life cannot become spiritual; for what a man knows he can think, will, and do, but not what he does not know; but still if they enter no deeper than the memory and the derivative thought, they do not affect him, and consequently do not save him.

—<sup>3</sup>. It is believed by many . . . that to know doctrinal things, and from knowledge to believe that they are true, saves a man however he lives; but I can assert that no one is saved by these things. I have seen many, even the most learned, east into Hell; but, on the other hand, I have seen those who have lived according to the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word elevated into Heaven. Hence it is evident that Knowledges effect nothing, but a life according to them; and that Knowledges only teach how we are to live. To live according to the Knowledges of truth and good, is to think that we are to do so, and no otherwise, because it is commanded by the Lord in the Word. When a man thinks thence, and thence wills and acts, he then becomes spiritual. But it is necessary for those who are within the Church to believe in the Lord, and, when they think about Him, to think of the Divine in His Human, because from His Divine Human proceeds everything of charity and faith.

107. He who believes that those can be in the Knowledges of truth who separate charity from faith, is much mistaken; for they apprehend all things from themselves, and nothing from Heaven, and the things which a man apprehends from himself and not from Heaven are falsities, because he thinks in darkness . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. These are intelligent in proportion as they have applied the Knowledges of truth and good to life.

—<sup>3</sup>. All those who are in the Knowledges of truth and good, and not in the good of life according to them, can live a moral life equally with those who are in Knowledges and through them in the good of life; but their moral life is natural and not spiritual. Ex.

109<sup>3</sup>. By 'the tree of knowledge' is signified the delight of Knowledges without any other use than that they may be called learned . . .

110. 'Which is in the midst of the paradise of God' = that all the Knowledges of good and truth in Heaven and in the Church look thither (that is, to the good of love to the Lord), and proceed thence. —<sup>3</sup>. Ex.

—'. 'Paradise' = the Knowledges of good and truth, and the derivative intelligence. III.

—<sup>2</sup>. By 'Asshur,' in the Word, are meant those who have become rational through the Knowledges of good and truth . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Without previous Knowledges, love and faith are not possible; for without them a man would be an empty man.

—<sup>4</sup>. As all the Knowledges of good and truth regard the Lord, and proceed from Him . . .

112. For remembrance to those within the Church (Smyrna) who . . . are but little in the Knowledges of truth and good, which, however, they at heart long for. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. Here are described those who are in the Knowledges of truth and good, and at the same time in a life according to them . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. For no one can be introduced into the Church, and be formed for Heaven, except through Knowledges from the Word. Without these, a man does not know the way to Heaven; and without these the Lord cannot dwell with him. That without the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word no one knows anything about the Lord, the angelic Heaven, charity, and faith, may be known; and that which a man does not know, he cannot think, or will, consequently cannot believe and love. Hence it is evident that man learns the way to Heaven through Knowledges. That without the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, the Lord cannot be present and lead man, is also known; for the spiritual mind of him who knows nothing about the Lord, Heaven, and charity and faith, is empty, and has nothing from the Divine within it; and yet the Lord cannot be with a man except in what is His own in him; that is, in the things which are from Him. Hence it is that it is said, that the Lord cannot dwell with a man unless he is in the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, and thence in life. From these things . . . it follows, that a natural man cannot possibly become spiritual without the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word.

—<sup>4</sup>. In its bosom the Word is spiritual, and . . . therefore so long as a man lives in the world, and sees then from the natural man, he can be but little in the Knowledges of truth and good, but only in general ones, in which, however, there can be implanted innumerable things when he comes into the Spiritual World . . . for the general Knowledges which are with him, are as it were vessels which can be infilled with many things . . .

118<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord loves to lead everyone to Himself, and to save him, and this He cannot do except through the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, He therefore loves to implant these in man, and to make them of his life . . .

126. 'A crown,' when predicated of those who are in the spiritual affection of the Knowledges of truth and good, = wisdom . . . The reason (these) have eternal happiness, is that Heaven is implanted with man through the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word. Ex. . . There are two minds with man . . . The natural mind is opened through the Knowledges of the things which are in the world; and the spiritual mind is opened through the Knowledges of the things which are in Heaven, which the Word teaches, and the Church from the Word. Through these, man becomes spiritual, when he knows them, and lives according to them. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. Those of them who do not care for the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, and who do not imbue them, not only in the memory, but also in the life, remain natural . . . for their holy worship, adorations, and prayers, do not proceed from any spiritual origin; for their spiritual mind has not been opened through the Knowledges of spiritual things, and through a life according to them, but it is empty; and worship which proceeds from what is empty is only natural gesture . . .

—'. From these things it may be evident that the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, and a life according to them, are what alone make a man spiritual . . .

141<sup>13</sup>. The reason 'the merchandise and meretricious hire should be holy to Jehovah,' is that by these things are signified the Knowledges of truth and good applied by them to false and evil things; and through these very Knowledges, regarded in themselves, a man can be wise; for Knowledges are means of being wise, and are also means of being insane; they are means of being insane when they are falsified by applications to evils and falsities . . .

176<sup>1</sup>. Truths in the natural man are scientifics and Knowledges, from which a man can think, reason, and conclude, naturally, concerning the truths and goods of the Church, and concerning the falsities and evils which are opposite to them, and thence be in a kind of natural illustration when he is reading the Word . . .

182. Those who lead a moral life, but not a spiritual one, because they make light of the Knowledges of spiritual things, and of the derivative intelligence and wisdom. Sig. and Ex.

193. The unexpected time of death, when all the Knowledges procured from the Word which have not attained spiritual life will be snatched away. Sig. and Ex. —<sup>9</sup>. III.

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore, when he becomes a Spirit, he rejects from himself all the Knowledges he has acquired from the Word which do not agree with the life of his spirit's love. But it is otherwise with those whose . . . thoughts in the spirit make one with their thoughts from the memory of the body, thus with the Knowledges of truth and good which they have from the Word; and, in proportion as they make one, these Knowledges obtain spiritual life; for they are elevated by the Lord from the external man into the internal, and make the life of the latter, thus its understanding and will . . .

[E. 193]<sup>8</sup>. It is said 'as a thief,' because the evils and derivative falsities in the natural man take away and cast out the Knowledges of truth and good which are from the Word there; for the things which are not loved, are cast out.

—<sup>4</sup>. As evils and the derivative falsities penetrate from the interior, and . . . cast out the Knowledges of truth and good which dwell exteriorly with a man, therefore those (evils and falsities) are meant by 'thieves.' Ill.

—<sup>10</sup>. That all the Knowledges of truth and good which are from the Word will be taken away from those who have not acquired spiritual life, is meant in the parable of the talents . . . Ex.

—<sup>11</sup>. To commit the Knowledges from the Word to life, is to think from them when, being left alone, one thinks from one's spirit; and to will them and do them; for this is to love truths because they are truths; and these are they who are made spiritual through Knowledges from the Word.

195. Those who lead a moral life from a spiritual origin, by applying to the uses of their life the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'Garments' = the scientific truths and Knowledges which are in the natural man. —<sup>5</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. These scientifics and Knowledges, when they are from the Word, are 'defiled' by this,—that the man learns and retains them solely for the sake of . . . being called learned . . . or that he may thereby get honours and wealth, and beyond these ends he does not care for them. Thus are Knowledges from the Word polluted and defiled by the loves of self and of the world; for they dwell together with evils and falsities . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. It was said above that a man becomes spiritual through the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word applied to the uses of life; but why a man becomes spiritual through those which are from the Word, and not through any others, shall now be told. All things which are in the Word are Divine, and they are Divine by this,—that they have in them a spiritual sense, and through this sense communicate with Heaven and with the Angels there; and therefore when a man has Knowledges from the Word, and applies them to life, he then through them communicates with Heaven, and through this communication he becomes spiritual . . . Whereas the Knowledges which are from other books, which deliver the doctrinal things of the Church and confirm them by various things, do not effect communication with Heaven, except through the Knowledges therein from the Word. These do communicate if they are understood truly, and are not applied to faith alone, but to life . . .

196. Their spiritual life which they have through the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—'. Nothing else with man makes the spiritual life, except the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word applied to life; and they are applied to life when the man holds them as the laws of his life; for he thus regards the Lord in every single thing, and the Lord is present with them, and gives intelligence and wisdom, and the affection and delight of them; for the Lord is in His own truths with a man . . .

235. 'I will spue thee out of My mouth' = separation from Knowledges from the Word . . . for the food which a man takes, corresponds to Knowledges . . . because Knowledges nourish the spirit, as foods nourish the body.

—<sup>2</sup>. That they who are 'lukewarm' . . . are separated from Knowledges from the Word, they themselves do not know; for they believe that they are in Knowledges more than others; but still they are not; nay, they are scarcely in any; (the reason of which is) that when they are reading the Word, they keep their minds in their falsities, whence they either do not see truths, or, if they see them, they either pass by or falsify them . . . —<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>4</sup>. There are two causes of their separation from Knowledges from the Word: the first is that they cannot be enlightened by the Lord . . . and the second is, that they profane truths by falsifications . . .

236<sup>7</sup>. Those who acquire Knowledges without any other end than . . . that they may know them. Tr.

238. That they do not know that they have no Knowledges of truth, and no Knowledges of good. Sig.

242<sup>3</sup>. What they called faith was only Knowledges . . . and these Knowledges are not in man, but are in the entrance to him, which is his memory, until they are in his will; but in proportion as they are in his will, they are in the man himself . . . and in the same proportion they are in his sight, which is faith. The Knowledges themselves which precede, and in the natural sight appear as if they were believed, do not become of faith . . . Hence it is that the sight of Knowledges, which is supposed to be of faith, recedes from a man successively as he begins to think evilly from willing evilly; and also recedes from him after death . . . if the Knowledges have not been inrooted in his life; that is, in his will or love. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. To these (ruminatory stomachs of animals) corresponds the memory with man . . . Into this he first collects spiritual foods, which are Knowledges, and afterwards he takes them out, as it were by ruminating, that is, by thinking and willing; and appropriates them to himself, and thus makes them of his life. From this comparison . . . it may be evident that unless Knowledges are implanted in the life by thinking and willing, and thence by doing them, they are like foods which are unmastered in the ruminatory stomachs, where they either become putrid, or are vomited out. (Continued under KNOW—scire, here.)

—<sup>13</sup>. Knowledges and truths differ in this,—that Knowledges are of the natural man, and truths are of the spiritual.

—<sup>21</sup>. The truths which are in the natural man, and are called Knowledges and scientifics.

283<sup>8</sup>. To infill with the Knowledges of truth and good those who are in the Ultimate Heaven and in the Church. Sig.

294<sup>2</sup>. 'That they may see, and Know . . .' (Is.xli.20) = Knowledges, and understanding . . .

313<sup>10</sup>. When the inmost is spiritual . . . then also the Rational, the Cognitive, and the Scientific, are also spiritual . . .

372<sup>5</sup>. 'Not to be Known in the streets' (Lam.iv.8) = not to be recognized—recognosci—by genuine truths.

376<sup>19</sup>. By 'the works,' from which uses are effected, are signified the Knowledges of good ; and by 'wealth,' the Knowledges of truth ; and, as the Knowledges of truth and good are in the natural man—for therein is all the perceptible Cognitive and the Scientific—therefore . . .

386. A lack and ignorance of the Knowledges of truth and good. Sig.

—. By food and drink are signified all things which nourish and support the spiritual life, which in general are the Knowledges of truth and good . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. In all these passages, 'famine' = the deprivation of the Knowledges of truth and good, and the consequent deprivation of all truth and 'good'. —<sup>11</sup>, —<sup>13</sup>, —<sup>14</sup>.

—<sup>17</sup>. That 'famine' = also ignorance of the Knowledges of truth and good, such as is with those who know that they exist, and thence long for them. III.

387. For where . . . there are no Knowledges of truth and good, there is not any spiritual life ; for this is procured through the Knowledges of truth and good applied to the uses of life. For man is born in all evil and the derivative falsity, and therefore he is born into plenary ignorance of all spiritual Knowledges. In order, therefore, that he may be withdrawn from evils and the derivative falsities . . . and saved, it is necessary that he should learn the Knowledges of truth and good, by means of which he may be introduced, and may become spiritual.

402. That the Knowledges of good and truth have perished. Sig.

403. 'Its untimely figs' = the things which are in the natural man, which are especially the Knowledges implanted in the natural man from infancy, and not yet matured, because they have been merely heard, and thence received.

—<sup>2</sup>. As man is born natural, the Knowledges which he imbibes from infancy, before he becomes spiritual, are implanted in his natural memory. But when he advances in age, and begins to view rationally the Knowledges of good and truth which he has imbibed from the Word, or from preaching, if he then leads an evil life, he seizes and imbues the falsities which are opposite and contrary to these Knowledges, and then . . . he reasons from falsities against the Knowledges of his infancy and childhood ; and when this is done, these Knowledges are cast down, and falsities succeed in their place. These, therefore, are the things which are signified by, 'the stars shall fall to the earth, as a fig-tree casteth down her untimely figs, when she is shaken by the wind.'

which begins with a man through scientifics and Knowledges in the natural man.

406. The truths of the natural man are scientific truths, which are under the view of the rational man ; and they are the Knowledges of truth, which are under the view of the spiritual man. The Knowledges of truth are the things which the natural man knows from the Word . . . The spiritual mind is opened and cultivated after (the natural mind), but in proportion as the man receives the Knowledges of truth which are from the Word, or from doctrine from the Word ; and therefore it is not opened with those who do not apply them to life . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That all the Knowledges of truth and good, and the confirmatory scientifics, which a man has imbibed from the Word and from teachers from infancy, change their places and their state in the natural man, and perish from the view, when falsities enter. Sig.

—<sup>9</sup>. By the truths of the natural man are meant the Knowledges of truth ; and by the goods of the natural man are meant the Knowledges of good.

—<sup>12</sup>. For all the Knowledges of truth and good, as Knowledges, are in the natural man ; and they become truths and goods when the man lives according to them, because through the life they are received in the spiritual man.

418<sup>7</sup>. 'Elam' = those who are in the knowledges which are called of faith, and not at the same time in any charity.

419<sup>14</sup>. The scientifics and Knowledges which are with man before reformation. Sig.

427<sup>6</sup>. Because saving faith cannot be given, unless there precedes historical faith, which is the Knowledge of the things of the Church and of Heaven from others.

444<sup>7</sup>. 'The army of the heavens' = the Knowledges of truth and good in the spiritual man ; and 'the sand of the sea' = these Knowledges in the natural man.

506. That the perceptions and Knowledges of truth and good have perished through cupidities originating from evil loves. Sig.

—<sup>4</sup>. When the perception of spiritual truths and goods perishes, the Knowledge of them also perishes ; for although the man knows them, and speaks them, either from the Word or from doctrine, still he does not know them when he does not perceive them. The perception of a thing makes the Knowledge of it. Knowledge without perception is dead . . . and so also is the Knowledge of the mere sense of words, and not of the thing itself. Such Knowledges of truth and good, from the Word and from the doctrine of the Church, are with those with whom there predominate the loves of self and of the world. . . They are still only shells, which appear . . . to have kernels within, when yet they are empty.

507<sup>3</sup>. A man is such a man as is determined by the way in which the Knowledges and knowledges with him live . . .

514. That all the Knowledges from the Word, and from doctrine thence, perished. Sig.

518<sup>28</sup>. The natural man has Knowledge and apperception, as the spiritual man has intelligence.

[E.] 538<sup>3</sup>. For the truths of the natural man are the Knowledges of truth and good. It here treats of the vastation of the Church as to these.

545<sup>2</sup>. By scientifics from the Word are meant all things of the sense of the letter there in which there does not appear what is doctrinal; but by the Knowledges of truth and good are meant all things of the sense of the letter of the Word in which and from which is what is doctrinal.

556<sup>13</sup>. Falsifications of the Knowledges of truth, and . . . adulterations of the Knowledges of good. Sig. The Knowledges of good are also truths; for to Know goods is from the understanding, and the understanding is of truth.

569<sup>5</sup>. The Knowledges and knowledges which are signified by the river of Egypt, introduce (into the Church); for without Knowledges and knowledges no one can be introduced into the Church, nor can he perceive the things which are of the Church . . .

587<sup>7</sup>. That there is no life of intelligence and of the derivative perception of truth and good, is signified by, 'They do not Know, nor understand . . .' (Is. xliv. 19).

591. That (they have not turned themselves away from) taking away the Knowledges of truth and good, and thus the means of acquiring spiritual life. Sig.

617<sup>11</sup>. 'To eat to satiety' = to receive the Knowledges of good . . . as much as is sufficient for the nourishment of the soul.

—<sup>16</sup>. If those who are in the Celestial Kingdom imbue the natural man and its memory with the Knowledges of spiritual truth and good, and want to be wise from these, they become stupid . . .

632<sup>4</sup>. 'Good pasture' = everything which nourishes spiritually, especially the Word, and the derivative Knowledges of truth and good.

638<sup>3</sup>. And every Church is a Church from the Knowledges of truth and good, and according to the perceptions of them.

654<sup>2</sup>. For the truths and falsities of the natural man are called Knowledges and scientifics; but truths themselves, when they have attained life . . . are of his spiritual man. These . . . do not appear to the manifest sense and sight of the man, like the Knowledges and scientifics of the natural man . . .

—<sup>30</sup>. By the drowning of the Egyptians in the Sea Suph was represented the lot of those who abuse Knowledges to confirm evils and falsities; for after death they are deprived of all the Knowledge of truth and good; and when they have been deprived of these they are cast into Hell.

—<sup>33</sup>. As all of both the Celestial and the Spiritual Kingdoms are in intelligence and wisdom through the Knowledges of truth and good, and through the scientifics which confirm them . . . Sig.

—<sup>37</sup>. 'The trees of Eden' = the Knowledges of good from the Word which the natural man has perverted and falsified.

—<sup>62</sup>. And the Church is first formed with man through knowledges and Knowledges in the natural man, which is first cultivated by them . . . Afterwards, through the knowledges and Knowledges which have been implanted in the natural man, the Intellectual is formed, in order that the man may become rational . . .

675<sup>7</sup>. By 'the ten pounds which he gave to his ten servants to trade with' are signified all the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, with the faculty of perceiving them . . . and 'to trade' = to acquire intelligence and wisdom through them.

—<sup>8</sup>. That the first (of those to whom talents were given), from some Knowledges of truth and good acquired much wisdom. Sig.

—<sup>9</sup>. That those who in the world do not acquire spiritual intelligence through the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, are evil, may be evident from the fact, that all are horn into evils of every kind, and these are not removed except through Divine truths from the Word . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. 'To lose a drachma' = to lose one of the truths, or of the Knowledges of truth.

700<sup>17</sup>. The reason the gold, silver, and vessels of brass and iron, were given into the treasury of the house of Jehovah, was that they signified the Knowledges of spiritual and natural truth and good . . . which, with those who profane, are turned into direful falsities and evils; but, as they are still Knowledges, although applied to evils, they serve for use with the good, by application to goods . . .

701. For every affection wants to be nourished by Knowledges which agree with it.

717<sup>10</sup>. The Knowledges of truth and good are truths in ultimates, such as are the truths of the sense of the letter . . . of the Word.

718. For the Knowledges of truth and good are the truths of the natural man, from which comes intelligence to the rational and the spiritual man.

725<sup>10</sup>. The Lord's 'vessels of ornament of gold and of silver' = the Knowledges of good and truth, which are the goods and truths of the sense of the letter of the Word. These are called 'vessels,' because they contain within them spiritual truths and goods; and they are called 'vessels of ornament,' because they are appearances and thus forms of interior things; those which are 'of gold' = those which are of good; and those which are 'of silver' = those which are of truth.

730<sup>31</sup>. Then (a man) can be led by the Lord, and become spiritual, which is effected by the implantation of the Knowledges of truth from the Word . . . and by the calling forth and elevation of these Knowledges out of the natural man . . .

739<sup>7</sup>. But it is to be known that (the men of the Most Ancient Church) were never forbidden to acquire the Knowledges of good and of evil from Heaven, for through them their intelligence and wisdom were perfected; neither were they forbidden to acquire the Knowledges of good and of evil from the world, for thence their natural man had knowledge. But they were forbidden to view these Knowledges by a posterior way, because it was given to them to see all things which appeared in the world before their eyes by a prior way. To view the things of the world by a prior way . . . and thence to imbibe Knowledges, is to view them from the light of Heaven, and thus to Know their quality; and therefore also through Knowledges from the world they could confirm heavenly things, and thus strengthen their wisdom. But they were forbidden to view Knowledges from the world by a posterior way, which is done when we conclude from them about heavenly things . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. That they were allowed to acquire Knowledges from the world, and to view them by a prior way, is signified by 'Jehovah God made to grow out of the ground every tree desirable in aspect, and good to eat; for by 'trees' are signified Knowledges and perceptions . . . The Knowledges of good and of evil from the Lord, from which is wisdom; and the Knowledges of good and of evil from the world, from which is knowledge, were represented by 'the tree of lives,' and by 'the tree of the knowledge of good and evil in the midst of the garden.' That they were allowed to appropriate to themselves Knowledges from every side, both from Heaven and from the world, provided they did not proceed in an inverted order, by reasoning from them about heavenly things, and not by thinking from heavenly about worldly things, is signified by 'Jehovah God commanded that they should eat of every tree of the garden, but not of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil' . . .

820<sup>2</sup>. For truth without good is only the Knowledge that it is so; and Knowledge alone does not effect anything, except that the man can become the Church; but not until he lives according to Knowledges . . .

837<sup>8</sup>. The Knowledges of truth and good, which a man has acquired from infancy, and from which he has filled his memory, are not alive with him until he begins to be affected with truths because they are truths, and begins to will and do them. Before this they are outside the man's life.

965. The state of the Church manifested as to the Knowledges of truth in the natural man. Sig.

966. That all the Knowledges of truth from the Word are falsified. Sig.

— The Knowledges of truth from the Word, are the truths of the sense of its letter, or truths in the Word for the natural man, which also are Divine truths.

967<sup>2</sup>. The Knowledges of truth from the Word are not alive with a man until the internal spiritual man has been opened . . . Then, through the opened spiritual man, there inflows what is spiritual from Heaven into the Knowledges of truth and good which are from the Word in the natural man, and vivifies them. It vivifies them in this way: that the Knowledges of truth and good in the natural man become correspondences of the spiritual things which are in the internal spiritual man; and, when they are correspondences, they are alive; for then in each of the Knowledges or truths, what is spiritual is enclosed, as the soul is in its body. Hence it is that after death the man comes into these spiritual things, and that the Knowledges to which they corresponded serve them as a basis. But it is otherwise with those with whom the Knowledges from the Word have not been vivified. The Spiritual which inflows from Heaven into the Knowledges, is the affection of truth, the affection of good, and the affection of fructifying

. . . These are the spiritual things which inflow into and vivify the Knowledges of truth from the Word with those who are in the life of charity and the derivative faith. But, with those who are in faith separated from the life of charity, these same Knowledges are dead.

1044. An appearance in externals as if they were in the Knowledges of good and truth, when yet in internals they are in the knowledge of evil and falsity. Sig.

— 'Pearls' = the Knowledges of good and truth; and, in the opposite sense, the knowledge of evil and falsity . . . —<sup>3</sup>, III.

1098<sup>2</sup>. Thought becomes fuller from the Knowledges of truth which are of faith, and of good which are of love, from the Word; for all things which are from the Word are Divine; and Divine things, taken together, are God.

1104. 'Merchants' = those who acquire the Knowledges of good and truth from the Word; thus who either teach or learn them . . .

1142. The Knowledges of truth and good from the Word profaned. Sig.

1154<sup>3</sup>. So in reformation: the things which the man should acquire are the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word, from the doctrine of the Church, from the world, from his own labour. All other things are operated by the Lord, unknown to the man. But it is to be known, that all these requisites . . . to build the house, which . . . are the Knowledges of truth and good, are only things of provision, which are not alive until the man does them, or lives according to them as of himself. When he does this, then the Lord enters, and vivifies and builds, that is, reforms.

1165. All who come from the earth into the Spiritual World, are Known as to their quality from this: whether they can resist evils as of themselves, or not.

1200<sup>2</sup>. All are Known there from the appearances which are near and around them . . . 1212<sup>3</sup>.

Ath. 16. Knowledge precedes with everyone; but still it is not faith until he lives the life of faith . . . What is before this is of Knowledge; for the Lord makes faith from the Knowledges with a man.

J. (Post.) 195. He who has fought against evils . . . is in the Knowledges of truth and good as of himself . . .

235. That on the affection of love are inscribed the Knowledges of truth, so that the affection itself produces them . . .

De Verbo 12<sup>2</sup>. But it is necessary that there be first in the memory the Knowledges of both spiritual and natural things . . .

C. 3. That in proportion as anyone does not Know and know what sins there are . . . —<sup>4</sup>.

181. (Then) the man actually Knows and knows (the evils in himself).

Abom. There is no Knowledge of . . . (This phrase many times repeated.)

Inv. 41. In the Spiritual World no one Knows another from his mere name, but from the idea of his quality. This causes another to be present and Known. Thus and no otherwise are parents Known by their children, etc. . . (Thus) no one has the Lord present with him, unless he knows His quality . . . Qualities are of two kinds; one kind is of Knowledge concerning Him . . . and the other kind is of the Knowledges which proceed from Him . . .

2486. Evident from those I have known in the bodily life.

2718<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the affection of good, know and perceive from the good itself in which they are that it is so.

2826. 'To know,' when predicated of the Divine . . . = to be united; or, what is the same, to be glorified.

3175. Thus man does not know from himself anything which is of eternal life.

3603<sup>3</sup>. He believes himself to be good when he knows many things . . .

3843. He who knows not the state of man, may believe that conjunction is possible with truths . . . when he knows them . . .

4321. The things which man knows are comparatively scarcely anything in comparison with the things which he does not know.

4407<sup>e</sup>. This man also knows and observes, although not instructed by any knowledge—scientiam.

4633. In the other life, there are manifested not only the things which a man knows about himself, but also the things which he does not know.

4638<sup>9</sup>. 'I know you not' = rejection. 'Not to know them,' in the internal sense, is not to be in any charity towards the neighbour, and, through this, in conjunction with the Lord. They who are not in conjunction, are said 'not to be known.'

5309. It cannot be said of God that he takes Knowledge, for He knows all things from Himself.

6200<sup>2</sup>. The Spirits . . . thence knew all things which I had ever known about that matter.

—<sup>2</sup>. When I thought of a man who was known to me . . .

6652. 'Who knew not Joseph' (Ex. i. 8) = which was completely alienated from the Internal. 'Not to know' = to be alienated; for he who does not know truth, and does not want to know it, is alienated from the truth of the Church.

6813. There is such a communication among Spirits, that when they are in a Society, if they are accepted and loved, all things which they know are communicated, not by speech, but by influx.

—<sup>2</sup>. If the Knowledges with them were to be increased to eternity, they could not arrive at an acquaintance with generals.

6853. 'I have known their griefs' (Ex. iii. 7) = foresight as to how much they have been immersed in falsities.

'To know,' when said of the Lord, = foresight . . . because the Lord knows each and all things from eternity.

6906. 'And I know' (Ex.iii.18) = foresight.

6971<sup>2</sup>. Those become merely sensuous and corporeal men who have first known the things which are of the Spiritual World, and afterwards have rejected them . . .

7097. 'I know not Jehovah' (Ex.v.2) = that they do not care for the Lord. 'Not to know' = not to care; for he who does not care, says that he does not know.

7194. 'In My name Jehovah I was not known to them' (Ex.vi.3) = that in a state of temptations they did not think of the Divine things of the Church.

8695. 'To make known' = to teach.

10562. 'To know,' when said of Jehovah, = to know and foresee from eternity.

10565. 'Make known to me, I pray, Thy way, and I shall Know Thee' (Ex.xxxiii.13) = instruction concerning the Divine as to its quality with them. . . 'To make known' = instruction.

10569. 'To be made known,' when said of the Divine with them, = to be revealed.

10691. 'Not to know' = not to perceive.

H. 17. By which (spheres) they are known sometimes at a great distance . . .

46. I have seen some of them as if they had been known from infancy, but others as if they were not known at all. (The former) were those who were in a state like that of my spirit . . .

S. 17<sup>3</sup>. 'Not to know,' when said by the Lord, = not to be in His love.

W. 1. Man knows that there is love, but he does not know what love is . . .

220. Therefore from a mere action made by the hands, there is known by the Angels . . . the quality of the man . . .

P. 153. Although the universal Christian world knows . . .

T. 593<sup>e</sup>. Thus the Angels know the whole man . . .

605. At this day this is known, and still it is unknown-ignotum.

D. 610. That in the other life they meet those known to them. 2771. 2909.

1499. I have spoken to more than thirty whom I had known in the life of the body . . .

3917<sup>e</sup>. I knew no otherwise than that I had known that thing, when yet I had known nothing about it . . .

4057<sup>2</sup>. He who is in any cupidity . . . (there) knows all things which are of that insane love . . .

4179. On my acquaintances.

4677. When I have conversed with angelic Spirits, I have observed that they appear to me as if they were acquaintances and friends of long standing, with whom there is a similitude of mind . . . although I have never seen them before.

4716. Spirits acknowledge as a friend one who is like themselves; as an acquaintance, everyone who receives their ideas . . .

E. 252<sup>e</sup>. 'I know you not' = that the Lord is not conjoined with them . . . for the Lord has His abode with those who are in love and the derivative faith; and these He knows, because He Himself is there.

473. 'Lord, Thou knowest' (Rev.vii.14) = that the Lord alone has known this.

A. 24. Then the Lord distinguishes between . . . the Knowledges which are with the internal man, and the scientifics which are of the external man. . . The scientifics of the external man are called 'the waters beneath the expanse.'

27<sup>2</sup>. For whatever is insinuated into the memory of the external man, whether it is natural, spiritual, or celestial, remains there as what is scientific, and is produced thence by the Lord. (See KNOW-cognoscere, here.)

30<sup>2</sup>. They first receive life from the Lord by the faith of the memory, which is scientific faith . . . Rep. by the inanimate things.

31. By 'Pharaoh,' and 'the Egyptian,' in the Word, is meant what is sensuous and scientific; here, that by sensuous and scientific things they have extinguished love and faith.

34. Spirits who are in the knowledge of doctrinal things of faith without love, are in so frigid a life, and dim a light, that they cannot approach to the first threshold of the court of the Heavens . . .

40. By 'the creeping things which the waters produce,' are signified scientifics, which are of the external man. . . That 'the creeping things of the waters,' or fishes, = scientifics. III.

42. Fishes' = scientifics; here, animate through faith from the Lord, and thus alive. 'Whales' = the generals of these . . . Pharaoh, king of Egypt, by whom is represented human wisdom or intelligence; that is, knowledge in general; is called 'the great whale.' III. By these passages are signified those who want to enter into the mysteries of faith by means of scientifics; thus from themselves.

55<sup>e</sup>. Then 'the birds of the heavens,' which = truths, or intellectual things, 'build their nests in its branches, which = scientifics.

56. The natural man is in like manner delighted with natural things; which, being of his life, are called 'foods,' and are especially scientifics.

[A.] 75. The Scientific and the Rational of the celestial man are described by 'the shrub, and the herb from the ground, watered with vapour.'

78. The 'fourth river' is knowledge, which is of the external man.

80. The celestial man is allowed, from all perception from the Lord, to know—nosse—what is good and true; but not from self or the world; that is, to inquire into the mysteries of faith by means of sensuous and scientific things, through which things his Celestial dies. Tr.126.

91<sup>e</sup>. This tranquillity, which is of peace, produces those things which are called 'the shrub of the field,' and 'the herb of the field;' which, in special, are rational and scientific things from a celestial spiritual origin.

99. With the spiritual man . . . the Lord inflows through faith into his intellectual, rational, and scientific things; but as his external man fights with his internal man, it appears as if intelligence did not inflow from the Lord, but from himself, through scientific and rational things. But the order of life of the celestial man is, that the Lord inflows through love and the faith of love into his intellectual, rational, and scientific things; and, as there is no combat, he perceives that it is so.

102. 'The tree of the knowledge of good and evil' = faith from the sensuous, or knowledge. (For 'tree of knowledge,' see also under TREE.)

111. For external men know—norunt—scarcely anything but knowledge, which they call both intelligence and wisdom, and faith.

118<sup>e</sup>. 'Phrath,' or 'Euphrates,' = knowledge, which is the ultimate, or terminus.

119. 'The shoot among the dense [leaves]' = the scientifics of the memory, which are thus circumstanced.

120. As by 'Egypt,' so also by the 'Euphrates,' are signified knowledges or scientifics, and also the sensuous things from which are scientifics. III.

—<sup>e</sup>. As the Scientific of the memory is the terminus of the intelligence and wisdom of the spiritual and celestial man.

121. Thus, through reason, are vivified scientifics, which are of the memory. This is the order of life; and such are celestial men. Sig. And as the elders of Israel represented celestial men, they are called 'wise, intelligent, and knowing' (Dent.i.13,15). In like manner Bezaleel . . . of whom it is said, that 'he was filled with the spirit of God, in wisdom, in intelligence, and in knowledge, and in every work' (Ex.xxxi.3; xxxv.31; xxxvi.1,2).

127. That men want to inquire into the mysteries of faith by means of sensuous and scientific things, was the cause of the fall not only of the Most Ancient Church . . . but also of every Church; for thence come not only falsities, but also evils of life.

128. The worldly and corporeal man says in his heart, If I am not instructed concerning . . . the things of faith by means of sensuous things, so that I may see; or by means of scientific things, so that I may understand; I will not believe . . . This 'to eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil,' from which the more he eats, the more he becomes dead.

—<sup>e</sup>. But he who wants to be wise from the Lord . . . says in his heart, that the Lord is to be believed, that is, the things which the Lord has spoken in the Word, because these things are Truths, and . . . he confirms himself by means of rational, scientific, sensuous, and natural things; and the things which are not confirmatory, he separates.

129. It may be known—notum—to everyone . . . that all the knowledge and reasoning favour his principles . . . But the true order is to be wise from . . . the Lord's Word, then . . . he is enlightened in rational and scientific things also. For it is never forbidden to learn knowledges, because they are useful to the life, and delightful . . . But [it must be done] from this principle, —that he believes in the Word of the Lord, and confirms spiritual and celestial Truths by natural Truths . . .

130. He who wants to be wise from the world, has for his garden sensuous and scientific things. . . His river Euphrates is all his Scientific, which is damned . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. 'The trees of Eden' = the scientifics and Knowledges from the Word, which they thus profane through reasonings.

196. At this day . . . they confirm themselves by means of scientifics unknown to the Most Ancients, and thus blind themselves much more . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. He who is scientific, or concludes from knowledges, says, What is the spirit . . .

200<sup>2</sup>. When that generation expired, there succeeded another . . . which from truth knew good, or from the things which are of the Knowledges of faith knew the things which are of love; most of them for scarcely anything except that they might know them.

202. The Most Ancient Church . . . not only did not eat of the tree of knowledge, that is, learn what is of faith from sensuous and scientific things, but was not even allowed to touch that tree, that is, to think anything that was of faith from sensuous and scientific things, lest they should fall down from celestial into spiritual life, and so on. Such, also, is the life of the celestial Angels . . . least of all can they endure to hear anything scientific about faith . . .

203. But the spiritual Angels . . . confirm the things of faith by intellectual, rational, and scientific things; but they never conclude concerning faith from these things: they who conclude are in evil.

204<sup>e</sup>. That 'they would be as God, knowing good and evil' (Gen.iii.5) = that if they did this from themselves they would be like God, and could lead themselves.

205<sup>e</sup>. The love of self is attended with this,—that they . . . want to be led by self, and that (thus) they consult sensuous and scientific things concerning the things which are to be believed.

206<sup>2</sup>. These are their principles, which they confirm . . . by the sensuous and scientific things with them.

208. This was the fourth posterity of the Most Ancient Church, which . . . did not want to believe in the things revealed, unless they saw those things confirmed from sensuous and scientific things.

210. The proprium of man . . . [causes men] to suppose that what they do not apprehend sensuously and scientifically is nothing . . .

215°. 'Every man is made stupid by knowledge . . . ' (Jer.li.17).

232. At this day it is much worse than formerly ; for they can confirm the incredulity of the senses by scientifics unknown to the ancients . . .

233. To explore the mysteries of faith by scientifics, is as impossible as for a camel to enter through the eye of a needle . . . so gross . . . is what is sensuous and scientific relatively to what is spiritual and celestial . . . Examp.

—<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) they who consult sensuous and scientific things concerning things to be believed, precipitate themselves not only into doubt, but also into denial ; that is, into thick darkness, and (therefore) into all cupidities . . . 301.

251. For all evil has originated from what is sensuous, and also from what is scientific, which were at first signified by 'the serpent.'

—<sup>2</sup>. 'The serpent's root'=what is sensuous and scientific.

264. 'Zidon'=those who have been in the Knowledge of faith, and have lost them through scientifics, and thence have become barren.

285. It treats of the sixth and the seventh posterity, which were separated from the knowledge of good and truth . . . lest they should profane the holy things of faith.

298. That 'the man knew good and evil' (Gen.iii.22) =that he had become celestial, thus wise and intelligent.

308. 'The cherubs'=the Lord's Providence lest man should insanely enter into the mysteries of faith from what is sensuous and scientific . . .

340. That what has been inscribed on the heart became scientific. Sig.

344. What is the purpose of . . . the knowledge, Knowledge, and doctrine of faith, but that man may become such as it teaches ?

379. Faith without charity . . . is mere knowledge . . .

402<sup>4</sup>. The knowledge of spiritual and celestial things at the time of the Lord's Advent. Tr.

408<sup>2</sup>. They who only know, cannot profane.

424. 'An artificer'=one wise, intelligent, and knowing. Ill.

446. The men who live at this day do not believe in the spirit, because . . . they do not apprehend it by knowledges . . .

605°. For in those ancient times they did not indulge so much in knowledges as men at this day ; but in profound thoughts . . .

647°. Hence man may know how insane it is to want to explore the things of faith by means of sensuous and scientific things . . .

657. 'The lowests, seconds, and thirds'=scientific, rational, and intellectual things. . . There are three degrees of intellectual things in man ; the lowest is the Scientific . . . These are so distinct from each other that they are never confounded ; but the reason man does not know this, is that he places life solely in what is sensuous and scientific ; and (therefore) cannot know that his Rational is distinct from his Scientific . . . When yet the case is that the Lord through the Intellectual with a man inflows into his Rational, and through the Rational into the Scientific of the memory. Hence comes the life of the senses . . . This is the true intercourse of the soul with the body . . .

896. To know truths, to acknowledge Truths, and to have faith in Truths, are quite different things. To know is the first of regeneration ; to acknowledge is the second ; and to have faith is the third. The difference between to know, to acknowledge, and to have faith, may be evident from this,—that the worst are able to know, and still not to acknowledge . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. They who have faith, know, acknowledge, and believe.

— . Merely to know what is of faith, is of the memory without the consent of the Rational . . . They who only know are many of them in Hell.

991. (The dominion of the internal man over) scientifics. Sig.

— . For scientifics are of three kinds : intellectual, rational, and sensuous. All are inseminated into the memory, or rather into the memories ; and in one who is regenerate they are called thence by the Lord through the internal man. These scientifics (which are signified by 'all the fishes of the sea'), and which are from sensuous things, come to the sensation or perception of man when he lives in the body ; for he thinks from them. The others, which are more interior, not so much, until . . . he comes into the other life.

1029. With every man there are interior and exterior things . . . The exterior things are scientifics and pleasures, which are here signified by 'the wild animals of the earth.'

1162. Hence it may be evident, that knowledge is not faith.

—<sup>2</sup>. All are called 'sons of Ham' who have the knowledge of the Knowledges of faith, and not charity.

Whether they have the knowledge of the Knowledges of the interior things of the Word . . . whether the knowledge of all things which are in the literal sense of the Word ; whether the knowledge of other Truths, from which they are able to regard the former ones, of whatever name ; whether the knowledge-cognitionem—of all the rituals of external worship—if they have not charity, they are 'sons of Ham.'

[A.] 1163. 'Mizraim,' or 'Egypt,'=the knowledges, or various scientifics, by means of which they want to explore the arcana of faith, and by which they confirm the derivative principles of falsity.

1165. 'Mizraim,' or 'Egypt,' . . . also=simply knowledges, thus those which are useful. Ill.

1186<sup>2</sup>. Reasoning from scientifics about spiritual and celestial things, is called 'whoredom.'

1195. 'Ludim, Anamim, Lehabim, and Naphtuhim' = so many rituals, which are mere scientifics. . . Rituals merely scientific are predicated of those who by means of reasonings explore spiritual and celestial things, and thence invent for themselves a worship: the rituals of this worship, being from reasonings and scientifics, are called scientific rituals, in which there is nothing spiritual and celestial, because it is from self. Hence came the Egyptian idols, and the magic . . . 1196.

1230. 'Arphaxad'=knowledge. 1336.

1237. 'Shelah'=that which is of the knowledge derived thence.

1331. The internal worship of this Church ('Shem') . . . was scientific . . . 1337.

1385. The Spirits of the skin . . . are those who in the life of the body had confused truth and good by scientific and philosophical things . . .

1388<sup>2</sup>. This knowledge is natural with man, deriving its origin from the nature of Spirits . . . and thus from the spirit of the man himself, and its communication with the World of Spirits.

1390. Not only is there a communication of the affections and thoughts of another, but there is also a communication of his knowledge, inasmuch that the one Spirit supposes himself to have known what the other knows, although he had known nothing about it. Thus is communicated all the knowledge of another. Some Spirits retain it ; others do not.

1402. Progress from scientifics even to celestial truths, was according to Divine order, in order that the Lord's Human Essence might be conjoined with the Divine one. Tr.

1408<sup>2</sup>. The things which are of the sense of the letter are like . . . the scientifics of the memory which are from sensuous things, which are general vessels, in which are interior or internal things.

1412. There are with man corporeal and worldly things both exterior and interior . . . The interior ones are affections and scientifics. Sig.

1435. Everything scientific from which man thinks is called 'acquisition.' Without acquired scientifics, man as man cannot have any idea of thought. The ideas of thought are founded upon those things which have been impressed on the memory from sensuous things ; and therefore scientifics are the vessels of spiritual things . . .

1443. There are with man intellectual, rational, and scientific things ; his inmost things are intellectual things ; his interior ones are rational things ; and his exterior ones are scientific things. These are called his spiritual things, which are in such an order. The intellectual things of the celestial man are compared to a garden of every kind of trees ; his rational things to a forest of cedars and the like trees . . . and his scientific things to oak-groves, and this from the intertwined branches such as are those of oaks. By trees themselves are signified perceptions . . . by the trees of an oak-grove, exterior perceptions, or those of scientifics, which are of the external man . . .

1462. 'Egypt,' relatively to the Lord,=the knowledge of Knowledges ; but knowledge in general relatively to all other men. Ill.

—. When the Church was there, knowledges flourished there . . . But after they wanted to enter into the mysteries of faith by means of knowledges . . . it became magical, and by 'Egypt' was signified the scientifics which pervert . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That by 'Egypt' are signified useful knowledges ; thus, here, the knowledge of Knowledges, which can serve celestial and spiritual things as vessels. Ill.

—. 'Egypt,' here, =those who are in scientifics, or in natural Truths, which are the vessels of spiritual Truths.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'Fine linen of embroidery'=the Truths of knowledges, which serve. Scientifics, being of the external man, ought to serve the internal man.

—<sup>5</sup>. Here, the knowledges of celestial and spiritual things are called 'the hidden things of gold and silver,' and also 'the desirable things of Egypt.'

1472. The knowledge of Knowledges is attended with this—and there is something natural in it—and it is also manifested with children when they first begin to learn ; namely, that the deeper the things are, the more they desire them, and still more when they hear that they are heavenly and Divine. But this delight is natural, and originates from a desire which is of the external man. This desire causes other men to place delight solely in the knowledge of Knowledges, without any other end ; when yet the knowledge of Knowledges is nothing else than a certain Instrumental, for the end of use, namely, that they may serve as vessels for celestial and spiritual things ; and then . . . for the first time they are of use, and receive their delight from use.

—<sup>2</sup>. It may be evident to everyone, if he pays attention, that in itself the knowledge of Knowledges is nothing else than for a man to become rational, and thence spiritual, and finally celestial ; and that through them his external man may be adjoined to his internal man . . . To this end, also, the Lord insinuates the delight which he perceives in knowledges in his childhood and youth. But when a man begins to place delight in knowledge alone, it is a corporeal cupidity which carries him away; and, in proportion as it carries him away, or that he places his delight in knowledge alone, in the same proportion he removes himself from what is heavenly, and in the same proportion also the scientifics close themselves towards the Lord, and become material. But in proportion as scientifics are learned for the end of use; as for the sake of human society; for the sake of the Lord's Church on earth; for the sake of the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens; and still more for the sake of the Lord, in the same proportion they are more opened; and therefore the Angels, who are in the knowledge of all Knowledges . . . still estimate knowledges as nothing relatively to use.

—<sup>3</sup>. As the Lord knew-novit—this when He was a child . . . these things were said, [signifying] that if He should be carried away by the mere desire of the knowledge of Knowledges, then the knowledge would be such that it would no longer care for celestial things; but only for the Knowledges which the desire for knowledge would carry away. Tr.

1475. The case is this: knowledge is such, that it desires nothing more than to introduce itself into celestial things and explore them; but this is contrary to order; for it thus does violence to celestial things. Order itself is, that the Celestial, through the Spiritual, should introduce itself into the Rational, and thus into the Scientific, and should adapt it to itself; and, unless this order is observed, there is never any wisdom.

1476. The order is . . . that the Celestial inflows into the Spiritual, the Spiritual into the Rational, and this into the Scientific. When there is this order, then the Spiritual is adapted by the Celestial, the Rational by the Spiritual, and the Scientific by the Rational. The Scientific in general then becomes an ultimate vessel; or, what is the same, scientifics in special and in particular become ultimate vessels, which correspond to rational things, rational things to spiritual ones, and spiritual things to celestial ones. When there is this order, then the Celestial cannot be violated. Otherwise it is violated.

1480. That the knowledge of Knowledges is very pleasing to itself. Sig.

— For knowledge is such in childhood: for it is as it were innate in knowledge, because it is innate in man, that first of all it pleases for no other end than for the sake of knowing. Every man is such; his spirit is very greatly delighted with knowing . . . it is his food, with which he is supported and refreshed . . . This food . . . is communicated to the external man, to the end that the external man may be adapted to the internal.

—<sup>2</sup>. But these foods succeed one another in the following order . . . From this again there is a celestial and spiritual food still lower, which is that of reason and of the derivative knowledge. On this live good Spirits. . . Hence it is evident why and how knowledge is very pleasing to itself; for it is circumstanced as are appetite and taste; therefore, also, eating, with man, corresponds to scientifics in the World of Spirits; and the appetite and taste itself, to the desire for knowledges.

1484. 'A woman'=truth; here, the truth which is in knowledges; with the deliciousnesses of which the Lord was taken in His childhood.

1485. That scientifics were multiplied with the Lord. Sig. . . It is here predicated of knowledge, which is signified by 'Pharaoh,' that it 'did well to Abram,' that is, to the Lord when a child; and this . . . for the sake of intellectual truth, which it longed for.

1486. 'He had flock and herd, and asses, and servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses, and camels'=all things in general which are of scientifics. . . In general, these=all things which are of the knowledge of Knowledges, and of scientifics. The scientifics, regarded in themselves, are 'the asses and servants'; the pleasures of them, are 'the maid-servants and she-asses' . . . All things whatever with the external man are nothing else than things of service . . . So also all scientifics, which are exclusively of the external man; for they are procured from earthly and worldly things through sensuous things, in order that they may be of service to the interior or rational man . . . Scientifics, therefore, are the ultimate or outermost things, in which are terminated the interior things in order; and, as they are the ultimate and outermost things, above all other things they must be things of service. Everyone may know, if he reflects, to what things scientifics may be of service . . . Everything scientific must be for the sake of use, and this is its service.

1487. That the scientifics were destroyed. Sig.

— 'Pharaoh'=knowledge in general, consequently the scientifics which are of knowledge.

— This is the case with scientifics [that is, that they are destroyed]. They are procured in childhood for no other end than that of knowing: with the Lord, from the deliciousnesses and the affection of truth. The scientifics which are procured in childhood are very many, but they are disposed by the Lord into order, in order that they may serve for use; first, in order that he may think; afterwards, in order that through thought they may be of use; and finally, in order that he may become use, that is, that his very life may consist in use, and may be a life of uses. These things are performed by the scientifics which he imbibes in childhood: without them the external man can never be conjoined with the internal . . . When the man becomes use . . . then the scientifics, which had served for the first use, in order that he might become rational, are destroyed, because they serve it no longer; and so on. These are the things which are here meant by that 'Jehovah smote Pharaoh with great plagues.'

1488. (Pharaoh's) 'house'=the scientifics which are gathered together. To gather scientifics together, and by means of them to build the external man . . . is circumstanced not unlike the building of a house. Ill.

1489. The case is this: unless the scientifics which in childhood have performed the use of making the man rational, are destroyed, so that they are as nothing, truth can never be conjoined with what is celestial. These first scientifics are for the most part earthly, corporeal, and worldly. However Divine may be the precepts which a child imbibes, he still has no other idea concerning them than from such scientifics; and therefore so long as these lowest scientifics adhere . . . his mind cannot be elevated. With the Lord in like manner . . .

[A.] 1491. The knowledge itself, or the scientifics themselves, which the Lord imbibed when a child, are here called 'Pharaoh.' Thus it is knowledge itself which thus addresses the Lord, that is, Jehovah (does so) by means of knowledge. . . Taking notice comes by means of knowledge . . .

1492. The affection which is in these words, is as it were the indignation of knowledge, and the Lord's sorrow . . . because thus were destroyed the scientifics which He had imbibed with delight.

1495. From these things it is evident that when the Lord as a child imbibed scientifics, He first of all knew—nosset—no otherwise than that the scientifics were solely for the sake of the intellectual man, that is, in order that He might Know truths from them; but it was afterwards disclosed that they were in order for Him to arrive at celestial things; and this took place to prevent celestial things from being violated . . . When man is being instructed, there is a progression from scientifics to rational truths; further to intellectual truths; and finally to celestial truths . . . If the procedure is made from scientifics and rational truths to celestial truths, without the media of intellectual truths, what is celestial is violated . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The order is for the Celestial to inflow into the Spiritual and adapt it to itself; for the Spiritual thus to inflow into the Rational and adapt it to itself; and for the Rational thus to inflow into the Scientific and adapt it to itself. When man is being instructed in his first childhood, then there is indeed a like order, but it appears . . . that progression is made from scientifics to rational things; from these to spiritual things; and thus at last to celestial things . . .

— (For in itself the Scientific and Rational is dead, and that it seems to live, it has from the interior life which inflows.

—<sup>3</sup>. This may be evident from the thought and faculty of judging; in these lie hidden all the arcana of the analytical art and science . . . 2004<sup>2</sup>.

1499. That scientifics left the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

1500. That scientifics left the truths which were conjoined with celestial things. Sig. and Ex.

1536. There is here described the state of the external man such as it was in childhood, when it was first imbued with scientifics and Knowledges . . . Tr.

1542. There are two things with man which cause that he cannot become celestial . . . The one which belongs to his intellectual part is the empty scientifics which he imbibes in childhood and youth . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord . . . was informed like another man, He also had to learn scientifics, which is represented by the sojourn of Abram in Egypt; and that empty scientifics at last left Him, is represented by that 'Pharaoh commanded the men upon him, and sent him away, and his wife, and all things which he had.' 1543.

1557<sup>2</sup>. The Angels know—norunt—and acknowledge that all their knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom, are as nothing relatively to the infinite [knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom] of the Lord; thus that it is ignorance.

—<sup>2</sup>. The holiness of ignorance . . . consists in the acknowledgment that he knows nothing from himself, and that the things which he does not know, relatively to those which he does know, are infinite; and especially in his regarding scientific and intellectual things as of small account relatively to celestial things . . .

1589<sup>2</sup>. There are three things which constitute the external man; namely, the Rational, the Scientific, and the external Sensuous. The Rational is interior; the Scientific is exterior; this Sensuous is outermost.

— As the Scientific applies itself to the Rational, and is its Instrumental, it follows that the affection inflows also into the Scientific, and disposes it.

1594<sup>2</sup>. The Intellectual and the Rational can perceive what and of what quality the Scientific is; but not contrariwise.

1597. 'Lot dwelt in the cities of the plain' = the external man, that he was in scientifics. . . 'Cities' = doctrinal things, which in themselves are nothing else than scientifics, when predicated of the external man separated from the internal.

1598. 'And he spread his tent even to Sodom' . . . By these words are signified scientifics from cupidities . . .

1600. The cupidities to which scientifics extended themselves. Sig.

— 'Men'—*vir*i, here, = scientifics, because they are predicated of the external man when separated from the internal.

— Scientifics are said to extend themselves to cupidities when they are learned for no other end than that one may become great . . . All scientifics are for the sake of the end that the man may become rational, and thus wise, and that he may thus be of service to the internal man.

1713<sup>2</sup>. With the exterior man there are both affections and scientifics; the former are from the goods of the interior man, and the latter are from the truths of the same. When they are actuated so that they agree with the interior man, they are said 'to serve,' and 'obey.'

1718<sup>2</sup>. Properly speaking, the external man is constituted of the scientifics which are of the memory, and the affections which are of the love with which the man is imbued . . .

1759. The speech of celestial Spirits . . . cannot be adapted to any word . . . in which there is an idea from what is scientific . . .

1783<sup>2</sup>. He who places everything in human wisdom, or in knowledges, to him heavenly wisdom appears as an obscure nothing.

1798<sup>2</sup>. What is doctrinal separated from love or charity never makes the internal of the Church; for what is doctrinal is only knowledge, which is of the memory, which exists with the worst . . .

1890. The conception of the Lord's first Rational by the influx of the internal man into the affection of knowledges of the external. Tr. The affection of knowledges of the external man is the Egyptian handmaid Hagar. 1895.

1901<sup>2</sup>. This intellectual truth . . . inflows through an internal way . . . it is like a kind of light which illuminates, and gives the faculty of knowing, thinking, and understanding.

1902. If man were imbued with no hereditary evil, the Rational would be born immediately . . . and through the Rational would be born the Scientific; so that man would have with him all the Rational, and all the Scientific, at the moment of his coming into the world; for this would be according to the order of influx; as may be concluded from the fact, that all animals whatever are born into all the Scientific which is necessary and conduces to their food, protection, habitation, and procreation, because their nature is according to order. What [then] would not man [be born into], if order had not been destroyed with him; for he alone is born into no knowledge. The cause of this Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. This is the reason why the Rational of man is to be formed . . . by means of scientifics and Knowledges insinuated through the senses . . . and thus in inverted order. Tr.

1904<sup>1</sup>. Man has no idea about his internal things; for he makes both the Rational and the Intellectual to consist in the Scientific; and does not know that they are distinct; and in fact so distinct, that the Intellectual can exist without the Rational, and also the Rational without the Scientific . . .

1911<sup>5</sup>. In proportion as the Rational thinks from scientifics originating from sensuous things . . . it the less apprehends intellectual truths.

1928. That that truth was from the things which proceed from scientifics. Sig.

—, 'Shur'=such a Scientific as is as yet in the wilderness; that is, as has not yet attained life. Truths from scientifics are said to attain life, when they adjoin or associate themselves to truths into which inflows the Celestial of love . . .

1941<sup>2</sup>. 'Thickets'=scientifics and pleasures.

2049<sup>9</sup>. Concerning Pharaoh, by whom are signified knowledges in general.

—, By 'the trees of Eden, with which they descended into the lower earth,' are also signified knowledges, but the knowledges of the Knowledges of faith.

2145<sup>9</sup>. The more the Most Ancients were in scientifics from the objects of hearing and sight, the lower were their perceptions . . .

2184<sup>9</sup>. The truth of the Natural is what is scientific, which favours the delight which is perceived from charity.

2196<sup>2</sup>. Human rational truth does not apprehend Divine things . . . for this truth communicates with the scientifics which are in the natural man; and, in proportion as from these it views the things which are above itself, it does not acknowledge them . . .

2290. Infants (there) have with them only the faculty of knowing . . .

2336<sup>8</sup>. 'The hoofs of the horses'=scientifics perverting truth.

2388<sup>2</sup>. It is evil of life which hinders good from being received in the truths which are with man in his memory or knowledge.

2400<sup>9</sup>. The truth they teach takes root no deeper than knowledge of the memory alone is wont to do . . .

2425<sup>2</sup>. They do indeed suppose that they know; but from truth, thus from knowledge . . .

2429<sup>3</sup>. For anyone to have truth in himself, he must not only know it . . .

2439. 'Zoar'=the affection of the good of knowledge; that is, the affection of truth.

2471. To the exterior memory . . . belong . . . also the scientifics which are of the world.

2476<sup>2</sup>. For exterior things; namely, scientific, worldly, and corporeal things, are adapted to man . . . while he is in the world.

2480. As men after death are in the interior memory . . . they who have been pre-eminently in knowledges cannot bring forth anything from their scientifics . . . But whatever they have imbued . . . by means of knowledges—as it has formed their Rational—they bring forth into use . . .

2492<sup>2</sup>. They who have wanted to penetrate into Divine arcana by scientifics . . . with these (the callosity) appears darksome . . .

2504<sup>2</sup>. There are in general the intellectual things of faith, the rational things of faith, and the scientific things of faith; they proceed in this order from interiors to exteriors . . . They are as what is prior to what is posterior . . . It appears to man as if the Scientific of faith were first . . . but the Intellectual continually inflows into the Rational, and this into the Scientific . . . All these things are called spiritual things, which are thus distinguished into degrees . . .

2508. The heavenly marriage itself is solely between Divine good and Divine truth; hence with man there is conceived the Intellectual, the Rational, and the Scientific; for, without conception from the heavenly marriage, man can never be imbued with understanding, reason, or knowledge.

2531<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is evident how important it is that interior truths be known and received. These truths can indeed be known, but never received, except by those who are in love or in faith in the Lord . . .

2538<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as there is anything . . . of the Sensuous, the Scientific, and the Rational, from which it is believed that it is so, there is no doctrine; but in proportion as (these three) are removed, that is, that it is believed without them, doctrine lives; for in the same proportion the Divine inflows . . . But it is one thing to believe from the Rational, the Scientific, and the Sensuous, or to consult them in order that it may be believed; and it is another to confirm and strengthen that which is believed by rational, scientific, and sensuous things. Tr.

2541. 'He called his servants'=rational and scientific things.

—, There are in the man who is . . . a Kingdom of the Lord, celestial, spiritual, rational, scientific, and sensuous things. These are in subordination among each other . . . Scientifics are subordinate to rational things; and sensuous things are subordinate to scientifics . . .

[A.2541]<sup>2</sup>. The Angels perceive (in these words) how the Lord reduced rational and scientific things to obedience; and indeed so, that He did not reduce to obedience the rational and scientific things themselves, but the affections which rose up against the celestial and spiritual things of doctrine; for when these have been subjugated, rational and scientific things have also been reduced to obedience; and at the same time into order.

2543<sup>e</sup>. The zeal (in the following verse) is in favour of doctrine, that it might be uncontaminated by anything rational and scientific.

2546. Because the Rational and Scientific wanted to rise up and enter, and thus have something in common with the doctrine of faith, which is Divine. Sig.

2557<sup>2</sup>. For it is known that man is born into no knowledge . . . but only into the faculty of receiving it . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. For if spiritual truth inflowed from within, as good does, man would be born into . . . the whole Scientific, so that he would have no need to learn anything.

2559. When (the Lord) left the Scientific and the derivative appearances, with their delights. Sig.

2567. By natural truths are meant scientifics of every kind . . .

2568<sup>3</sup>. They who think from a negative principle, the more they consult rational, scientific, and philosophical things, the more they cast themselves into darkness . . .

— . But they who think from an affirmative principle can confirm themselves by whatever rational, scientific, and philosophical things they can . . .

2577<sup>2</sup>. It appears . . . that man becomes rational through sensuous and scientific things; but this is a fallacy. Good from the Lord constantly inflows through man's Rational, and meets and adopts to itself scientifics; and in proportion to the quantity of them which it can adopt, and rightly dispose, the man becomes rational.

2584<sup>e</sup>. When the doctrine of faith . . . is regarded from truths Divine . . . then each and all things, both rational and scientific, confirm it. (But) when it is regarded from human things, that is, from reason and knowledge, nothing of good and of truth is conceived . . .

2588<sup>2</sup>. Those think from a negative principle, who believe nothing unless they are convinced by rational and scientific things, nay, by sensuous things . . . (These) never believe . . . But those who are in the affirmative, that is, who believe that they are truths because the Lord has said so . . . are constantly confirmed, and their ideas are enlightened and strengthened by rational, and scientific, and even by sensuous things; for man has light from no other source than through rational and scientific things . . . —<sup>4</sup>, Examps.

—<sup>5</sup>. (They can confirm this) scientifically, by many things; as that truths shun evils . . . —<sup>6</sup>.

—<sup>8</sup>. From these examples it is evident, what it is to enter from truths into rational and scientific things; and what to enter from scientific and rational things into truths; namely, that the former is according to order, but the latter contrary to order . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. To cultivate the Rational by means of knowledges is never denied; but it is forbidden to harden one's self against the truths of faith . . . It treats much of these things in the internal sense of the Word. Ill.

—<sup>10</sup>. On those who by means of scientific and rational things want to enter into the doctrinal things of faith and into Divine things, and thence are insane. Fully ill.

—<sup>13</sup>. On those who from the doctrine of faith enter into rational and scientific things, and thence are wise. Ill.

2675. The life of the exterior man is the affection of knowledges . . . With those who are becoming spiritual, good and truth are implanted by the Lord in the affection of knowledges, in order that they may want to know and learn what is good and true . . . For the affection of knowledges is the mother through which the Rational in which is the Spiritual is born.

2702<sup>15</sup>. 'To come towards the sea' = to scientifics; 'the sea' = a collection of them.

2704<sup>2</sup>. When they are coming into a state of enlightenment . . . they are in the affection of knowing and learning truths . . .

2718. The affection of knowledges which is possessed by the man of the Spiritual Church. Sig. and Ex.

— . The good with the man of the Spiritual Church . . . is illuminated by the Lord's Divine Human, from which illumination there comes forth in his Rational the affection of truth, and in his Natural the affection of knowledges . . . By knowledges are not meant such knowledges as there are with the learned, but everything scientific which, from experience and through hearing, he has been able to imbue from civil life, from doctrine, and from the Word.

2719. It now treats of the doctrine of faith . . . that human rational things from scientifics were adjoined to it.

2720<sup>4</sup>. The doctrine of faith, that scientifics wanted to attribute it to themselves. Sig.

2726. That the Lord adjoined to the doctrine of faith many things from the knowledge of human Knowledges. Sig.

2761. 'The serpent (biting the horse's heels)' = one who reasons from sensuous and scientific things about Divine arcana.

2762<sup>4</sup>. As by the sea are signified knowledges in general, they gave horses to the god of the sea.

— . When they were describing the rise of knowledges from the Intellectual, they feigned a flying horse which with his hoof broke open a fountain where there were maidens who were knowledges (or the sciences).

2763<sup>3</sup>. This knowledge (or science) of correspondences . . .

2781. 'The camel'=the Scientific in general; and 'the ass,' the Scientific in particular. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. Natural good is the delight flowing forth from charity and faith; natural truth is their Scientific.

— . They are called 'the beasts of the south' who are in the Knowledges of good and truth; but who make them not of life, but of knowledge . . .

2826<sup>8</sup>. 'The spirit of knowledge and of the fear of Jehovah' (Is.xi.2)=the Divine love of truth.

—<sup>12</sup>. 'Wisdom and knowledge' (Is.xxxiii.6)=the good of faith conjoined with its truth.

2831. 'Caught in a thicket'=in the natural Scientific. . . As to the spiritual being caught in the natural Scientific as to the truths of faith, the case is this . . . They who have no perception of good and truth must needs be confirmed by scientifics . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. That 'a thicket'=the natural Scientific; that is, that Scientific which adheres to the exterior memory. Ill.

— . For the human Rational is founded in its scientifics.

—<sup>7</sup>. To stick in scientifics, and thence to regard spiritual, celestial, and Divine things. Sig.

— . To reason from scientifics. Sig.

—<sup>8</sup>. Those who have faith in the things which they hatch from their scientifics. Sig.

— . Those things which are not dictated by the Word, but by the scientific proprium. Sig.

—<sup>9</sup>. That which ascends from what is scientific into Divine arcana . . . vastates the Church. Sig.

—<sup>10</sup>. The reason scientifics in the Word are called 'thickets-perplexæ' is that they are relatively such, especially when they are breathed upon by the cupidities of the love of self and of the world, and by principles of falsity. It is celestial and spiritual love which disposes into order the scientifics which are of the exterior memory; whereas the love of self and of the world perverts order, and disturbs all things which are therein. . . Moreover, the things which are of the exterior memory, where scientifics are, relatively to those things which are in the interior memory, where rational things are, are in a thicket, or as in a thick forest . . .

2832. That the spiritual . . . are entangled in the natural Scientific with all power as to truth, and are thus deprived of the power to perceive truths. Sig. For the more anyone consults natural scientifics . . . as to those things which are of the truths of faith, the more he loses the light of truth; and, with the light, also the life, of truth. Everyone may know this from experience . . . from those who say that they can believe nothing, unless they apprehend that it is so through either sensuous or scientific things. If you explore them . . . you will find that they believe nothing at all . . .

2850. 'As the sand which is upon the sea shore'=a multitude of corresponding scientifics. 'The sea'=scientifics in general, or a congregation of them; and 'sand'=scientifics in special and particular. Scientifics are compared to 'sand,' because the little stones of which sand consists, in the internal sense, are scientifics.

. . . When the things of the rational man, namely, the goods and truths of Knowledges, agree with the things which are of the natural man, namely, with scientifics, so that they make a one, or mutually confirm one another, then they correspond.

2992<sup>9</sup>. The Angels know each and all things which are in the body . . . 2993, Ex.

3013. That Divine truth might be conjoined with the Divine good of His rational; and this by the common way from the natural man, namely, from scientifics, Knowledges, and doctrinals . . . Tr.

3020<sup>2</sup>. The things in the natural mind are all scientifics, thus also all Knowledges of every kind; in a word, each and all things which are of the exterior or corporeal memory . . .

3048<sup>2</sup>. For the Rational as to truth can never be born and perfected without scientifics and Knowledges.

—<sup>4</sup>. The vanity of the knowledges which are not for use. Sig.

—<sup>5</sup>. General scientifics are those which comprehend in them many particular ones, and these singular ones; and form in general the natural man as to his intellectual part.

3049<sup>2</sup>. General scientifics are not good in themselves, nor alive; but the affection of them causes them to be good and alive; for they are then for the sake of use. No one is affected with any scientific, or truth, except for the sake of use; use makes it good. But such as the use is, such is the good.

3052. Scientifics and doctrinals are distinguished from each other in this: that doctrinals are from scientifics. Doctrinals regard use, and are procured by reflection from scientifics.

3054. The holy arrangement of general scientifics. Sig.

3058<sup>8</sup>. The 'drawers of water' . . . represented those who continually desire to know truths, but for no other end than that they may know . . .

3068. The submission of scientifics. Sig.

— . For every scientific is a vessel of truth . . . A scientific without truth is an empty vessel . . . whereas a scientific in which is truth . . . is a full vessel. The affection which is of love is that which conjoins them . . .

3071. The enlightenment thence of all the scientifics in the natural man. Sig. 3094.

3074. There is here summarily described the process, how truth appears by means of scientifics, and is elevated from them, out of the natural man into the rational, and becomes rational truth; in the Lord Divine truth; namely . . . that by the influx of the Divine love into the Human . . . the scientifics which were in the natural man were enlightened, and the truths became manifest which were to be elevated into the Rational . . .

3084. Relatively to truth, the Scientific which is of the natural man is exterior . . . and therefore, relatively to truth, the Scientific is called 'a covering,' and also 'a garment.'

3086. That Divine good inflowed into the natural man, that is, into the scientifics, Knowledge, and doctrinals therein; for these are of the natural man in so far as they are in its memory. Tr.

[A.] 3102. The acknowledgment of truth Divine from the enlightenment in general scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

3114. If such food were to fail the natural man, namely, to know, he would not subsist.

3128<sup>2</sup>. For all good inflows by an internal way . . . into the Rational of man; and through this into his Scientific, even into the sensuous Scientific, and by illustration there causes truths to be seen. —<sup>3</sup>.

3164. 'Vessels of silver' = in special, scientifics; for these are recipients of truth.

3175<sup>2</sup>. But so long as truth is in the memory only, it is only knowledge.

3190. The Intellectual elevated above natural scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

3203. The separation of the affection of truth from the scientifics in the natural man on the perception of rational good. Sig. and Ex.

3264. The birth of the spiritual man from the Divine influx into the affection of knowledges. Sig.

— Divine truth, to which is subordinated the affection of knowledges and of the Knowledge of truth. Sig.

3267<sup>3</sup>. He can indeed know truth, but it is not implanted in his life.

3283<sup>9</sup>. When the Rational looks . . . into the scientifics of the natural man, it is as if [it were looking] into a plain beneath itself.

3293. The truth in the Natural is all that which is of knowledge, and is called scientific . . . [but] what is scientific by itself, abstractedly from the delight which is of affection, is not anything . . . whereas the delight . . . without what is scientific is something, but only what is vital, such as is with infants. Therefore, in order that the Natural may be human, it must consist of both; the one is perfected by the other . . .

3301<sup>2</sup>. The state of the celestial man is that he is in good, and from good knows all truths; and he never thinks and speaks . . . from scientifics about good.

3309. 'Esau was a man knowing (or skilled) in hunting' (Gen.xxv.27) = the good of life from sensuous and scientific truths. . . 'A skilled man' is predicated of the affection of truth, or of those who are in the affection of truth.

3316. 'Pottage' = a heap of scientifics badly made up . . . (which) was amended by spiritual truth from the Lord. Sig.

3321<sup>2</sup>. For in the natural man there are scientifics which are in great measure derived from the fallacies of the senses; and which . . . he still believes to be truths.

3368<sup>4</sup>. As Divine truth cannot inflow immediately into scientifics . . .

3388<sup>9</sup>. It is not enough for a man to know that it is, but he also wants to know what it is . . .

3394<sup>2</sup>. The celestial perceive Divine good and truth . . . even in the Natural, that is, in scientific and sensuous things.

3402<sup>3</sup>. To know good and truth, or to keep them in the memory . . . is not to have good and truth; but to be affected with them from the heart.

3416. There are internal truths everywhere in the Word; but such as are in the knowledge of Knowledge, and not at the same time in life . . . do not see these truths . . .

3417<sup>3</sup>. Thus they who are in the knowledge of Knowledge, and not in the life of charity, cannot know that there is any delight except that which results from pre-eminence . . .

3420. Those are in the knowledge of Knowledge who are in the doctrinals of faith, and do not want to know the truths of Knowledge or of doctrinals. (These) truths are those which are of life . . .

3518<sup>2</sup>. When a child is first being instructed, he is affected with the desire of knowing . . . from a certain connate pleasure . . . As he grows up, he is affected with the desire of knowing for the sake of some end, as that he may excel others . . . But when he is to be regenerated, from the delight of truth; and when he is being regenerated . . . from the love of truth; and afterwards from the love of good.

3519. The things in the Natural which relate to the . . . understanding there, are scientifics.

3539<sup>2</sup>. After death, man has with him . . . the things of his external man . . . even the scientifics.

3570<sup>6</sup>. To appetite and relish correspond the desire and affection of knowing truth; and to foods correspond scientifics and Knowledge. . . The soul, which is the good of the Rational, gives to desire and be affected with the things which are of knowledge and doctrine.

3671<sup>2</sup>. To understand good and truth, and to will them, is of the Rational . . . but to know them, and do them, is of the Natural. The scientifics and works themselves are as ground; and when the man is affected with scientifics which confirm good and truth, and still more when he apperceives delight in doing them, then the seeds there are as in their ground, and grow . . .

3701<sup>2</sup>. They who are being regenerated do not learn such things barely as knowledges, but as life.

3726<sup>2</sup>. Good is the first, and truth is the last, of order. Hence it is that man ought to begin from scientifics, which are the truths of the natural man; and afterwards from doctrinals, which are the truths of the spiritual man in his Natural. Examp.

3727<sup>8</sup>. 'The hoofs of the horses' = the lowest intellectual things, such as are scientifics from mere sensuous things.

3768. That knowledge is from the Word. Sig.

— 'Droves' = the knowledge of doctrinals . . . Thus 'to make the droves drink from the well' = that from the Word is the knowledge of the doctrinals of good and truth.

— . That all the knowledge and doctrine of good and truth are from the Word. Ex.

3824<sup>2</sup>. In the natural memory are truths, both external and internal, as scientific doctrinals.

3833<sup>2</sup>. When (good has been conjoined with truth) the man begins to know innumerable things . . .

3843<sup>2</sup>. Truth . . . is then no longer brought into act from knowledge or doctrine, but from a certain delight . . .

3849. Nothing of doctrine, nor even of knowledge, can enter with man, except through the affections . . .

3905<sup>e</sup>. Truths of faith not learned for the sake of doing, but only for the sake of knowing, adjoin themselves to affections of evil and falsity; and are therefore . . . interiorly against faith.

3915<sup>2</sup>. To know these truths . . . is bare knowledge, unless there is affection . . .

3952<sup>4</sup>. The truths of the external man are the scientifics and doctrinals which he first imbibed through his parents and masters; afterwards through books; and at last by his own study . . . The scientifics which are the truths, and the delights which are the good (of the external man) are conjoined, but do not make with him the heavenly marriage . . .

4014<sup>e</sup>. The scientific and rational things with the man of the Spiritual Church. Tr.

4017<sup>2</sup>. 'Thirst' = the affection of knowing . . . truth.

4037. 'Men-servants' = scientifics, which are the truths of the natural man.

4038. General scientifics are the lower or exterior truths of good.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Natural is the middle part (between the Corporeal and the Rational); for the things which enter through sensuous things store themselves up in the Natural as in a kind of receptacle; this receptacle is the memory; the delight, etc. there pertain to the will, and are called natural goods; and the scientifics there pertain to the understanding, and are called natural truths.

4075<sup>2</sup>. How, by means of Societies of Spirits and Angels, the Lord introduced Himself into knowledge. Ex.

4096<sup>2</sup>. Let him try whether he wants to know . . .

4151<sup>7</sup>. Many can know this, but few believe it.

4154<sup>2</sup>. He who is a natural man, that is, who thinks from scientifics, knows no otherwise than that the natural things from which he thinks are the inmost things . . .

4156. (Interior natural truths which are from the Divine) in scientifics. Sig. and Ex. 4157.

—<sup>2</sup>. That scientifics are relatively gross and inordinate . . . does not appear to those who are in scientifics alone . . . They believe that in proportion as a man knows, or in proportion to his possession of knowledge, he is wise. But . . . those in the other life who . . . had been in scientifics alone, and had thence acquired the reputation of being learned, are sometimes much more stupid than those who had been skilled in no knowledges. The reason is that scientifics are indeed means of being wise, but also of being insane. To those who are in the life of good, scientifics are means of being wise; but to those who are in the life of evil, they are means of being insane; for by scientifics they confirm not only the life of evil, but also principles of falsity; and this arrogantly and with persuasion, because they believe themselves to be wiser than others . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. He does not possess the Rational who can reason from scientifics . . . It is only a fatuous lumen which produces this skill . . .

— . With him (who is truly rational) . . . light inflows from Heaven, and . . . illuminates his scientifics, so that they confirm; and moreover it disposes them into order, and into a heavenly form.

—<sup>4</sup>. Hence it may be evident that scientifics are means of being wise, and also of being insane; that is, that they are means of perfecting the Rational, and also of destroying the Rational. Therefore, they who by means of scientifics have destroyed the Rational, are in the other life more stupid than those who have been skilled in no knowledges.

—<sup>e</sup>. That scientifics are relatively gross, is evident from the fact, that they are of the natural or external man; and that the Rational, which is cultivated by means of them, is of the spiritual or internal man.

4161. Interior truths are said to be among unclean things, when they are among scientifics which do not as yet correspond, but which disagree.

4169. But to do good from truth, is to do it from knowledge . . .

4247<sup>2</sup>. For he is then not so much in the affection of knowing truth, but in the affection of doing it.

4266. Scientifics, and Knowledges, thus doctrinals (which) are in the natural or external man, that is, in his memory, and are not as yet implanted in the spiritual or internal man. Sig.

4280<sup>3</sup>. How greatly the science of correspondences excels other sciences, may be evident from the fact, that without it the Word as to the internal sense can never be known . . .

4319<sup>2</sup>. They were told that to know is not to believe. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. With those who only know . . . no heavenly light is received . . .

4345. 'The handmaids' = the affections of knowledges and of Knowledges . . . The affections of knowledges and of Knowledges are the most external; for the knowledges and Knowledges themselves are the things from which and in which are truths . . . The more exterior things are, the more general they are. Ex.

4360. Sensuous scientifics and their truths, and their submission. Sig.

— . Sensuous scientifics, which are signified by 'the handmaids,' are the scientifics of external things, which are of the world, and are thence the most general of all; and are those which enter immediately through the external senses, and are perceived by the sense itself. In these are all infants, and they serve as planes . . . for the Knowledges of spiritual things; for spiritual things are founded upon natural ones, and are represented in them.

[A.] 4383<sup>2</sup>. Although, relatively to man, the Angels are in wisdom so great, that the things which they know and perceive are unutterable, they confess that they know only what are relatively the most general things, and that the things which they do not know are indefinite . . .

4404<sup>9</sup>. The sense of taste corresponds to the affection of knowing.

4459<sup>4</sup>. That such is the case in Heaven they do not at all know; and, so long as they are in externals alone, they do not want to know; nay, they cannot know . . . —5.

4503<sup>4</sup>. Those who by means of scientifics hatch falsities. Sig.

—5. Those who by means of knowledges are insane. Sig.

4508. 'All their wealth (they took captive)' = all the scientifics which they had acquired (they deprived them of and perverted). 4511.

— . Spiritual wealth . . . consists of scientifics, so far as they are known . . .

4530<sup>2</sup>. 'To go up from Egypt to Canaan' . . . = that the Scientific is to serve for apprehending the things of the Lord's Kingdom . . . and as scientifics are lower, or, what is the same, exterior things . . . it is said 'to go up' from Egypt . . .

4552. For the lowest of the Natural is relatively entangled and fallacious, in proportion as it derives its Scientific and pleasure from the sensuous things of the body.

4585<sup>3</sup>. Those who are not in any desire to know the things of eternal life . . . Because the cares of the world and of the body possess all their thought, and take away all desire to know anything else . . .

4598. Progression towards interior things . . . is not progression into scientifics; for this progression often takes place without any progression towards interior things, and frequently with retrogression. (Continued under Know—cognoscere, here.)

4612<sup>3</sup>. He can indeed know the things which are of light or of Heaven, but he cannot be affected with them, except in so far as they conduce to his getting honours and wealth . . .

4618<sup>2</sup>. It is the same with the Rational: unless there is a reception of its light in the Natural, its sight perishes; for the scientifics in the Natural are the objects of the sight of the Rational; and, if these objects are contrary to the light . . . the sight of the Rational perishes; for it cannot inflow into things contrary to itself.

4638<sup>10</sup>. The time and state of acceptance which is unknown to man, is signified by, 'Ye know not the day nor the hour in which the Son of Man will come' (Matt. xxv. 13).

4648<sup>3</sup>. Truths from scientifics. Sig.

4682<sup>2</sup>. 'Servants' = those who know.

4715<sup>4</sup>. 'Valley' = scientific and sensuous things—which are lower things—by means of which they have perverted truths.

4748<sup>3</sup>. Interior truths are conclusions from exterior truths, or scientifics; for the scientifics of the natural man are means which serve for concluding about, and thus for viewing, interior things; in like manner as any one views the mind of another in his countenance . . .

4749<sup>2</sup>. The scientifics from which are interior truths, which are signified by the Ishmaelites carrying spices, resin, and stacte, on their camels, are such as are not of the Church, such as are with the gentiles. These truths, from these scientifics, are no otherwise amended and healed than by means of the scientifics of the genuine Church, thus by instruction in them. Sig.

4760. The Divine truth brought to scientifics to consult them. Sig. To consult scientifics about Divine truth, is to see from them whether it is so; but this is done in one way by those who are in the affirmative . . . and in another way by those who are in the negative. When the former consult scientifics, they confirm the truth by them, and thus strengthen faith; but when the latter consult scientifics, they cast themselves more into falsities . . . Moreover, this is according to the intellectual faculty of each man: if those consult scientifics who have not an interior view, they do not see the confirmation of truth in them; and therefore they are carried away by scientifics into the negative: whereas they who have an interior view, see the confirmations; if not otherwise, still by means of correspondences. Examp.

—4. The reason the learned . . . see Divine truths less than the simple, is that they consult scientifics . . . from the negative, and thereby destroy with themselves the view from what is interior; and then they no longer see anything from the light of Heaven, but from the light of the world; for scientifics are in the light of the world; and if they are not illuminated by the light of Heaven, they induce darkness.

4788. That those who were in some truth of simple good consulted scientifics. Sig. . . For those who are in the truth of simple good for the most part suffer themselves to be led away by the fallacies of the senses; thus by the scientifics which are from them. —4.

4789. 'To Potiphar, the chamberlain of Pharaoh' = the interior things of scientifics. 4965, Ex.

4792. Spiritual food is knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom . . .

4793. As the taste corresponds to the perception and affection of knowing, understanding, and being wise; and the life of man is in this affection; no Spirit or Angel is permitted to inflow into man's taste . . .

—4. By these arts they pervert the scientifics with man, and apply only those which favour filthy cupidities. Such obsessions cannot be avoided, unless the man is in the affection of good, and thence in faith in the Lord.

4794. The reason a Spirit has not taste . . . is lest that sense should turn him away from the desire of knowing and being wise; thus from spiritual appetite.

4844<sup>10</sup>. From affection . . . to lead those who were in knowledge through good to truths. Rep.

4882<sup>2</sup>. The Angels are in this truth, not only by knowledge, but also by perception.

4965. The interior things of scientifics are those which approach more nearly to spiritual things, and are the applications of scientifics to heavenly things ; for these are what the internal man sees, when the external man sees only the scientifics in the external form.

4966. It is to be known, that the scientifics of the ancients were quite different from the scientifics of the present day. The scientifics of the ancients . . . treated of the correspondences of things in the natural world with things in the Spiritual World. The scientifics which at this day are called philosophical things, such as are the Aristotelian ones and the like, were unknown to them. (Examps. of the scientifics of the ancients.)

—<sup>2</sup>. Parnassus they placed on a hill beneath, and thereby understood scientifics. . . They called the sciences maidens.

—<sup>3</sup>. From these things it is evident of what quality were the scientifics of the ancients ; and that these scientifics led them into the Knowledge of things spiritual and celestial.

—<sup>4</sup>. The scientifics which have succeeded in their place, and which are properly called philosophical things, rather withdraw the mind from knowing such things, because they can be applied also to confirm falsities ; and, moreover, when truths are confirmed by means of them, they cast the mind into darkness, because most of them are bare words . . . which are apprehended by few, and concerning which even those few dispute.

—<sup>5</sup>. The Gentiles had those scientifics from the Ancient Church . . . These were the scientifics which, in the genuine sense, are signified by 'Egypt.'

4967. For every scientific with man is natural, because it is in his natural man, even every scientific concerning things spiritual and celestial. The reason is that man sees these things in the Natural, and from the Natural : the things which he does not see from the Natural, he does not apprehend. But the regenerate man . . . sees these things in one way, and the unregenerate man . . . in another : with the former, scientifics are enlightened by the light of Heaven ; but with the latter not so, but by the light which inflows through Spirits who are in falsity and evil . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. (Thus) the genuine Scientific is natural truth ; for every genuine scientific . . . is a natural truth.

4973. Scientifics are the truths of the natural mind, which are said to be 'in their house,' when they are conjoined with good there. 5079.

4976. That the Scientific was appropriated to its own good. Sig.

— 'To minister' is predicated of scientifics ; for by 'a minister,' and 'a servant,' in the Word, is signified the Scientific, or natural truth, because this is subordinate to good. The Scientific, relatively to the delight of the natural man ; or, what is the same, natural truth relatively to its good ; is circumstanced exactly as is . . . drink relatively to food . . . 5023.

4977. Good applying itself to the Scientific, or to natural truth. Sig.

5079<sup>2</sup>. There are interiors and exteriors of the Natural ; the interiors of the Natural are scientifics and their affections . . .

5081. For man is born into no knowledge . . .

5080<sup>2</sup>. The sensuous who have studied scientifics, rarely apprehend anything about the things of Heaven . . .

5114<sup>2</sup>. Hence, from the scientifics which have been born from the things he has heard and seen in the world . . . a man has intelligence and wisdom . . .

5157<sup>2</sup>. By sensuous things are meant those scientifics and those delights which have been insinuated through the five senses of the body into a man's memory and its concupiscences ; and which together constitute his exterior Natural, from which he is called a sensuous man. These scientifics are subject to the intellectual part . . . and are what are represented by 'the butler,' and are retained . . . The reason they were retained, is that for a time they could agree with intellectual things . . .

5168<sup>2</sup>. Sensuous and scientific things are only media into which the good called 'charity' inflows, and presents itself in a form, and unfolds itself for every use. But scientifics, even if they were the very truths of faith themselves, without this good in them, are nothing but scales among dirt, which fall off . . .

5192. The seven years of plenty in Egypt are the scientifics to which the good from the Celestial of the Spiritual can be applied. The seven years of famine are [those] of the following state, when there is nothing good in the scientifics except what is from the Divine Celestial of the Spiritual . . .

5196<sup>2</sup>. The Nile represented the sensuous things subject to the intellectual part, thus the scientifics which are from them ; for these are the ultimates of the spiritual things of the Lord's Kingdom.

5201. 'The sedge,' or larger grass which is near rivers, = the scientifics which are of the natural man. That 'grass,' or 'herb,' = scientifics, is clear from the Word. 'To pasture in the sedge,' therefore, = to be instructed in scientifics. For scientifics are media, and are as it were mirrors, in which the image of interior things presents itself . . .

5212. 'Seven ears ascending on one stalk' = the scientifics which are of the Natural conjoined together.

— The reason 'ears' = scientifics, is that 'corn' = the good of the Natural ; for scientifics are the containants of natural good, as ears are of corn ; for as in general all truths are the vessels of good, so also are scientifics, for these are the lowest truths. The lowest truths, or the truths of the exterior Natural, are called scientifics, because they are in man's natural or external memory, and because they partake for the most part of the light of the world, and hence may be presented and represented before others by forms of words, or by ideas formed into words by such things as are of the world and its light. But the things which are in the interior memory are not called scientifics, but truths, in so far as they partake of the light of Heaven.

— The scientifics which are here signified by 'ears' are the scientifics of the Church, concerning which, Refs.

—<sup>4</sup>. The comparison with grass, the ear, and the corn involves the rebirth of man through scientifics, the truths of faith, and the goods of charity, in Mark iv.26-29 . . . 'The grass' (or blade)=the first Scientific; 'the ear'=the Scientific of truth thence . . .

[A.] 5213. 'Fat,' when predicated of (these) scientifics, =their receptibility of the good of faith . . . For scientifics are vessels . . . And 'good,' when predicated of (these) scientifics, =their receptibility of the good of charity . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. There are very many scientifics into which the things which are of faith and charity can be applied; as all the scientifics of the Church . . . consequently, all the scientifics which are true concerning correspondences, representatives, significatives, influx, order, intelligence, and wisdom, the affections; nay, all the truths of interior and exterior nature, both visible and invisible, because these correspond to spiritual truths.

5214. 'Seven thin ears'=scientifics of no use . . . Scientifics of no use are those which have no other end than glory and pleasure . . .

5215. 'Parched with the east wind'=that the scientifics are full of cupidities. —<sup>2</sup>.

5217. That the scientifics of no use exterminated the good scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

5287<sup>2</sup>. In the Word, a distinction is made between 'wisdom,' 'intelligence,' and 'knowledge;' and by 'wisdom' is meant that which is from good, by 'intelligence' that which is from truth, and by 'knowledge' both of them in the Natural of man. III.

5293. That which conduces to use is to know what is good and true; what is of use is to will and do them . . . —<sup>2</sup>.

5321<sup>3</sup>. 'Chariots'=the doctrinals of good and truth, and also the scientifics which are of doctrinals . . . —<sup>10</sup>.

5326<sup>2</sup>. Thus (with the man who is being regenerated) the Natural becomes as the Spiritual; for the natural things which are therein, as the scientifics and Knowledges which derive something from the natural world, act nothing from themselves, but only stipulate that the Spiritual may act in and through the Natural, and thus naturally . . .

5373<sup>3</sup>. The case is this. When man is being regenerated as to the Natural, all goods and truths are gathered into scientifics. Those which are not in the scientifics there, are not in the Natural; for the natural mind as to that part which is subject to the Intellectual consists solely of scientifics. The scientifics which are of the Natural are the ultimates of order, and prior things must be in ultimates in order that they may come forth and appear in that sphere; and moreover all prior things tend to ultimates, as to their termini or ends, and come forth simultaneously therein, as causes do in their effects . . . The scientifics which are of the Natural are such ultimates. . . From these things it may be evident, that when the Natural is being regenerated, all interior goods and truths, which are from the Spiritual World, are gathered into scientifics, in order that they may appear.

5376. That there was desolation everywhere except in the scientifics where was the Celestial of the Spiritual. Sig.

5378. (Modest Spirits seen) who want to know all things . . . and thus to confirm themselves that it is so.

5398. In these chapters . . . it treats of the regeneration of the Natural as to the truths and goods of the Church; namely, that it is not effected by means of scientifics, but by means of influx from the Divine.

5410. To appropriate to themselves the good of truth by means of scientifics. Sig.

5414. That he wants spiritual truths, equally with all other things, to be procured by means of scientifics. Sig.

5432. The truths of faith of the Church . . . in the first age, when they are learnt, are no otherwise apprehended, and committed to memory, than as are all other scientifics; and they remain as scientifics until the man begins to view them from his own sight, and to see whether they are true; and when he has seen that they are true, until he wants to act according to them. This view, and this will, effect that they are no longer scientifics, but precepts of life . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. They who have arrived at adult age . . . and have not viewed the truths of the Church . . . from their own sight, and seen whether they are true, and who have not wanted to live according to them, retain them with themselves no otherwise than as all other scientifics; they are only in their natural memory . . .

5487. 'They filled their vessels with corn'=that the scientifics were gifted with good from truth.

5489. 'A sack,' here, in special, =what is scientific, because as a sack is a receptacle of corn, so is what is scientific a receptacle of good. That what is scientific is a receptacle of good . . . may be known from this,—the scientifics which enter into the memory are always introduced through some affection; those which are not introduced through some affection do not adhere there, but slip away. The reason is . . . that there is no life in scientifics except through affection. Hence it is evident that scientifics always have such things conjoined with them as are of affection . . . consequently some good . . . Thus the scientifics form as it were a marriage with these goods; and hence it is that when this good is excited, the scientific with which it is conjoined is also instantly excited; and, on the other hand, when the scientific is recalled, the good conjoined with it also comes forth . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that with the unregenerate, who have rejected the good of charity, the scientifics which are the truths of the Church, have adjoined to them such things as are of the love of self and of the world, thus evils. . . These scientifics, to appearance, come forth beautifully, when these loves reign universally. . . But with the regenerate, the scientifics which are the truths of the Church, have such things adjoined to them as are of love towards the neighbour, and of love to God, thus genuine goods. . . From these things it may be evident how the case is with scientifics and with truths, that they are receptacles of good.

5492. 'They lifted their provision upon their asses'=that truths were gathered into scientifics.

5495. 'To give his ass provender in the inn'=when they reflected upon the scientifics in the exterior

Natural . . . For reflection especially feeds scientifics . . . And scientifics are as it were in their inn when they are in the exterior Natural . . . When scientifics are in the exterior Natural, they communicate immediately with the external senses of the body, and . . . as it were rest upon them . . .

5510<sup>d</sup>. There are two things in the Natural, namely, scientifics, and the truths of the Church. That the Celestial of the Spiritual . . . disposed scientifics into order in the Natural, has been treated of. It now treats of the truths of the Church . . . Scientifics must be disposed into order there before the truths of the Church, because the latter are apprehended by the former; for nothing can enter the understanding of man without ideas from such scientifics as the man has acquired from infancy. Man is quite ignorant that every truth of the Church . . . is founded upon his scientifics; and that he apprehends it, retains it in the memory, and calls it forth from the memory, by means of the ideas made up from the scientifics with him . . .

5519. 'To know,' here (Gen.xlii.33)=to will.

5558. There are Spirits, who, when they want to know anything, say that it is so; thus do one after another in the Society; and then they observe whether what they say flows freely . . . Such are they who constitute the cutaneous glands . . .

5580. When the truths which were from scientifics failed. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. From these things it is evident how the case is with truths—that they are from scientifics.

5637<sup>d</sup>. Scientifics are illustrated by the light of Heaven when the man has faith in the doctrinal things which are from the Word . . .

5649<sup>d</sup>. When any Spirit who is in good . . . comes into an angelic Society, he comes at the same time into all the knowledge and intelligence belonging to the Society . . . and then he knows no otherwise than that he had known and understood it before, and from himself; but when he reflects, he apprehends that it is given him gratis by the Lord through that angelic Society.

5661. 'Not to know' (Gen.xliii.22)=not to believe.

5670. Instruction concerning the good (of scientifics). Sig. . . The good of scientifics is the delight from scientific truths; which are the most general truths which appear in natural light . . .

5700<sup>d</sup>. Scientifics are said to be in inverted order, when they abuse heavenly order to do evil . . . They who have become such, know how to reason from scientifics sharply and skilfully, because they reason from sensuous things . . .

— . When scientifics are in order, they are disposed by the Lord into the form of Heaven; but when scientifics are in inverted order they are disposed into the form of Hell; and then the falsest are in the middle, and the things which confirm them are at the sides; but truths are outside, and being outside they cannot have communication with Heaven . . .

5741. The external man a little removed, with his truths and scientifics. Sig.

to the scientifics which are of the memory, supposes that everything of man consists therein. He does not know that scientifics are the lowest things with man, and are such as are for the most part hidden away when the body dies: but the things which are in them, that is, truth and good, with their affections, remain; and also, with the evil, falsity and evil, with their affections: scientifics are as it were the body of these things. So long as a man lives in the world he has these things . . . in his scientifics; for scientifics are containants; and as scientifics contain, and as it were carry, interior things, they are signified by the asses which are used for carrying burdens.

5774. That from sensuous things, truths were brought back into scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

— . From sensuous things come forth scientifics; and from scientifics, truths. The things which enter through the senses are stored up in the memory, and thence the man concludes what is scientific, or from them perceives the Scientific which he learns: from scientifics he afterwards concludes truths, or from them perceives the truth which he learns . . . As a child, man thinks and apprehends from sensuous things; as he advances in age, he thinks and apprehends from scientifics; and afterwards from truths . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) a man may be sometimes in sensuous things . . . sometimes in scientifics, which takes place when he elevates himself from sensuous things, and thinks interiorly; and sometimes in the truths which have been concluded from scientifics, which takes place when he thinks still more interiorly. . . A man can also bring down truths into scientifics, and see them in these; and he can also bring down scientifics into sensuous things, and contemplate them in these; and also the reverse.

5859. (Thus) Spirits put on as their own, all the scientifics of a man the moment they come to him . . .

5871. That scientifics not agreeing and opposing should be cast out from the midst. Sig. and Ex.

— . When the truths of faith are conjoined with the good of charity, then all those scientifics which do not agree, and still more those which are opposed, are rejected from the midst to the sides . . . and then they are partly not regarded, and partly are held as of no account. But from the scientifics which agree, which remain, there takes place as it were an extraction, and . . . as it were a sublimation, whence comes the interior sense of things, which is not perceived by the man while he is in the body, except by something of gladness . . .

5874. That scientifics are man's ultimates, namely, in his memory and thought, does not appear; it seems to him as if they make the whole of his intelligence and wisdom; but . . . they are only the vessels in which are the things of intelligence and wisdom; and, indeed, the ultimate vessels; for they conjoin themselves with the sensuous things of the body. That they are ultimates, is evident to him who reflects upon his own thought, when he is inquiring into any truth: scientifics are then present, but do not appear; for the thought then extracts the things which they contain, and in fact from a great many scattered hither and thither, and even hidden away ; and thus it forms conclusions ; and the more interiorly the thought goes, the further it removes itself from scientifics. This may be manifest from the fact, that when man comes into the other life . . . he indeed has his scientifics with him, but, for many reasons, is not allowed to use them . . . and still he thinks and speaks about truth and good much more distinctly and perfectly than in the world. Hence it may be evident, that scientifics serve man to form the understanding ; but when the understanding has been formed, they then form the ultimate plane, in which the man no longer thinks, but above it.

[A.] 5881. The order in which scientifics and truths are disposed in man's memory . . . is a wonderful order : they cohere fascicularly, and the fascicles themselves also do so together, and this according to that connection of things which the man had apprehended. . . These coherences are more wonderful than a man can ever believe : in the other life they are sometimes presented to view . . . Scientifics and truths are ordained into these fascicular forms solely by the man's loves ; into infernal forms by the loves of self and of the world ; but into heavenly forms by love towards the neighbour and by love to God . . .

5886. At this day the Internal of man is indeed among scientifics . . . but it is rejected to the lowest things . . . Sig.

5897<sup>a</sup>. The celestial do not at all want to know about the scientifics which are signified by 'Egypt ;' for they know all things from the celestial good in which they are ; which good would perish if they were to betake themselves to scientifics. Sig.

5901. Scientifics are the first things which are to be learned ; for they are the things from which truths are to be concluded, and in which truths are afterwards to be terminated . . . These are the things which Joseph represented.

5941. The approach of spiritual good, and of the truths of the Church, to the scientifics of the Natural. Sig.

5945. The doctrinals of scientifics are doctrinals from the literal sense of the Word. Examps. and Sig.

5948<sup>2</sup>. Thus, if what is scientific is regarded as the end . . . truths at last vanish.

5949. Thus, if truths are objects of care, they will have scientifics, which are 'the good of the land of Egypt,' in abundance. . . Scientifics should indeed be objects of care as well as truths, but they must regard good as the end.

5951. With those who are first learning truths, they are only scientifics ; afterwards, if they are sacredly revered, they go further, and become truths of the Church . . .

5991. Corporeal Spirits seen . . . who in the world had excelled . . . in knowledges, and had thereby completely confirmed themselves against the Divine . . .

6001<sup>e</sup>. For natural truth with all things belonging to it must be initiated into the scientifics of the Church, which is signified by that Jacob with his sons descended into Egypt.

6004<sup>3</sup>. Truths are said to be initiated into scientifics when they are brought together into them, so as to be in them ; which takes place with this intent, that when what is scientific comes into the thought, the truths brought into it may come at the same time into remembrance. Examp. . . When scientifics are thus infilled, then when one is thinking from scientifics, the thought widely extends and diffuses itself ; and indeed to many Societies in the Heavens at the same time ; for as such a scientific consists of so many truths within itself, it thus unfolds itself, unknown to the man ; but it must be truths which are in them.

—<sup>4</sup>. It is also according to Divine order, that interior things must betake themselves into exterior ones . . . Unless it is so, the man cannot be fully regenerated ; for by such a bringing of truths into scientifics, the interior and exterior things agree, which would otherwise disagree ; and if they disagree, the man is not in good, because not in what is sincere.

—<sup>5</sup>. Moreover, scientifics are in a lumen nearly the same as that in which is man's Sensuous of sight ; and this light is such, that unless it is enlightened within by the light which is from truths, it leads into falsities . . . and also into evils from falsities.

6007. Elevation from scientifics to interior things. Sig. . . For after scientifics have been infilled with truths, the man is elevated from scientifics to interior things ; and then scientifics serve him as the ultimate plane of his mental view.

6015. Doctrinals from the scientifics of the Church. Sig.

— . 'Pharaoh' = the Scientific of the Church in general. Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. They (say), Demonstrate scientifically that it is so, and then I will believe . . .

6023. Truths are initiated and collated into scientifics when scientifics are ruled by truths ; and they are ruled by truths when truth is acknowledged because the Lord has said so in the Word ; and afterwards the scientifics which affirm are accepted, and those which assault are removed . . . When this is so, then, when the man thinks from scientifics, he is not led away to falsities, as he is when truths are not in scientifics. For scien- tifics are not truths from themselves, but from the truths in them; and such as are the truths which are in them, such a general truth is the Scientific. For the Scientific is only a vessel, which is able to receive both truths and falsities, and this with immense variety. Examp.

—<sup>e</sup>. The scientific remains the same, namely, that every man is the neighbour; but by one it is infilled with truths, and by another with falsities. The case is the same with all other scientifics.

6044<sup>2</sup>. He who excels in any rationality can see that the scientifics with a man should look to truths as their end; and that the truths should look to goods . . .

6047<sup>2</sup>. It here treats of the conjunction of the truths of the Church with its scientifics. But . . . the beginning is not made by scientifics, nor can an entrance be made by means of them into the truths of faith; for the scientifics with man are from sensuous things, thus from the world, from which are innumerable fallacies; but the beginning is to be made from the truths of faith, in this way. (Continued under DOCTRINE, here.)

—<sup>3</sup>. Afterwards, when he has been confirmed, and is thus in the affirmative from the Word that these things are truths of faith, it is then allowable for him to confirm them by all the scientifics which are with him, of whatever name and nature they may be; for then, as the affirmative reigns universally, he accepts the scientifics which agree, and rejects the scientifics which, on account of the fallacies which are in them, disagree. By means of scientifics faith is strengthened. Therefore it is denied to no one to search the Scriptures from the affection of knowing whether the doctrinals of the Church . . . are true . . . nor is it denied him to strengthen himself afterwards by means of scientifics; but it is not allowable for him to do so before. This is the way, and there is no other, of conjoining the truths of faith with scientifics; not only with the scientifics of the Church, but also with all scientifics whatever.

—<sup>e</sup>. From these things it may now be evident, that the Scientific is by no means to be rejected from the truths of faith; but that they are to be conjoined together; yet by the prior way, that is, by the way from faith; but not by the posterior way, that is, by the way from scientifics. Refs.

6052. Separation from the perverted scientifics which are opposite to the scientifics of the Church. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. The Scientific which confirms good is that to which the perverted Scientific is opposite. Perverted scientifics are those which destroy the truth of faith and the good of charity; and are also those which invert order, like the magical things which were in Egypt . . . Correspondences and representatives were the scientifics which were cultivated with them . . . As to the separation of them . . . it is effected by the ordination; when good with its truths is in the middle, which is signified by 'Goshen,' then the perverted scientifics, which are opposite, are cast out.

—<sup>2</sup>. Thus far it has treated of the conjunction of truths with scientifics, concerning which conjunction it is further to be known, that the conjunction of the internal man with the external cannot possibly be effected unless truths are insinuated into scientifics; for scientifics, together with the delights of the natural affections, constitute the external man; and therefore, unless conjunction is effected with scientifics, it cannot be effected at all . . . The method in which this conjunction is effected, is that which has been described in this chapter, which method is effected by the insertion of truths into scientifics.

6055<sup>e</sup>. The external man is that which is properly to be called the scientific man, because in him are scientifics, which for the most part derive their lumen from those things which are of the lumen of the world enlightened and thus vivified by the light of Heaven.

6059. It treats in (Gen.xlvii.) of the insinuation of the truths of the Church which are in the Natural into the Scientific. The (former) are the sons of Jacob . . . The Scientific into which these truths are insinuated is 'Pharaoh.'

6060. It afterwards treats of the way in which scientifics are reduced into order by the Celestial Internal . . .

6068. That they are in the middle in the Natural, where scientifics are. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For the internal eye . . . regards those things which are in the Natural, and which are scientific, as outside of itself . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Thus the internal sight is fixed upon the scientifics which have the greatest agreement with the truth and good in which the man is: these scientifics are then, to him, in the middle.

6071. The scientifics of the Church, at this day, are the things which are of the literal sense of the Word. Unless truths from the internal sense are insinuated into these scientifics, the mind can be led away into every heresy; but when truths have been insinuated into them, then the mind cannot be led away into heresies. Examp.

—<sup>2</sup>. But this scientific appears with a different face, if interior truths are insinuated into it; as, for instance, this truth . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. When these and many other truths are insinuated into this scientific, it appears with quite a different face; for this scientific then becomes like a transparent vessel . . .

6077. To seek life in scientifics. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. As to the life of truth being in scientifics, or truths seeking their life in scientifics, it is to be known that all things . . . seek something ulterior, in which they may be . . . in order that they may be continually producing something . . . In the Spiritual World this appears in this,—that good seeks to live in truths, and truths seek to live in scientifics, and scientifics in sensuous things, and sensuous things in the world.

—<sup>2</sup>. As to truths in scientifics, it is to be known, that interior truths may indeed be insinuated into scientifics, but they have no life therein until good is in them. In good there is life, and in truths from good, and thus in scientifics from good through truths. Then is good like a soul to truths, and through truths to scientifics, which are like a body. In a word, charity towards the neighbour vivifies and animates faith; and, through faith, the scientifics which are of the natural mind.

[A. 6077]<sup>3</sup>. At this day there are few who know that truths and scientifics are distinct from each other. The reason is, that few are in the truths of faith from charity; and the truths of faith in which there is not charity are nothing else than scientifics; for they are in the memory no differently from the other things which are there. But when the truths of faith are from charity, or when charity is in them, they perceptibly distinguish themselves from scientifics, and sometimes elevate themselves from them, and then they view scientifics beneath themselves. This is especially evident from the state of man after death: he can then think and speak rationally about the truths and goods of faith, and with much greater clearness than in the life of the body; but he can take out no scientifics from the memory: these with him are as things forgotten and blotted out, although he has them all with him. Hence it may be evident, that the truths of faith, which in themselves are spiritual, and scientifics, which in themselves are natural, are distinct from each other; and that the truths of faith are elevated from scientifics towards Heaven by means of the affection of the good of charity.

6078. That scientifics in which are the goods of truth are wanting. Sig.

— . That scientifics and truths support man's soul, is manifestly evident from the longing to know with man, and also from the correspondence of food to scientifics . . . Good Spirits and Angels are in the continual longing to know and be wise . . . But in order that scientifics may yield healthful nourishment to the soul, there must be in them life from the goods of truth: if they have not life thence, scientifics do indeed support the interior life of man, but his natural life, and not his spiritual life.

6084. That spiritual good and the truths of the Church may live in the inmost of scientifics. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. The objects of the internal sight are no other than scientifics and truths . . . Truths, and the scientifics which agree with them, come directly under the sight, that is, are in the inmost, with those whom spiritual and celestial truths delight and affect . . . whereas falsities and the scientifics which agree with them (do so) with those whom the evils of the love of self and of the world affect and delight.

6087. That they are the primary things of scientifics. Sig.

— . Scientifics in which there are truths (are here signified), because it is said 'rulers over my cattle,' that is, Pharaoh's . . .

6109. It now treats of the Celestial Internal, that it reduced all things into the Natural into order under a general, to the end that there might be effected the conjunction of scientifics with the truths of the Church, and through these truths with spiritual good, and through this good with the Celestial Internal. But as the reduction of scientifics into order under a general cannot be effected otherwise than by vastations of good and desolations of truth, and then by sustentations, therefore both are here treated of. But these things rarely take place with a man while he lives in the world

. . . In the other life, however, they take place with all who are being regenerated . . .

6112. That the Celestial Internal brought together into one every true and adaptable scientific. Sig.

— . A scientific is said to be true and adaptable when it is not darkened by fallacies, which, so long as they cannot be dispelled, render the scientific unadaptable; and so also is a scientific which has not been perverted by applications to falsities and to evils, either by others or by one's self; for these, when once impressed on any scientific, remain. A scientific, therefore, which does not labour under these vitiations, is a true and adaptable scientific.

6115. That (every true and adaptable scientific) was referred to the general in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Concerning this . . . it is to be known that all scientifics, as well as all truths of every kind whatever, in order to be anything, must be referred to a general, and must be placed and contained in a general, and under a general; otherwise they are at once dissipated. In order that scientifics and truths may be something, a form must be induced upon them, in which they may mutually regard each other; which cannot be done unless they are consociated under a general. (Continued under GENERAL, here.)

6117. That every scientific in the Natural was under the auspices of the Internal, is signified by Joseph being ruler over the whole land of Egypt; but the conjunction of the truths of the Church with the scientifics in the Natural, is what is now described in the internal sense.

6125. 'For horses' = scientifics from the Intellectual; (because they were the horses of Egypt).

— . The Intellectual . . . consists in the view of subjects—rerum—from such things as are of experience and knowledge . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) scientifics from the Intellectual . . . are the scientifics which confirm those things which man intellectually apprehends and perceives; these may be either evil or good. These scientifics are what are signified by 'horses from Egypt.' Ill.

—<sup>4</sup>. Scientifics from a perverted Intellectual, which are consulted in the things of faith, and the Word is not believed in . . . Sig.

—<sup>5</sup>. That such scientifics were destroyed, is represented by the horses and chariots of Pharaoh being drowned in the Sea Suph . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. That intelligence is to be procured through the Word . . . and not through scientifics from man's Own Intellectual, is signified by 'the king not to multiply horses . . .'

6141. That the mind will be cultivated with the scientifics of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

6183. What elevation from scientifics is, shall be told in a few words. The regeneration of the Natural is effected by the insinuation of spiritual life from the Lord through the internal man into the scientifics there. This insinuation has been treated of in this chapter (Gen.xlvii.). But, when the man has been thus regenerated, if he is such that he can be regenerated further, he is elevated thence to the interior Natural . . . The elevation is effected by a withdrawal from sensuous things and scientifics, thus by elevation above them; and then the man comes into a state of interior thought and affection . . .

6192<sup>2</sup>. The Spirits do not know that they are with man.

6222<sup>4</sup>. This Intellectual, which is called the Intellectual of the Church, is more interior than the Intellectual which is only from scientifics; for it is the apperception that it is so, not because scientifics and philosophical things dictate it, but because the Word in its spiritual sense dictates it. Examp.

6294. 'He said, I know, my son, I know' (Gen. xlviii.19)=that it is so, but that it appears otherwise . . .

6316. The learned as to a great part are sensuous. The reason is that they have learned knowledges solely for the sake of reputation . . . for all the knowledges which are in the learned world are means of being wise, and are also means of being insane.

6323<sup>2</sup>. Therefore animals are in all the scientifics which ever belong to their love. Enum.

— All these scientifics are included in their loves, and dwell there from their first origin. Into these scientifics they are born, because they are in the order of their nature . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. If man were in the order in which he was created . . . he, above all animals, would be born not only into scientifics, but also into all spiritual truths and celestial goods . . .

6383. By 'Zebulon' it here treats of those in the Church who conclude from scientifics concerning spiritual truths, and thus strengthen these truths with themselves. . . By 'Zebulon' are not meant those who do not believe unless scientifics and sensuous things dictate . . . These never believe. The reason is that the negative reigns universally, and when this (is the case), the scientifics which deny inflow and are collected together, but not those which confirm: those which confirm are rejected to the sides, or are explained in favour of the scientifics which deny. . . But by 'Zebulon' are here meant those who believe doctrinal things from the Word . . . and yet their faith has not life in truths, but in scientifics; for they apply scientifics to doctrinal things, and thus strengthen their affirmative. They, therefore, who are 'Zebulon,' do not elevate themselves from scientifics; but when they hear or think about any truth of faith, they at once fall into what is scientific. There are many such in the world; and the Lord provides that scientifics and sensuous things should serve them for this use.

6384. 'Shall dwell at the haven of the seas'=life where there is the conclusion of truth from scientifics.

—<sup>2</sup>. These have the truths of faith so bound to scientifics that they cannot be elevated. Hence they are in obscurity more than all others in the Spiritual Church; for they have but little light from the Intellectual, because it is immersed in scientifics and sensuous things. The case is otherwise with those who . . . have strengthened the truths of faith by scientifics, but yet so that they can be elevated from scientifics, that is, from the Natural where scientifics are. The Intellectual of these is enlightened, and thus is in a certain perception of spiritual truth, to which the scientifics which are beneath serve as a mirror, in which the truths of faith and of charity appear and are acknowledged, as affections are in the face.

6386<sup>e</sup>. Doctrinal things are those which are from the Word; Knowledges are those which are from these doctrinal things on the one side, and from scientifics on the other; and scientifics are those which are of experience from self and from others.

6431. To be gifted with scientifics which are in the Natural. Sig.

— As the Natural is signified by 'the abyss which lieth under,' scientifics are also signified; for scientifics together with their delights are in the Natural, and make its life, especially with the spiritual man, for he is introduced by means of scientifics into truths, and by means of truths into good.

6507. The sadness of the scientifics of the Church, which is signified by 'the Egyptians wept for Israel' . . . =sadness because the good of the Church . . . had left scientifics, which are external things of the Church, when it ascended from them to the internal of the Church, which is the good of truth; for it then does not regard scientifics as with itself, as before, but beneath itself. For, when the truth of the Spiritual Church becomes good, a turning takes place, and then it no longer regards truths from truths, but from good . . . Hence comes sadness; and also from this, that there is then effected a different order among scientifics, which is not effected without grief. 6539.

6523. That (the Internal) adjoined to itself the scientifics of the Natural. Sig.

6532. That the interior and exterior goods of innocence and charity were in the inmost of scientifics. Sig.

6542. That scientifics have grief before they are initiated into the truths of the Church. Sig.

6580<sup>2</sup>. It treats now of the Spiritual Church as established, which is described in these verses by Joseph dwelling in Egypt . . . With the man who is a Spiritual Church there is life from the Internal in the scientifics of the Church; for with him scientifics are made subordinate, and are reduced into such an order that they receive the influx of good and truth; so that they are receptacles of influx from the Internal. It is otherwise with those who are not the Church; with them scientifics are so disposed, that those which confirm truth and good are rejected to the sides; thus are far removed from the light of Heaven; and hence those which remain are recipients of falsity and evil.

6603<sup>e</sup>. In the Spiritual World the affection of knowing truth and good corresponds to the serenity of the atmosphere.

6618. Some Spirits gloried that they knew all things—these Spirits relate to the memory—but they were told that there are indefinite things which they do not know. Des.

6639. See EGYPT, here.

[A.] 6652<sup>2</sup>. Scientifics alienated from the Internal, are scientifics opposed to the Church. Sig. and Ex.

6653. Subordinate scientifics . . . which are separated from truth. Sig.

6654. That the truths of the Church are prevailing over the alienated scientifics. Sig.

6661. For they who are in scientifics alienated from truth, who are here signified by Pharaoh and the Egyptians, pervert and falsify all the truths of the Church, and from the truths thus perverted and falsified make for themselves doctrines. Sig.

6675. The apperception of the truth and good inflowing from the Internal into the scientifics of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

6690. The scientifics in the Natural are disposed into continual series; one series coheres with another, and thus all do so, according to their various affinities and relationships; and they are circumstanced not unlike families and their generations; for one is born from another . . . But the arrangement of the scientific truths in the Natural varies with each man; for the ruling love induces their form on them. Ex.

6692. General influx into scientifics contrary to the truths of the Church. Sig.

6706<sup>e</sup>. Nor does the Lord require more from the man of the Church, than that he should live according to that which he knows.

6723. The Church which darkens itself by reasonings from scientifics. Sig.

6726. That at first (the Divine Law) was among false scientifics. Sig. and Ex. 6732.

— The reason 'the flag' = what is scientific, is that every herb in the Word = some species of scientific; the flag, which grows on the bank of a river, a low scientific. Ill.

6750. Moreover, scientifics are what those who are being regenerated must first learn, for they are a plane for the things of the understanding; and the understanding is the recipient of the truth of faith; and the truth of faith is the recipient of the good of charity. Hence it may be evident that the Scientific is the first plane when man is being regenerated.

—<sup>2</sup>. That the Scientific was also the first plane with the Lord when He made His Human Divine truth, or the Divine Law, is signified by the Lord, when an infant, being brought into Egypt . . . But by scientifics are not meant philosophical scientifics, but the scientifics of the Church.

6751. To be in the first truths by means of scientifics. Sig. For the first truths are born from scientifics; and thus are like sons from the mother, which is the affection of scientifics. . . As man grows up, sensuous things are the first plane; then scientifics; and upon these planes judgment afterwards grows . . . When man is being regenerated, the generals of faith, or the rudiments of the doctrine of the Church, are the first plane; then the particulars of doctrine and of faith; afterwards, successively, things more interior. It is these planes which are enlightened by the light of Heaven.

6761. That (the Divine Law) destroyed the alienated Scientific. Sig.

6769. That (the Divine Law) was among the alienated scientifics, and not yet in truths, so as to be safe. Sig.

6771. That the false Scientific, apperceiving this, wanted to destroy the truth which is of the Law from the Divine. Sig.

6813. See MERCURY, here. 6931. 7077. D.3288. 3289.

6832. 'In a flame of fire out of the midst of a bramble' = love Divine in scientific truth . . . (For) all small trees of whatever kind = scientifics, but the greater trees = arborescent = Knowledge and perceptions. As the bramble produces flowers and berries, it = scientific truth. The scientific truth of the Church is nothing else than the Word in the sense of the letter, and also every representative and significative of the Church which was with the descendants of Jacob. In their external form, these are called scientific truths; but in their internal form they are spiritual truths.

6865<sup>2</sup>. It is the false Scientific which chiefly infests those who are of the Spiritual Church. The reason is that they have not perception of truth from good, but only the Knowledge of truth from doctrine. They who are such are very much infested by scientifics; for scientifics are the most general vessels, which sometimes appear contrary to truths, before truths, being let into them, cause them to be translucent, and thus not to be perceived. Moreover, scientifics are full of the fallacies of the senses, which cannot be dispelled by those who are only in Knowledge from doctrine, and not in the perception of truth from good; chiefly because the light of the world predominates with them . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. But those who are in the light of Heaven are in illustration from the Lord, and apperceive before confirmation whether a truth is confirmable or not, by looking into the scientifics which are beneath, and are then disposed into order. Hence it is evident, that these have an interior view, which is above scientifics, and thus is distinct; whereas the former have a lower view, which is within scientifics, and thus is confused-perplexam.

6897. [A promise of] elevation and deliverance from infestation by false scientifics. Sig.

6915<sup>2</sup>. The things which precede [have shown] that those who are of the Spiritual Church . . . were infested by those who were in false scientifics . . . thus as to the things of the natural mind, for the things which are of this mind are called scientifics. These, moreover, chiefly infest the spiritual; for their thought is within scientifics, and little above.

6916. The affection of truth which is with those who are in scientifics. Sig.

6917. 'Vessels of silver' = scientifics of truth; and 'vessels of gold' = scientifics of good. Scientifics are called 'vessels,' because they are generals, and are able to contain in themselves innumerable truths and manifold goods.

— It is to be known that, in themselves, scientifics are not truths, nor are they falsities; but that they become truths with those who are in truths, and falsities with those who are in falsities; their application and use effect this. The scientifics with a man are circumstanced as are the riches and wealth with him; (which) with those who are in evil, are pernicious, because they apply them to evil uses; whereas with those who are in good (they) are useful, because they apply them to good uses; and therefore if the riches and wealth which are with the evil, are transferred to the good, they become good. So, also, is it with scientifics. Examp.

—<sup>2</sup>. As the Egyptians applied (the representatives of the Ancient Church) to magic . . . with them they were not true scientifics, but false scientifics; yet the same things in the Ancient Church were true scientifics . . .

— Therefore many scientifics may be imbibed by those who are in evils and falsities, which can be applied to good uses, and thus become good. Such scientifics were also signified by the spoiling of the nations . . . The gold and silver thus taken were afterwards applied to a holy use. III.

6918. 'And garments' = lower scientifics which correspond to the former.

6952<sup>4</sup>. Seduced Eve by the tree of knowledge; that is, through scientifics which are from what is sensuous, thus from fallacies.

6975. 'Take of the waters of the river (Nile)' = false scientifics.

7039<sup>2</sup>. By faith is here meant the knowledge of such things as are of faith . . . Such things as are of faith with those who are not in charity, are only things of the memory, and in the memory are in no other form than is any other scientific; nor is there the scientific of the truth of faith there, because it is defiled with ideas of what is false . . .

7074<sup>3</sup>. They said that (they present things opposite) in order to inspire the desire of knowing . . .

7076. In their own Society what one knows all know . . .

7112. 'Ye shall give no more chaff to the people' = the lowest scientifics, and the most general of all. . . Those scientifics are called the lowest which are full of the fallacies of the senses, and which the evil abuse to pervert goods and truths, and thus to support evils and falsities; for these scientifics, on account of the fallacies, can be turned in favour of principles of falsity and cupidities of evil. Such scientifics are also the most general of all; and, unless they are filled with less general and with particular truths, they can serve falsities and evils; but the more they are filled with truths, the less they serve them. Such are the scientifics by which those who in the world have professed faith alone, and yet have lived a life of evil, in the other life infest the upright . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Chaff (or straw), or grass = the lowest Scientific . . . for herbaceous things, and also straw-like things, have no other signification. 7115. 7127.

7127<sup>3</sup>. Such things, then, are what are meant by the lowest and most general scientifics of all, which are signified by 'straw.'

7130<sup>2</sup>. The things which are of the natural mind are called scientifics; but those of the rational mind are called intellectual reasons.

7131. For the scientifics of faith and charity are indeed truths, but general ones; thus are the recipient vessels of particular and singular truths . . . For example; it is a scientific truth that charity towards the neighbour is an essential of the Church . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. These things have been said in order that it may be known what general scientifics are.

7144. That scientifics which contain truth are no longer furnished. Sig.

7231<sup>2</sup>. The Spiritual Church begins with man through faith in knowledge and afterwards in understanding, which is represented by Reuben and his sons . . .

7296. 'The wise ones' = those who are in the knowledge of spiritual things, and of their correspondence with natural ones.

7324. 'Pools' = the scientifics which serve the truths of doctrinals; and, in the opposite sense, the scientifics which serve the falsities of doctrinals. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. Scientifics are Knowledges, but in a lower degree.

7419<sup>2</sup>. When this knowledge is taken away from them . . . in the other life . . .

7444. 'To know' (Ex.viii.22) = apperception.

7465<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the knowledge of faith, but in evil of life, are not carried into Hell immediately after death, but successively.

7553<sup>6</sup>. 'The green grass burnt up' = the scientifics of truth destroyed.

7598. 'To know' (Ex.ix.29) = to be known = notum. 7786.

7689. 'It shall devour all the herb of the land' = that it shall consume every scientific of truth.

—<sup>2</sup>. The truth of the natural mind is scientific.

7724<sup>2</sup>. For truth without good is merely scientific. In order that this Scientific may become of faith, it must be conjoined with good: it then passes into the internal man, and becomes faith.

7729<sup>8</sup>. The ancient Sophi were in the knowledge of such things . . .

7750. Animals have the knowledge of all things which are of their love . . . Therefore they have all the requisite knowledge . . . which knowledge with some is such, that man cannot be otherwise than amazed at it. This knowledge is said to be connate . . . but it is of the love in which they are. If man were in his love . . . he would not only be in all the requisite knowledge, but also in all intelligence and wisdom . . . for they would inflow from Heaven into these loves . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. When these come into Heaven, they know and are wise in such things as they had never known = noverant = before . . .

7763. It treats (in Ex.xi.) . . . of the scientifics of truth and good being transferred to those who are of the Spiritual Church . . . 7770. 7969.

7766. With these there is only the knowledge of such things as are of faith.

7770. (The borrowing from the Egyptians of vessels of silver and vessels of gold, and garments)=that the scientifics of truth and good taken away from the evil who were of the Church, would be made over to the good who are thence. 7969.

[A.770c]. It is believed that the scientifics of truth and good are the truths and goods themselves which are of faith; but they are not. It is the affections of truth and good which make faith: these inflow into scientifics, as into their vessels.

7778<sup>2</sup>. Faith without charity . . . is only the knowledge of such things as are of faith . . . There is the knowledge of the truths of faith with them . . . This knowledge is what they call faith; and when the scientifics of truth and good of faith are applied by them to confirm falsities and evils, they are no longer with them the truths and goods of faith . . .

7780. 'The handmaid behind the mills'=the most external affection of knowledges.

7920. By 'vessels' in general are signified the scientifics which are of the Natural, because they are the receptacles of the influx of good and truth . . .

8002<sup>7</sup>. Scientifics which are from natural lumen alone. Sig.

8005. That scientific truth also shall be entire. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'Bone'=the ultimate in which interior things are terminated as in their basis . . . Such an ultimate in spiritual things is the Scientific; for all spiritual truths and goods flow down according to order to lower things, and at last are terminated in scientifics, and there present themselves visibly to man.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Scientific is said to be entire, when it admits into itself nothing except the truths which agree with its good; for the Scientific is the general receptacle. Moreover, scientifics are circumstanced as are the bones in man; if they are not entire, or in their order . . . the form of the body is varied, and the actions according thereto. Scientific truths are doctrinal things.

8034. From the heart he wants to know what truth and good are . . .

8346. 'Shur'=the scientifics of the Church which have not as yet attained life.

8381. A horse represents in the Spiritual World the Intellectual formed from scientifics; and as (in Jupiter) they are afraid to cultivate the Intellectual by means of knowledges, there is an influx of fear. They do not care for the scientifics which are of human learning. 8627.

8398<sup>2</sup>. Those who are in scientifics, who thence hatch falsities from which are evils. Tr.

8628. These Spirits had placed wisdom in such things as are of the mere memory, as in languages, in the historical things of the literary world, in bare experimental things, and especially in philosophical terms, and in other like things . . . As these have not cultivated their Rational by knowledges as means, in the other life they have little perception . . . But they who have used knowledges as means of annihilating the things of faith, have completely destroyed their Intellectual . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. From intercourse with such, the Spirits of Jupiter had concluded that knowledges induce shade and blind; but they were told that in this Earth they are the means for opening the intellectual sight . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. They were further told that in themselves knowledges are spiritual riches; and that those who possess them are like those who possess worldly riches; which in like manner are means for performing use to one's self, the neighbour, and one's country; and are also means of doing evil: and also that they are like garments . . .

8629<sup>e</sup>. (This Spirit) was cold . . . which was a sign . . . that by means of knowledges he had not opened but had closed against himself the way to the light of Heaven.

8635. No one can be regenerated unless he knows the things of the new life . . .

8636. No one can know these things from himself . . .

8754. The man who is being regenerated, is led through truth . . . that is, to know it, then to will it, and finally to act it.

8772<sup>2</sup>. The spiritual life is first acquired by knowing the truths of faith . . . When they are only known, they are as it were in the door . . .

8869<sup>2</sup>. That which proceeds from Own intelligence (is signified by), 'Every man is become a fool from knowledge . . . (Jer.x.14). 9424<sup>8</sup>.

8872<sup>e</sup>. To the corporeal Sensuous relate the scientifics which proximately come forth from the experience of the external senses; and also their delights. The latter and the former, with the good, are good, because they are applied to goods; but with the evil they are evil, because they are applied to evils . . .

8890. By 'a sojourner in the gates' is signified the Scientific in general . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. For the Scientific in general is in the gates; that is, in the entrance to the truths which are of the Church.

8891<sup>3</sup>. The understanding of truth is described by 'the tree of knowledge;' and the reason it was forbidden to eat of this tree, was that the regenerate man . . . ought no longer to be led by the understanding of truth, but by the will of good . . . Consequently, by . . . 'eating of the tree of knowledge' is meant the fall of that Church from good to truth, consequently from love to the Lord and towards the neighbour to faith without these loves, and this through reasoning from man's Own Intellectual.

8994<sup>3</sup>. The difference is like that between knowledge and affection: they who are in the knowledge of truth and good . . . are not affected with truth and good, but only with the knowledge of them, consequently are delighted with truths for the sake of knowledge; whereas they who are in the affection of truth and good . . . are not affected with the knowledge, but with the truths and goods themselves when they hear and perceive them with others. Such an affection is general with good women; but the affection of the knowledges of truth is general with men. Hence it is that they who are in spiritual affection love women who are affected with truths, but do not love women who are in knowledges; for it is according to Divine order, that men should be in knowledges, but women only in affections; and thus that they should not love themselves from knowledges, but the men; whence is the Conjugal... As this is so, knowledges and Knowledges are represented by men, but affections by women... But it is to be known that this is the case with those who are of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom; but with those who are of the Celestial Kingdom... the husbands are in affection, and the wives are in the Knowledges of good and truth; hence is the Conjugal with these.

9003. 'A covering,' or 'garment' = the lower scientifics; for these are what spiritually support the external life of man. Refs.

9011<sup>8</sup>. There is here described the blamelessness... of him who has injured anyone... by scientifics from the fallacies of the senses... 'An instrument' = what is scientific.

9088<sup>2</sup>. The Lord inflows into those things with a man which the man knows, but not into those which he does not know; and therefore He does not amend what is evil or false until the man has been instructed that it is evil or false.

9149. Truths from good, and the corresponding scientifics in the memory. Sig.

— The reason they are corresponding scientifics, is that all spiritual truths are stored away in scientifics, as in their vessels; and all scientifics correspond to the truths which are contained.

9154. It here treats of truths and scientifics taken away from the memory.

— Truths and scientifics belong to good as to their master... and truths and scientifics are in good as in their house.

9176<sup>2</sup>. Truths not conjoined are those which are learned from others, and do not enter more deeply than into the memory, and there remain as scientifics...

9394. 'Basins' = the things of the memory, because vessels in general = scientifics; and scientifics are nothing else than things of the memory.

— What scientifics are relatively to the truths and goods of life with man shall be told in a few words. All things which are learned and stored up in the memory, and which can be called forth from it to the intellectual sight, are called scientifics, and in themselves are the things which constitute the Intellectual of the external man. As scientifics are Knowledges, they serve the sight of the internal or rational man as a kind of mirror in which to see such things as are of service to him...

—<sup>4</sup>. It is further to be known, that scientifics or the things of the memory, when they become of man's life, vanish from the exterior memory, as are wont to do the gestures, actions, speech, reflections, intentions, in general the thoughts and affections of man, when, by continual use or habit, they become as it were spontaneous and natural; but no other things become of man's life, than those which enter into the delights of his love, and form them; thus which enter into his will.

—<sup>5</sup>. That scientifics are vessels, and in the Word are signified by vessels of every kind, as by basins, cups, waterpots, and the like, is because every scientific is a certain General, which contains in itself the particulars and singulars which agree with the General; and such generals are disposed into series, and as it were into bundles, and these bundles and series are mutually ordained in such a way that they relate to the heavenly form; and are thus in order, from the most singular to the most general things. An idea of such series may be formed from the muscular series and bundles in the human body. Each bundle therein consists of a number of motor fibres; and each motor fibre, of blood-vessels and nervous fibres. Each muscular bundle, also... is encompassed by its coat... and in like manner the interior fascicles which are called motor fibres. But still all the muscles, and the motor fibres in them which are in the universal body, are so ordained, that they concur, according to the good pleasure of the will, in every action, and this in an incomprehensible manner. The like is the case with the scientifics of the memory, which are also in like manner excited by the delight of the man's love... but through the medium of the intellectual part. That which has become the life of the man... excites them. For the interior man has his sight continually in them, and is delighted with them in so far as they agree with his loves. And those which enter fully into the loves, and become spontaneous, and as it were natural, vanish from the external memory, but remain inscribed on the internal memory, from which they are never erased. Thus do scientifics become of the life.

[A. 9394]<sup>6</sup>. From these things it is also evident, that scientifics are as it were vessels of the interior life of man; and that this is the reason why scientifics are signified by vessels of various kinds. Ill.

—Scientific truths from a celestial stock, are 'vessels of basins;' and scientific truths from a spiritual stock, are 'vessels of psalteries.'

—'Basins before the altar'=scientific goods.

9407<sup>4</sup>. Their chief knowledge was the knowledge of correspondences, and the knowledge of representations, which knowledges are at this day among the things which have been lost.

9424<sup>7</sup>. Scientifics of falsity and evil, which are acknowledged and worshipped as truths and goods. Sig.

9552. 'Its pomegranates'=scientifics of good. Ill.

—There are scientifics of good, and scientifics of truth; the former are signified by 'the pomegranates;' and the latter by 'the flowers' with which the candlestick was encompassed and ornamented. 9553.

9553. The scientifics of truth precede, and in their manner produce the things which are of wisdom with man; for they serve his Rational as objects, and thus as means of being wise. Hence it is that the scientifics of truth are like flowers; and the good of life, which is the good of wisdom, is like fruit.

—That 'flowers'=the scientifics of truth; and, in general, truths. Ill.

—'The leaf'=scientific truth in general; 'the flower'=scientific truth in so far as it serves as a means of being wise . . .

9557. 'Three bowls like almonds'=what is full as to scientifics from good. 9563.

9565. A scientific of good to every single truth. Sig.

9567. That the scientifics of good . . . shall be from the Divine Spiritual. Sig.

9568. When good is the all in all . . . also in the scientifics which are signified by the pomegranates and the flowers. Sig. It shall be told how the case is with this. It is good from which are truths; and truths from good from which are scientifics; thus is the one derived and produced from the other; but still good is everything in the products and derivatives, because they are from good.

—In like manner there succeed one another the Celestial, the Spiritual, and the Natural; from the Celestial is the whole of the Spiritual; and from the Spiritual is the whole of the Natural, that is, from the Celestial through the Spiritual; all that is called the Celestial with man which is of the good of love; the Spiritual, which is of the derivative truth of faith; and the Natural, which is of the Scientific. The reason the Scientific is natural, is that the Scientific is truth appearing in the light of the world; whereas the truth of faith, in so far as it is of faith with man, is in the light of Heaven. (Thus) the first is everything in the products and derivatives; so much so, that if the first is withdrawn, the things which follow from it perish.

9642<sup>3</sup>. 'The forest'=what is scientific reigning.

—7. 'The king of the north'=reasoning about truths from scientifics.

9653<sup>6</sup>. The west is called 'the sea,' because 'the sea'=the Scientific in general; and the Scientific is in the external or natural man, where good is in obscurity. The whole Scientific, being of the natural man, is in the light of the world.

9688. For scientifics serve the Intellectual as objects, from which it may hatch truths . . .

—3. The Knowledges of truth and good are the scientifics of the Church.

—4. 'The princes of the sea'=the primary scientifics, which are called dogmas.

9723. That it may be known what is signified by 'the ashes' . . . it shall be told how the case is with the things which remain in man after uses. From his infancy to the end of his life in the world, man is being perfected as to intelligence and wisdom; and, if it shall be well with him, as to faith and love. Scientifics chiefly conduce to this use. Scientifics are imbibed through hearing, seeing, and reading, and are stored up in the external or natural memory. These scientifics serve the internal sight, or the understanding, as a plane of objects, that it may thence select and elicit such things as may promote wisdom. For . . . the understanding . . . looks into that plane, or memory, which is beneath itself, and, from the various things therein, it selects and elicits such as agree with its love. These it summons to itself from beneath, and stores them up in its own memory, which is the internal memory. Hence is the life of the internal man, and his intelligence and wisdom. The case is the same with the things of spiritual intelligence and wisdom . . . scientifics must in like manner serve for the implanting of these in the internal man; but the scientifics must be from the Word, or from the doctrine of the Church, and these are called the Knowledges of truth and good . . .

—2. After the scientifics, or Knowledges of good and truth, have performed the above use, they as it were vanish from the memory. They are circumstanced as are the matters of instruction which from infancy have served a man as means for the perfecting of his moral and civil life. After they have performed this use . . . they perish from the memory, and remain solely as to their exercise or use. Thus does a man learn how to speak, to think, to discriminate and judge; he learns how to live morally, and to conduct himself decorously; in a word, he learns languages, good manners, intelligence, and wisdom.

—3. The scientifics which have served these uses are signified by ashes which are to be removed; and the Knowledges of truth and good, through which man has spiritual life, after they have served their use, that is, have imbued life, are signified by 'the ashes of the altar,' which also were to be removed.

9724. (The utensils of the altar)=the scientifics which contain and are of service for every use. (For) vessels in general=the things of the external memory, or scientifics; and, in holy things, the Knowledges of good and truth, which are means for the worship of the Lord.

9755<sup>2</sup>. Truth in the external man is truth by knowledge; whereas truth in the internal man is truth of faith; for from truth by knowledge there is made truth by faith, when it is elevated from the external man into the internal . . .

—<sup>11</sup>. 'The earth is full of the knowledge of Jehovah, as the waters cover the sea' (Is.xi.9). 'The sea'=scientifics; therefore it is said, 'the earth is full of the knowledge of Jehovah.'

—<sup>13</sup>. 'The beast out of the sea'=what is scientific destroying the truths of faith.

9793. I told them that there are sciences on this Earth which do not exist elsewhere; as things astronomical, geometrical, mechanical, physical, chemical, medical, optical, philosophical; besides arts which are also not Known elsewhere; as ship-building, metal casting, writing upon paper, and printing the same . . . D.4663<sup>11</sup>.

9818. Those in the Celestial Kingdom know truths, not from knowledge . . . but from internal perception . . .

9843<sup>3</sup>. For the truths of the external memory, which are scientifics, have no life, unless they are at the same time in the interior memory . . .

9854. Conjunction such as is that of truths in scientifics and among scientifics, thus which is in the external memory. Sig. and Ex.

9915<sup>2</sup>. In the Heavens there are three things which succeed in order; namely, the Celestial, the Spiritual, and the Natural . . . and the faculties in man which receive these things are called the Voluntary, the Intellectual, and the Scientific from which is the thinking or imaginative [faculty] of the external or natural man. The Voluntary receives the Celestial, or good; the Intellectual receives the Spiritual, or the derivative truth; and the Scientific, which constitutes the Intellectual of the natural man, closes them . . .

9918. See POMEGRANATE, here.

— The scientifics of good and truth, which are signified by 'the pomegranates,' are doctrinal things from the Word, which are scientifics in so far as they are in the memory which is in the external man. But when they enter into the memory which is in the internal man, as is the case when the man lives according to them, then the doctrinals as to truth become of faith, and those as to good become of charity, and they are called spiritual. When this takes place, they almost vanish from the external memory, and appear as if they were innate, because they are implanted in the man's life . . . From this it is evident what scientifics are, and to what they conduce, consequently, to what the doctrinals of the Church conduce when they are held only scientifically . . .

9922. That doctrine and worship must be from the good and truth which are within scientifics, and not from the scientifics apart from them. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. All things of the external memory are called scientifics . . . The things inscribed on the internal memory are not called scientifics, because they are things of the man's life; but they are called truths of faith and goods of love. These are the things which must be within scientifics. Ex.

9931<sup>e</sup>. That, when a man is in heavenly love, all scientifics are disposed into a heavenly form, and that the love disposes them. Ref.

9945. By the Knowledges of good and truth are meant interior scientifics, such as are those of the Church concerning faith and love . . .

9960<sup>3</sup>. 'The beard'=sensuous scientifics, which are ultimate truths. Ill.

9996. The ultimate of the Intellectual is called the sensuous Scientific . . . The sensuous Scientific, which is the ultimate of the Intellectual, is imbibed through two senses, which are those of hearing and sight.

—<sup>2</sup>. The sensuous Scientific, which is the ultimate of the Intellectual, is meant in the Word by 'a cup;' for the wine, or water, which is therein, is the truths which are of the intellectual part . . .

10029<sup>2</sup>. Truth in the Natural is the Scientific; and the good therein is the delight thereof; both are perceptible to man while he is in the world . . . Whereas the truth in the internal man is not a Scientific which appears, but it is truth implanted in his intellectual part . . .

10061<sup>4</sup>. 'The right eye'=the knowledge of good applied to confirm falsity.

10067<sup>9</sup>. Man imbibes truths from hearing through hearing, and from reading through sight, and stores them up in the memory; these truths belong either to the civil state, or to the moral state, and are called scientifics. The man's love . . . looks through the understanding into the things therein, and selects thence such things as agree with the love; and the things which it selects it summons to itself, and conjoins with itself; and by these it strengthens itself every day. The truths thus vivified by love make his Intellectual.

[A.] 10124. With those who are in the Spiritual Kingdom, truth is implanted in the external man, and there first becomes knowledge; and, in proportion as the man is affected with it, and lives according to it, it is called out into the Intellectual, and becomes faith, and at the same time charity towards the neighbour. This charity constitutes his new Voluntary, and the faith his new Intellectual, and both conscience.

—<sup>2</sup>. But, with those who are in the Celestial Kingdom, truth does not become knowledge . . . It does not remain as knowledge in their memory . . .

10156. For the knowledge of the natural man, that is, of the unregenerate man, is in the light of the world; but the intelligence of the spiritual man, that is, of the regenerate man, is in the light of Heaven; and, so long as a man is solely in the light of the world, he is in Hell . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Those, moreover, who are only in natural knowledge, and thence in no other light than the light of the world, cannot possibly believe the things which are of Heaven; and even if they want to enter into them by their own lumen . . . there comes to them as it were a thick darkness, which . . . makes what is heavenly as nothing . . . which is also the reason why so many of the learned reduce themselves into such insanity by means of their knowledges . . . The case is otherwise with those who suffer themselves to be elevated by the Lord into the light of Heaven; these are first elevated above the scientifics which are of the natural man; and afterwards, from the light of Heaven, they see those things which are in their natural man, and which are called scientifics, and well discriminate them, adopting those which they apprehend, and which are in agreement, and rejecting or laying aside those which they do not apprehend, and which are not in agreement. Ex.

10217<sup>7</sup>. 'The beast out of the sea' = the truth of the Church falsified by means of scientifics which are from the world.

10225. Man's second state is from the fifth up to the twentieth year: this state is a state of instruction and of knowledge, and is called childhood.

—<sup>4</sup>. That the second state is a state of instruction and of knowledge, is evident . . . because the child at that time does not conclude anything from himself, nor does he discriminate between truths and truths, nor even between truths and falsities, from himself, but from others: he only thinks and speaks the things of the memory, thus from knowledge alone; nor does he see and perceive whether a thing is so, except from faith in his master.

10252<sup>6</sup>. The wise men from the east . . . were in the knowledge of correspondences and representations. In those times this knowledge was chiefly with the Arabians, Ethiopians, and others in the east; and therefore . . . by 'Arabia,' 'Ethiopia,' and 'the sons of the east,' are meant those who are in the Knowledges of heavenly things. But in time that knowledge perished, because, when the good of life ceased, it was turned into magic, and was obliterated first with the Israelitish nation, and afterwards with the rest . . .

10272<sup>2</sup>. By ministering goods and truths, are meant the goods and truths which are in the external man, which are called Knowledges and scientifics; for these are the things into which the internal man looks, and from which he selects things confirmatory, which agree with the life of his love . . . There are also goods and truths which minister to these again, which are called sensuous scientifics . . .

10331. 'In wisdom, and in intelligence, and in knowledge, and in every work' (Ex. xxxi. 3) = as to those things which are of the will, and which are of the understanding, in the internal, and in the external man. . . 'Knowledge' = the things which are of the understanding, and thence of the speech, in the external man.

—<sup>2</sup>. A wise man is one who does truths from love; an intelligent one is one who does them from faith; a knowing one is one who does knowingly . . . and therefore no one can be called wise, nor intelligent, nor knowing in the genuine sense, who does not do; for all three,—wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge,—are of life, and not of doctrine without life; for life is the end for the sake of which they are. Such, therefore, as is the end, such are the wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge. (Continued under INTELLIGENCE, here.)

—<sup>3</sup>. Knowledge is to know well; and work is to do well, both from willing well. These two are of the external man.

10406<sup>6</sup>. 'Knowledge' (Jer. x. 14) = Own intelligence.

10416<sup>6</sup>. The delight and festivity . . . when scientifics confirm spiritual things, and agree with them. Sig.

10488. Truth without good is not even truth; for it is only what is scientific devoid of life . . .

10669<sup>2</sup>. 'Fitches and cummin' = scientifics; because these are the first things which are learned in order that a man may receive intelligence.

H. 87. With the Ancients, the knowledge of correspondences was the chief of all knowledges; for by means of it they imbibed intelligence and wisdom; and those who were of the Church, through it had communication with Heaven; for the knowledge of correspondences is angelic knowledge.

108. What knowledge is as it were implanted in every animal! . . . The bees know . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The reason animals . . . are born into all this knowledge, and not man . . . is that animals are in the order of their life . . . 352<sup>3</sup>.

109. Volumes might be [written], and yet the interior arcana . . . cannot be exhausted by knowledge.

267<sup>e</sup>. Sensuous men are not in any wisdom, but only in knowledge.

271. The Angels of the Inmost Heaven do not lay up Divine truths in the memory, thus neither do they make any knowledge from them; but the moment they hear them they perceive them, and commit them to life . . . But the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven first lay up Divine truths in the memory, and store them up in knowledge; and take them out thence, and perfect their understanding by them . . .

279<sup>2</sup>. (The man who is being regenerated) is first led into the knowledge of (good and truth); then from knowledge into intelligence, and finally from intelligence into wisdom; innocence always accompanying, which is . . . that he knows nothing of truth . . . from himself. . .

280<sup>e</sup>. They know—norunt . . . that what they know, relatively to that which they do not know, is as it were nothing . . .

292. The Spirits do not at all know that they are with man . . . for if they did know, they would speak to him ; and then evil Spirits would destroy him . . .

295. In childhood, Spirits are present who are in the affection of knowing, thus who communicate with the Ultimate Heaven . . .

351. It is believed in the world that those who know many things, whether it be from the doctrines of the Church and from the Word, or from the sciences, see truths more interiorly and acutely than others . . . Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. In order to become intelligent and wise, he must learn many things . . . those which are of Heaven, from the Word . . . and those which are of the world, from the sciences.

353. By the sciences are meant experimental things of various kinds ; things physical, astronomical, chemical, mechanical, geometrical, anatomical, psychological, philosophical, historical of kingdoms, also those of the literary world, things critical, and those of language.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Such) regard the things of the Word no otherwise than as others do the sciences.

—<sup>3</sup>. Still, sensuous men can reason . . . but from the fallacies of the senses confirmed by their scientifics.

356. App. Things collected from the Arcana Coelestia concerning knowledges.

— . That scientifics are the first things upon which is built and founded the life of man, civil, moral, and spiritual ; and that they are to be learned for the sake of use as the end. Refs.

—<sup>2</sup>. That there are scientifics which admit truths Divine, and those which do not admit them. Ref.

— . That empty scientifics are to be destroyed. Refs.

— . That empty scientifics are those which have as the end, and which confirm, the loves of self and of the world ; and which withdraw from loves to God and towards the neighbour ; because such close up the internal man . . . Refs.

—<sup>3</sup>. That the internal man is opened and successfully perfected by means of scientifics . . . Ref.

—<sup>12e</sup>. Thus, the scientifics and Knowledges which are of the natural man, without these universals, can be of little service to man's Rational for understanding and increase. Hence it is evident how necessary scientifics are. N.34<sup>e</sup>.

435. For lack of knowledges . . . they cannot conclude rationally . . .

464<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as a man has become rational through languages and knowledges, he is rational after death ; and not at all in proportion as he is skilled in languages and knowledges.

488<sup>2</sup>. They who have studied knowledges, with no other end than to be called learned, and have not cultivated the Rational by them . . . love sandy places . . .

489<sup>4</sup>. They who have loved knowledges, and by them have cultivated their Rational . . . and who have at the same time acknowledged the Divine, have their pleasure of knowledges and rational delight turned into spiritual delight, which is that of the Knowledges of good and truth. They dwell in gardens. Des.

332. Uses for perfecting the Rational are all things which teach the things now spoken of, and are called knowledges and studies, which relate to things natural, economical, civil, and moral, and which are imbibed either from parents and masters, from books, from intercourse with others, or from self by reflection upon these things.

338. For the sake of knowledge, it suffices . . .

366. Consult anyone skilled in anatomical knowledge.

—<sup>2</sup>. They who know these things, either from anatomical science, or from confirmation from those who are in this science, can see that . . .

404. That . . . the first conjunction (of the will and understanding) is through the affection of knowing, from which comes the affection of truth. Gen.art.

— . In the second state, which belongs to man in childhood, there is the affection of knowing . . . Through this the infant child learns to speak, to read, etc. . .

— . That from this is the affection of truth, is evident. For when a man has become intelligent from the affection of knowing, he is not so much led by affection to know, as by affection to reason . . . When this affection is elevated even to spiritual things, it becomes the affection of spiritual truth. That its first, or intiment, was the affection of knowing, may be seen from the fact, that the affection of truth is an exalted affection of knowing; for to be affected with truths is from affection to want to know them . . .

410<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the knowledge which the love acquires to itself from the affection of knowing . . . is not of the understanding, but is of the love.

—<sup>4</sup>. Thoughts, perceptions, and the derivative knowledges, do indeed inflow from the Spiritual World; but still they are not received by the understanding; but by the love according to its affections in the understanding. Ex.

P. 74. Beasts . . . instead of understanding have knowledge . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Every affection has its consort; the affection of natural love has knowledge . . . In beasts there is the marriage of affection and knowledge; in this case the affection is of natural good, and the knowledge is of natural truth.

—<sup>3</sup>. Now as with them affection and knowledge act altogether as one, and their affection cannot be elevated above their knowledge, nor their knowledge above their affection; and if they are elevated, they are elevated both together; and as they have no spiritual mind into which . . . they can be elevated, therefore they have no faculty of understanding . . . or of free will; but mere natural affection with its knowledge . . . They are carried along, from their affection, by means of their knowledge . . . 96<sup>4</sup>, Ex.

275<sup>2</sup>. If man were born into (love truly human), he would be born into . . . a certain light of knowledge and thence of intelligence; and into these he would also quickly come.

276. When the love of the neighbour was turned into the love of self, man could no longer be born into the light of knowledge and intelligence . . .

305. Many complain that they had not known (this) . . . But they are told that they were able to know if they had wanted, that . . .

317. In civil and economical things . . . what is useful and good cannot be seen unless many statutes and ordinances are known; nor in judicial matters, unless the laws are known; nor in the things of nature, as in things physical, chemical, anatomical, mechanical, and so on, unless a man has been imbued with the sciences. But in things purely rational, moral, and spiritual, truths appear from their light itself; provided the man, from a just education, has become a little rational, moral, and spiritual. (The reason of this Ex.) . . . A man sees these things . . . as he sees the mind of another from his face . . . without any other knowledge than that which is implanted in everyone. Why should not man in some measure see from influx the interior things of his own life, which are spiritual and moral, when there is no animal which does not from influx know its own necessary things, which are natural?

R. 206. They who believe from themselves . . . believe that they know and understand all things. Sig.

242. 'A calf' = the affection of knowing. Ill.

288. 'Riches and wisdom' = the Divine knowledge and wisdom, which are omniscience.

—<sup>e</sup>. 'Riches' = the Knowledges of good and truth, and thus knowledge.

337. Those who, before the separation, had been in the understanding of truth and good, in the knowledge of the Knowledges of them . . . and still not in a life according to them. Sig.

351. The consort of natural love is knowledge . . .

775. Because they have not scientific goods and truths in the things of the Church, to which such things correspond. Sig. and Ex.

— By these things are signified scientifics, which are the ultimates of the natural mind, and which differ in quality according to the essence which is in them. Sig. For by 'vessels' are signified scientifics; here, in the things of the Church; because scientifics are the containments of good and truth . . . Moreover, scientifics are of great variety, and their receptacle is the memory. The reason they are of great variety, is that the interiors of man are in them; moreover, they are introduced into the memory either from intellectual thought, from hearing, or from reading, and then according to various perception from the Rational. All these things are within scientifics, as appears when they are reproduced, which takes place when the man thinks or speaks.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'A vessel of precious wood' = the Scientific from rational good and truth; 'a vessel of brass' = the Scientific from natural good; 'a vessel of iron' = the Scientific from natural truth; and 'a vessel of marble' = the Scientific from the appearance of good and truth.

M. 25<sup>e</sup>. Because He had deigned to bless them with knowledge and thence intelligence concerning heavenly joys.

133. Why man is not born into the knowledge of any love, when yet beasts and birds . . . are born into the knowledges of all their loves. Fully Ex. 134.

134. The Northerns said, that man is horn without knowledges in order that he may receive all; whereas if he were born into knowledges, he could not receive any except those into which he had been born; and neither could he appropriate to himself any knowledge. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Westerns said . . . Connate knowledges and affections limit the progression; whereas connate faculty and inclination limit nothing; and therefore man can be perfected to eternity in knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom.

—<sup>3</sup>. The Southerns said, that it is impossible for man to take any knowledge from himself; but he takes it from others, since he has no connate knowledge; and as he cannot take any knowledge from himself, so neither can he take any love, since where there is not knowledge there is no love. Knowledge and love are inseparable companions, and can no more be separated than will and understanding, or affection and thought, or than essence and form; and therefore, as a man takes knowledge from others, so love adjoins itself thereto as its companion. The universal love which adjoins itself is the love of knowing, understanding, and being wise. This love belongs to man alone . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. To these things we add, that beasts are born into natural loves, and thence into the knowledges corresponding to them; and yet that they do not know, think, understand, and possess wisdom from know-ledges; but they are carried along by means of them by their loves . . . like sleep-walkers, who do what they do from blind knowledge, the understanding being lulled.

—<sup>5</sup>. The Easterns said . . . Man becomes a likeness of the Lord by his feeling (what is good and true) in himself, as from himself. This he feels, because he is not born into knowledges, but receives them . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. They then formed this conclusion: Man is born into no knowledge, in order that he may come into all knowledge . . . and he is born into no love, in order that he may come into all, by the applications of knowledges from intelligence . . .

163. The things which belong to the rational wisdom of the men are called, in general, knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom . . . But everyone has knowledges peculiar to his calling. Enum.

—<sup>2</sup>. To rational wisdom pertain all the sciences into which youths are initiated in the schools; and through them afterwards into intelligence; and which are called by various names; as things philosophical, physical, geometrical, mechanical, chemical, astronomical, juridical, political, ethical, historical, and many more; through which, as through doors, an entrance is made into things rational . . .

187. That . . . the men from creation are forms of knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom; and women are forms of the love of these things with the men. Ex.

270<sup>2</sup>. The lowest region of the mind, where conjugal love dwells in the love of what is just and right with its knowledge. Rep.

298. Parents deliberate from judgment, knowledge, and love . . . As regards the suitor, they acquire Knowledges; and as regards their daughter, they know.

299. The daughter cannot (judge) from knowledge or Knowledge, because she knows few things.

I. 16<sup>e</sup>. They who are in the Ultimate Heaven are in the love of knowing truths and goods . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. A man can become . . . an Angel of the Ultimate Heaven if he receives only the love of knowing truths and goods . . .

T. 12<sup>e</sup>. Such knowledges cannot be given to (animals) from the sun . . .

32<sup>4</sup>. From the infinity to which each knowledge may grow . . .

42. The ultimate region (of the mind) . . . is opened from infancy to childhood, and this is effected by means of knowledges. The second region . . . is opened from childhood to adolescence, and this is effected by means of thoughts from knowledges . . .

73<sup>3</sup>. Natural faith is only knowledge and persuasion. 339.

160<sup>7</sup>. He knows no otherwise than that he is still living in the same world . . .

186. Theological things . . . are in the highest region (of the mind); moral things . . . are in the second region . . . political things are in the first region; and scientifics, which are manifold, and which can be referred into genera and species, make the door to those higher things . . .

665<sup>4</sup>. You, who have studied the sciences, tell us . . .

Ad. Jer.xxiii.17. When knowledges and the things of the memory . . . wanted to introduce themselves into spiritual things, and as it were to build them, I at once fell into doubtings . . . For particulars can never enter into universals . . .

D. 155<sup>4</sup>. When, by scientifics excited by the love of self and of the world . . . he wants to introduce himself into the mysteries of faith . . .

249. That the natural sciences, or those of natural things, are at this day like the ultimate heaven, which perverts Truths into Falsities. Ex.

— The sciences, or the wisdom of the present day is such, that it cannot serve as a plane for spiritual Truths, still less for celestial ones; but it is like the ultimate heaven, which perverts into the contrary the Truths which descend from Heaven. For, at this day, whatever is taught through the sciences concerning the natural causes of phenomena . . . and also whatever is deduced for the Knowledge of the soul, and the like, is full of false hypotheses, in which not a single Truth is evident to the view . . .

250. I say . . . with those who study scientifics so that they will believe nothing without them: beyond the use [performed by them] in schools . . .

560. See JUPITER, here.

690a. His faith was . . . completely suffocated by earthly knowledges . . . Thus his faith was hurried in knowledges.

691. I discussed with them concerning the necessity of knowledges in life, that the things which are of true faith alone are necessary . . .

767. On various sciences, how they occupy the human mind, and give quality to it.

— As to philosophy, every part of it has hitherto effected nothing else than to darken minds . . .

768. As to mechanical science, when one indulges too much in mechanical business, he forms the mind so as to [believe] that there is nothing except what is mechanical . . .

769. As to geometry and the like, this also as it were concentrates the mind and hinders it from going into universals . . .

770. As to things historical, they are things which do no harm, provided they are not merely things of the memory.

771. See MEMORY here.

772. Natural experience, such as that pertaining to a garden . . . does not impede spiritual Knowledges . . .

773. All Knowledges are free from harm, provided everything is not made to consist in them, but another end is intended. They are spiritual riches, on which is founded the understanding of things . . .

2523. That knowledges are not to be rejected . . . If truths are confirmed by them, they then illuminate, because man is in knowledges.

2634. How the case is with natural sciences and their Truths, relatively to spiritual and celestial Truths. Ex.

2736. That knowledges contribute nothing to salvation, but rather confuse and distort ideas.

— Knowledges contribute nothing to salvation, but only the Knowledges of Truths, from the Word of the Lord; and this . . . is circumstanced as is the Knowledge of the human body, as to things anatomical . . . which effects nothing towards the preservation of health . . . In like manner intellectual health, which may be much greater with those who know nothing concerning the understanding, than with him who has studied these things all his life, and who is confused with hypotheses and scholastic things.

2781. On the inverted order of Knowing spiritual and celestial Truths. . . It is like one who wants to know what the will is from the muscles . . . So are natural knowledges, relatively to the things which are of faith.

2927. That Spirits, although not instructed in life, appropriate to themselves all the knowledges of man . . .

2955<sup>2</sup>. The second kind receive (the things written by me) as scientifics; and are delighted with them as scientifics, and as curious things.

2976. There are . . . four spheres of faith; namely, the sphere of knowledge . . .

2978. The sphere of knowledge is that which does not admit the things which are of faith . . .

2995. That those who long for good care nothing for scientifics, and as it were refuse them.

2999. On the confirmation of heavenly Truths by human scientifics.

3117. One who said that he knows what he wills; to whom it was insinuated that he knows nothing except what tends to his delight.

3143. That scientifics also are implanted in Spirits . . . Spirits retain in the interior memory the things which they hear, see, and perceive, as men do in the exterior memory; but they cannot recall these things; only the Lord.

3259. Although they do not know that they know, yet as soon as it occurs, they recollect it. (Thus) the memory of Spirits is much more perfect than the memory of men . . .

[D.] 3351. How much the knowledges and intelligence of Spirits exceed those of men. Ex.

3376. After the Flood . . . there thus succeeded scientific ideas, which were separated . . . Thus . . . scientific and intellectual faith is stored up separately. 3377°.

3378°. (Whereas) with us there are good scientifics, but evil affections.

3460. In themselves, the sciences are not such that they are to be rejected, for spiritual things can be confirmed by them; and therefore the Angels understand indefinitely more things in all the sciences than can ever be believed . . . But they who are learned, in every science, hardly intermit to reason . . . about spiritual things, each from his own science, and thus they blind themselves. For, in order to seem learned, many reason from their own sciences; as the philosophers from theirs, the logicians from theirs, the metaphysicians from theirs, the anatomists from theirs, the geometers from theirs, the historians from theirs, the politicians from theirs, and so on; and therefore in the learned the ideas are closed, thus spiritual and celestial things, and thus Heaven; whereas it is open to the unlearned. Who worship nature as God more than those who are men of knowledge-sciences, from every science whatever?

3493. They who acknowledged orally and scientifically that . . .

3571°. Although they were scientifically persuaded . . .

3591. That we can know nothing, except what is given by the Lord. Ex.

3819. Beasts are not skilled in the arts and sciences, as the mechanical, physical, philosophical, and many others; nevertheless they are in them, and, in fact, like the body of man, in their most secret arcana; and from nature they know many more things than man by all his arts and sciences; as for example, they know how to build nests, to form webs, etc. . . These are the scientifics which beasts know-norunt; man by his sciences does not advance so far. Therefore sciences and things of art are such things as man has in common with beasts; and therefore they in like manner regard natural life; for the ends are terminated in nature.

4039°. Scientifics are acquired there also; and the faculty of acquiring and of exercising them is greater; but still not beyond the acquired actuality.

4057. I marvelled that the deceitful, etc. are in such great knowledge-notitia-and science in infusing and doing evil . . . when yet in the life of the body they had known nothing of the kind . . . But it was perceived that he who is in any cupidity . . . (there) knows-notit-all things which are of that insane love . . . He who is in cupidity . . . is in the knowledge of such things,

VOL. IV.

even when it is excited by others; and therefore in proportion as anyone is in the life of cupidities, in the same proportion he is in the knowledge of those things which belong to the cupidities . . .

4059. That affections are attended with all knowledge. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Neither would man have any need to build up sciences artificially . . . if he were in the love of true faith . . .

4143°. From this it is evident that rational Spirits cannot be together with scientific Spirits; and that they are quite distinct.

4171. Faith (alone) is nothing but knowledge; and he is insane who supposes that knowledge alone, or Knowledge, saves; since all Knowledge is for the sake of the end that one may become good.

4294. That scientifics and doctrinals are nothing, unless the man so does. Ex.

4477. Whatever be the idea from scientifics . . . Sirens, when they call it forth from the man, turn it into magic . . . They entered into my scientifics concerning the viscera . . .

4627<sup>13</sup>. He is in such scientifics . . .

4628. They who are instructed in the sciences . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason the learned are such, is that they learn the sciences for the sake of the reputation of learning . . . and not that they may be wise through the sciences . . .

4755°. And this naturally, without previous knowledge, because it is according to order.

4779. I was brought back to the region where are those who are in sciences . . . and these were the least of all able to receive the Heavenly doctrine . . . But further to the right . . . were those . . . who had not extinguished, by sciences, the gift of perception that it is so.

4782. They called the Spirits from this Earth sciences; for they correspond to sciences which are not abstracted from material things, but which are conjoined with them. Thus in this Earth it is known, from science, that God is a Man; elsewhere not from science.

4843. He had known-noverat-the doctrinals of his Church, but only scientifically . . .

5141. Those correspond to the bones who have studied various sciences, but have made no use of them; as those who have studied mathematics merely to invent rules . . .

5177°. (Then) wisdom and intelligence perish, and from them is made knowledge.

5643°. For the longing to know grows according to the good of love . . .

5709. As the sciences have closed up the understanding, therefore the sciences also open it; and it is opened in proportion as they are in good.

5710°. Science teaches that there is with man an internal and an external man . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. In a word, nothing can be founded upon scientifics, unless it has first been founded upon the Word. This must be the first thing; the second is only confirmation from the man's scientifics.

5944. On the tree of knowledge. Gen.art.

— Only the celestial can know what is meant by to eat of the tree of knowledge. (Examps. given of what is meant by it.) First. If a person can think well . . . and then wants to think from metaphysical and logical rules . . . then his former faculty perishes. Second. If a person can conduct himself becomingly . . . if he afterwards learns the rules of decorum from science, and . . . moves his body and face according to these, his natural faculty perishes . . . Third. If a famous dancer wants to learn rules and dance by them; and still more if he wants to do so from the science of the muscles. In a word, in proportion as a man wants to think and act from the knowledge which is of the memory, he acts from his own proper Intellectual; but in proportion as he does so from affection, he does so from another origin. As concerns truth and good, in proportion as he thinks, wills, and acts them from the knowledge which is of the memory, thus from obedience alone, he acts them from his Own Intellectual, thus from evil . . . Hence it is evident that in proportion as a man is led by the Lord, he is led by an affection within him, and by innumerable laws, almost all of which are unknown; and if, then, he wants to act from knowledge, the former state perishes, which is from the influx of the Lord's Divine; and there comes forth a state from proprium, which is from evil. This is meant by the Lord's words, 'Let your discourse be Yea, or Nay; what is beyond this is from evil.'

6011. On the progression of truth or faith from knowledge into the understanding, then from the understanding into the will, and from the will into act.

D. Min. 4578. How worthless are the knowledges of the present day. Ex.

— In general, knowledges are nothing else than means of being wise, or for forming one's Rational . . . They who are in truths, can by knowledges acquire many confirmations, and thus infl their ideas. They who are in falsities can also by the same knowledges loose confirmations, and thus infl their ideas with falsities. Useful knowledges are things physical, optical, chemical, pharmaceutical, anatomical, mathematical, astronomical, architectural, botanical, metallurgical, historical, the governments of kingdoms, and the like; from all of which, as means, everyone can become rational. But there are some [knowledges] which completely destroy the faculty of thinking, and destroy the Rational; as things scholastical . . . philosophical . . . logical . . . (and also) things geometrical and algebraical, when simple Truths are demonstrated by means of them, and the thing . . . is expressed by angular, circular, and curved figures, and is explained according to them . . . Such knowledges, and the applications of such knowledges, cause a man to lose his common sense, and become insane.

4579. Such is modern wisdom. Ancient wisdom was never such: this taught naked Truths; and thus one could know and think innumerable truths; while at this day he can know scarcely any.

4657. Still, there are many useful knowledges, which strengthen and enlighten ideas: such as all physical or natural knowledge in the three kingdoms of the world; especially that of experience; as things astronomical, geometrical, optical, chemical, mechanical, historical, anatomical, medical, those of civil law, and such things also as are called philosophical.

48267. The stomach corresponds to the desire of knowing, for the sake of use . . .

E. 117<sup>e</sup>. Whoever is in the spiritual affection of truth, apperceives that there are few things which he knows, and infinite things which he does not know; and he also knows—novit—that to know and acknowledge this, is the first step to wisdom; and that those do not arrive at the first step who are proud from knowledges, and who from them believe themselves to be the most intelligent.

118. 'And poverty, but thou art rich' = the acknowledgment that they know nothing from themselves. Ex. and Ill.

204<sup>3</sup>. It is only knowledge.

213. 'To know' (Rev.iii.10) = Knowledge.

236<sup>2</sup>. To know . . . falsities is not to be intelligent . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. But now they know that they know scarcely anything. To know something, in the Spiritual World, means to know something of truth; whereas to know falsities is not to know . . .

237<sup>2</sup>. 'Thy wisdom and thy knowledge hath seduced thee . . .' (Is.xlvii.10) = those who believe that they know all things . . . when yet they know nothing of truth . . .

242<sup>4</sup>. The circle of life is to know, to understand, to will, and to do; for the spiritual life of man begins from knowing . . . Whence it is evident that Knowledges are only in the entrance to life when they are in the memory, and that they are not fully in man until they are in his deeds, and that they are more fully in the deeds in proportion as they are more fully in the understanding and the will.

376<sup>33</sup>. 'To know' (Is.lvi.11) = to be able.

386<sup>12</sup>. The desolation or destruction of the Church by there being no Knowledges of good and truth, is signified by, 'My people shall be banished for lack of knowledge' (Is.v.13).

409<sup>3</sup>. 'By His knowledge shall My just servant justify many' = . . . the salvation thence of those who are in spiritual faith, which is of charity; 'knowledge' = Divine truth, and thence Divine wisdom and intelligence.

417<sup>7</sup>. The vastation of all confirmatory scientifics, and of the Knowledges of good and truth. Sig.

504<sup>20</sup>. That there is no longer . . . the understanding of truth, is signified by, 'there is no longer . . . with us any that knoweth' (Ps.lxxiv.9).

507<sup>2</sup>. Knowledges are only the means to uses; and such as they are, such are the uses which come forth from them. They are alive, when the man acquires by them intelligence and wisdom . . .

511<sup>2</sup>. When a merely natural affection dominates, then in the natural man there is not any truth, but all that is there is a Scientific not true. A dead Scientific is a false Scientific; the reason of which is that then the scientifics there conjoin themselves with affections merely natural, which all spring from the loves of self and of the world; and yet truths themselves, being in themselves spiritual, conjoin themselves only with spiritual affections . . .

512. That the love of self, when it enters into . . . the natural man, turns the whole Scientific therein into the falsity of evil. Sig.

513. By a living Scientific is meant a Scientific which derives life from spiritual affection; for this affection gives life to truths, and thence gives life to scientifics; for scientifics are the containants of spiritual Truths.

514<sup>7</sup>. 'Ships' . . . = the knowledges of the natural man; for these contain in themselves, and as it were carry, spiritual wealth, as ships do worldly wealth.

— By the last boundaries of the Land of Canaan are signified the ultimates of the Church, which are knowledges which comprehend the Knowledges of truth and good. . . By knowledges are meant such knowledges as there were with the Ancients, namely, the knowledges of correspondences, of representations, of influxes, and of Heaven and Hell, which especially comprehend (or comprise) the Knowledges of truth and good of the Church, and serve them.

—<sup>9</sup>. That all intelligence and knowledge are from the Lord. Sig. It is believed that knowledge is from man; but knowledge, in so far as it serves intelligence, in which is the perception of truth, is from the Lord alone.

545<sup>2</sup>. By scientifics from the Word, are meant all things of the sense of the letter therein in which there does not appear what is doctrinal . . .

559. 'They had tails like scorpions' = sensuous scientifics which are persuasive.

— For sensuous scientifics are the ultimates of intelligence and wisdom.

—<sup>2</sup>. Sensuous scientifics are those scientifics which enter from the world through the five senses of the body; and thence, regarded in themselves, are more material, corporeal, and worldly, than those which are more interior. All . . . sensuous men, when left to themselves . . . think about Divine and spiritual things from sensuous scientifics, and they consequently reject Divine and spiritual things . . . and their own scientifics, which they have made sensuous and material, they apply to destroy them. For example, the learned men of this kind who know norunt—things physical, anatomical, those pertaining to a garden, and many things which are of human learning, when they see the wonderful things in the animal and vegetable kingdoms, say in their hearts, that all these things are from nature, and not from the Divine; and this because they do not believe in anything except what they see with their eyes and touch with their hands; for they cannot elevate their minds above, and thus see them from the light of Heaven; for this light is thick darkness to them; but they keep their minds down in earthly things, almost in like manner as do the animals of the earth, to which they also compare themselves. In a Word, all knowledges with such are made sensuous; for such as is the man himself, such are all things which are of his understanding and will . . . These things have been adduced, in order that it may be known what sensuous scientifics are.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason these (sensuous scientifics) . . . are in the highest degree persuasive, is that they are the ultimates of the understanding . . . which captivate the generality, because they are appearances from such things as they see in the world with their eyes; and, so long as the thought inheres in them, the mind cannot be disposed to think interiorly, or above them, until they have been removed; for the interiors which are of the mind all cease in ultimates, and rest on them as a house does on its foundation; and therefore they persuade in the highest degree; but only those whose minds cannot be elevated above sensuous things . . .

560. The reason the stings were in their tails, is that it is scientifics sensuously perceived by which they deceive, both by scientifics from the Word, and by the scientifics from the world from which is human learning. They deceive by scientifics from the Word, in that they explain it sensuously according to the letter, and not according to its interior sense; and by scientifics from the world, in that they confirm thereby.

569<sup>10</sup>. The first terminus (or boundary) of the Church, is the Scientific which is of the natural man . . . which is signified by the Nile. To (this) the Spiritual Church extends itself . . . in like manner the spiritual mind. Both the Scientific and the Rational are in the natural man; the one end of which is the Scientific and the Cognitive, and the other end is the Intuitive and the Cogitative; into these ends inflows the spiritual man when in the natural man.

577<sup>2</sup>. Therefore with these, instead of intelligence, there is only knowledge, from which proceeds reasoning . . . Sig.

581. That from sensuous scientifics, which are fallacies, they reason cunningly. Sig. . . For by 'the head,' when predicated of the sensuous man, is signified knowledge, and the derivative infatuated thought.

— Sensuous scientifics become fallacies when a man reasons from them concerning spiritual things; as for example, that dignities and wealth are real blessings . . .

—<sup>11</sup>. 'The heels of a horse' = truths in ultimates, which are sensuous scientifics.

617<sup>15</sup>. By 'the tree of the knowledge of good and evil,' is signified the knowledge of natural things, by means of which it is not allowable to enter into the celestial and spiritual things which are of Heaven and the Church, consequently, from the natural man into the spiritual, which is an inverted way, and thus does not lead to wisdom, but destroys it . . . The men of the Most Ancient Church, being in love to the Lord, had Divine truths inscribed on them, and thence, from influx, they knew—noverunt—the corresponding things in the natural man, which are called scientifics . . . If, therefore, they had committed spiritual things to the natural memory, and in this way had appropriated them to themselves, that which was implanted with them would have perished, and they would have begun to reason from the natural man about spiritual things . . . This, therefore, is what is signified by their not eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

[E.] 627<sup>8</sup>. 'Grass instead of the reed and the rush.' 'Grass'=knowledge from a spiritual origin, or that by which spiritual truth is confirmed; but 'the reed and the rush'=knowledge from a sensuous origin, or that by which the fallacies of the senses are confirmed. This latter knowledge, regarded in itself, is only knowledge in the lowest degree natural, which is to be called material and corporeal, and in which there is little or no life.

—<sup>11</sup>. 'A reed'=truth in the ultimate of order, which is called the sensuous Scientific, and which becomes mere falsity when it is solely of the natural man separated from the spiritual.

654<sup>91</sup>. 'Scales' (of a fish)=the fallacies of the senses, which are scientifics of the lowest sort.

659<sup>4</sup>. By 'the pit' is signified the Hell where such dead scientifics reign, that is, scientifics separated from truths, because applied to confirm falsities of doctrine and evils of life.

696<sup>17</sup>. By 'the spirit of knowledge' (Is.xi.2) is meant the Divine Natural, which is the proceeding Divine received by the Angels of the First Heaven.

714. 'A great red dragon'=. . . those who suppose that they are saved by knowledge alone without life.

—<sup>2</sup>. For knowledge and the faculty of reasoning do not make a man spiritual, but life itself . . . because knowledge and the derivative faculty of reasoning are only natural, and therefore are possible with . . . the worst . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. By 'a dragon,' in general, are meant those who are more or less natural, and still are in the knowledge of spiritual things from the Word. Ex.

715. 'Having seven heads'=the knowledge of the holy things of the Word, which they had adulterated . . . 775.

717<sup>17</sup>. By 'the king of the north,' are meant those who are in knowledge from the Word, and yet not in life . . .

785. By 'the head' of this beast, is signified knowledge; for, where the understanding does not see, there is no intelligence, but in its place there is knowledge; and, moreover, of those who are in falsities there cannot be predicated intelligence, but knowledge.

790<sup>6</sup>. But all these things . . . even if they are from the Word, before the spiritual mind has been opened, are natural, for they are only knowledge.

914<sup>2</sup>. The wisdom of men, in comparison with the wisdom of the Angels, is as knowledge is to intelligence . . .

941<sup>2</sup>. (Man infils the Natural) with the Knowledges of truth and good, and also adapts to them the knowledges which are from the world, in order that they may confirm and agree. Hence man has the Rational . . .

957<sup>8</sup>. Therefore, they who are in the Inmost Heaven are in wisdom; they who are in the Middle Heaven are in intelligence, and they who are in the Ultimate Heaven are in knowledge.

1146. The reason 'a vessel'=the Scientific, is that all truth in the natural man is called scientific; (and) the Scientific of the natural man is the containant of rational and spiritual Truths; for, when these have been thought and perceived, they are laid aside in the memory, and are called scientifics. Hence it is that by 'vessels,' in the Word, are signified Knowledges, which, in so far as they are of the natural man, laid aside in his memory, are scientifics.

1170. 'The sailors'=those who are in knowledge.

1180. The man who knows all goods and all truths, as many as can be known, and does not shun evils, knows nothing. Evils absorb and cast them out, and he becomes a fool; not in the world, but afterwards. Whereas the man who knows few goods and few truths, and shuns evils, knows them, and superadds more, and becomes wise; if not in the world, still afterwards. As therefore everyone, in every religion, knows evils, and from these falsities . . . and, when he shuns them, knows the goods which are to be done, and the truths which are to be believed, it is evident that a universal means of salvation has been provided by the Lord . . .

1186. No longer any wisdom, intelligence and knowledge. Sig.

— . Wisdom is the inmost of the understanding, intelligence is the middle of it, and its ultimate is knowledge.

1190<sup>2</sup>. All the eminent in Heaven are wise, and all the wealthy are knowing; and therefore the eminence there is of wisdom, and the wealth there is of knowledge. This eminence and wealth . . . are acquired by all in the world who love wisdom and knowledge. To love wisdom is to love the uses which are true uses; and to love knowledge is to love the Knowledges of good and truth for the sake of these uses.

1202<sup>2</sup>. Beasts . . . instead of understanding have knowledge.

—<sup>4</sup>. What a beast knows is not from any understanding, but from the knowledge of affection, which is its soul. The knowledges of affection exists in everything spiritual; because the Spiritual which proceeds from the Lord as a Sun is light united to heat, or wisdom united to love; and knowledge is of wisdom, and affection is of love, in the degree which is called natural. (Continued under BEAST.)

J. (Post.) 285. The love of knowing. Gen.art.

— . The love of knowing is the external of the will; the use for the sake of which it is, is the internal of the will.

De Verbo 19<sup>4</sup>. The natural, spiritual, and celestial senses . . . succeed each other as do knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom; and therefore the men of the Earth, being in natural light, are called by the Angels knowing; the Angels of the Spiritual Kingdom are called intelligent; and the Angels of the Celestial Kingdom are called wise.

D. Wis. 1<sup>4</sup>. The light in the lowest Heavens is like the noonday light of the world, because they are in knowledge. —.

xi. 6a. Knowledge, and the derivative thought, are two faculties distinct from the will . . .

Korah. Korach.

E. 324<sup>a</sup>. The reason Korah, Dathan, and Ahiram, together with their company, were swallowed up by the earth, although they took fire from the altar, and offered incense, was that by their murmuring against Moses and Aaron was signified the profanation of the good of celestial love. For by Moses and Aaron was represented the Lord; and to murmur, that is, to rebel against the Lord, and to perform holy things, is profanation . . . 496<sup>a</sup>. 727<sup>11</sup>.

Koran. Alcoran, Coran.

E. 1180<sup>2</sup>. A Mohammedan sees from the Koran that God is one, that the Lord is the Son of God, that all good is from God, that there is a Heaven and a Hell, that there is a life after death, and that the evils which are [mentioned] in the precepts of the Decalogue are to be shunned. If he does these things, he also believes them, and is saved.

Laban. Laban.

3012. 'Laban' (in Gen.xxiv.)=the affection of good in the natural man.

3130. 'His name was Laban' (ver.29)=the quality of (the affection of good in the natural man).

3131. 'Laban ran to the man out of doors to the fountain' (id.)=the mind-animus-of the affection of good towards truth . . . 'Laban'=the affection of good. 3135.

3149. 'Laban'=the affection of good in the natural man (which wanted these Divine things to be appropriated).

3160. 'Laban answered . . .' (ver.50)=the acknowledgment that it was of the Lord alone . . . By Laban as a brother is represented the affection of good in the natural man . . . The affection of good and the affection of truth in the natural man are like brother and sister . . .

3612. 'Flee thee to Laban my brother, to Haran' (Gen.xxvii.43)=to the affection of external or corporeal good. 'Laban'=the affection of good in the natural man . . . But what is properly signified here by 'Laban,' and 'Haran,' may be evident from what follows . . . namely, that it is collateral good of a common stock. 3665. 3676.

3691. By Laban . . . is signified good and truth.

3778. 'Know ye Laban the son of Nahor' . . . 'Laban'=collateral good of a common stock. 3793<sup>2</sup>. 3815. 3818.

— Terah . . . represents the common stock, from which are the Churches . . . Abram puts on the representation of the genuine Church . . . and Nahor his brother . . . that of the Church such as it is with the gentiles . . . Hence it is that by Nahor, his son Bethnel, and his son Laban, is represented the collateral good of a common stock; that is, the good in which are they who are of the Lord's Church with the gentiles. This good differs from the good of a common stock in the direct line in this,—that there are no genuine truths which are conjoined with their good; but most of them are external appearances, which are called the fallacies of the senses; for they have not the Word . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. As to this good (represented by Laban) the case is, that at first of all it serves man as a means for acquiring spiritual good; for it is external corporeal, and is from external appearances, which in themselves are fallacies of the senses. In childhood, man acknowledges nothing else for truth and good; and although he is taught what internal good and truth are, still he has no other idea of them than a corporeal one; and as such is his first idea, therefore such good and truth are the first medium by which interior goods and truths are introduced. This is the arcanum which is here represented by Jacob and Laban.

3982. The good represented by Laban is such, that it is only a good which is useful to introduce genuine truths and goods; and, when it has performed this use, it is afterwards left behind . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. When a man is being born anew . . . he is led by many affections of good and truth which are not affections of genuine good and truth, but are only useful for the apprehending of these, and afterwards for the imbuing of them; and, when man has imbued them, then the former things are given to oblivion and left behind . . . This, also, is the case with the collateral good which is signified by 'Laban,' relatively to the good of truth which is signified by 'Jacob;' and also by the flock of each of them.

[A.] 3984. It treats of the quality of the good represented by Laban, before it was conjoined with the good of truth, which is 'Jacob,' that it was of little use, that is, was barren.

3986<sup>5</sup>. For by 'Laban' is signified such good as is not genuine, because genuine truths have not been implanted in it; but which still is such that they can be conjoined with it, and in which the Divine can be. It is wont to be with little children before they have received genuine truths; and such good is also with the simple within the Church who know few truths of faith, but still live in charity; and such good is also with upright gentiles, who are in the holy worship of their gods. Through such good, genuine truths and goods can be introduced.

3990. That it was not to be brought from the good represented by Laban. Sig.

3991. That the good represented by Laban was to be employed for use; namely, that of introducing genuine goods and truths. Sig.

3993<sup>4</sup>. The fructification of good and the multiplication of truth . . . are what are signified by the flock which Jacob acquired through the flock of Laban . . . The flock of Laban=the good which is represented by Laban.

—<sup>7</sup>. 'What is speckled' . . . with black and white =the good with which evil is mixed; and 'what is spotted'=the truth with which falsity is mixed. These are the things which are taken from the good of Laban, in order that they may serve to introduce genuine goods and truths. Ex. and Examps.

3994. 'And all the black cattle in the lambs'=the proprium of innocence which is of the good signified by Laban. Ex.

4000. From the good meant by Laban . . . 4005.

4005<sup>3</sup>. That from one good, which is here represented by Laban, so many various goods can be separated. Ex.

4011. 'And Jacob fed the rest of Laban's flocks' (Gen.xxx.36)=that from the things which were left he took those goods and truths which might be conjoined.

4020. That thence natural good had such things from the middle good signified by Laban. Sig.

—<sup>6</sup>. Such are the things which are here signified, and which acceded to the good of natural truth represented by Jacob, from the good signified by Laban.

4024. 'In the flock of Laban' (ver.40)=in the good signified by Laban. . . 'Laban'=good, namely, middle good, whereby the Natural has goods and truths.

4026. 'And he did not set them to the flock of Laban' (id.)=absolute separation from the good signified by

Laban. . . For Divine goods and truths are completely separated from those goods and truths which derive anything from what is human . . .

4027<sup>3</sup>. It here treats . . . of the good which serves as a medium, and which is here signified by Laban and his flock.

4033. 'Of the next in coition was Laban's' (ver.42)=that the compulsory things were left.

—<sup>5</sup>. After the good which is signified by Laban and his flock has served these uses, it is then separated. This separation is treated of in the following chapter. 4061.

4063. 'He heard the words of the sons of Laban, saying' (Gen.xxxi.1)=the truths of the good signified by Laban, as to what their quality was relatively to the good acquired thence in the Natural by the Lord. . . 'Laban'=collateral good of a common stock, thus such good as may serve to introduce genuine goods and truths; here, that which has served; for it treats of its separation.

—<sup>2</sup>. How the case is with the good signified by Laban, relatively to the good of truth represented by Jacob . . . may be illustrated by the states of the regeneration of man . . . When man is being regenerated, he is kept by the Lord in a certain middle good. This good serves to introduce genuine goods and truths; but after these goods and truths have been introduced, it is separated thence. (Continued under GOOD.)

4065. Other good (than His own) had indeed served the Lord as a means, and which had relationship with what was maternal; for Laban, by whom this good is signified, was the brother of Rebekah, who was the mother of Jacob . . .

4066. 'And Jacob saw the faces of Laban' (ver.2)=a change of state with that good when the good meant by Jacob was receding. . . 'Laban'=middle good. 4074.

4067. From Laban, that is, from the good signified by Laban, nothing was taken; but it had its own things as before.

—<sup>4</sup>. Man is led from the state of the old man to the state of the new man . . . by means of angelic Societies, and by the changes of them. Middle goods and delights are nothing else than such Societies . . . and when the man has been brought thereby to spiritual and celestial goods and truths, these Societies are separated, and more interior and perfect ones are adjoined. Nothing else is meant by the middle good signified by Laban, and by the separation of that good, which is treated of in this chapter. 4069<sup>6</sup>.

4077. If, now, instead of the good which is signified by Laban, we conceive of such a Society of Spirits and Angels as are in such good, it is evident how the case is. The Societies do not easily recede from him with whom they have been; but when he with whom they are recedes, then they are indignant, and behave in like manner as Laban here did towards Jacob; nay, even if they perceive that any good has acceded to him through them, they say that it has acceded from them; for in their indignation they speak from evil.

4088. 'Because I have seen all that Laban doeth to thee' (ver.12)=the proprium of the good signified by

Laban, that it is not such as [to act] from itself. (For) Laban=middle good. . . (And) the Societies which are in such good . . . are not such as to do much from themselves, or from proprium; but they suffer themselves to be led by others, thus to good by the Angels, and to evil by evil Spirits; which also shines forth from the historicals here concerning Laban, especially from the things which follow.

4097. 'Have we any longer a portion and inheritance in the house of our father?'=the first state of the separation (of the affections of truth) from the good signified by Laban. Ex.

4105. The separation of the truth and good which are from Laban's. Sig. and Ex.

4110. 'Laban had gone to shear his flock' (ver.19)=a state of use and of an end of good, which is 'the flock of Laban.'

— It now treats of the separation of the middle good which is Laban, from the good procured thence which is Jacob. (Continued under EVIL SPIRIT.)

4111. A change of the state signified by Laban as to truth. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. As to the good signified by Laban, and its change of state; so long as it was with the good represented by Jacob, it was nearer to the Divine . . . and was (therefore) in a more perfect state of truth and good. But when it was being separated thence, it came into another state as to truth, and as to good . . .

4112. 'Jacob stole the heart of Laban the Aramean' (ver.20)=a change of the state signified by Laban as to good. . . 'Laban'=middle good, which is now being separated; and, because it is being separated, Laban is now called 'the Aramean' . . . for 'Laban the Aramean'=such good as has not within it Divine good and truth as before. Ex.

4113. For Laban had believed, that as Jacob had served him, all things which were Jacob's should be his . . .

4121. '(Laban) took his brothers with him' (ver.23)=goods in place of those which he had lost. . . 'And pursued after him'=continued ardour of conjunction. 4122.

4125. 'And God came to Laban the Aramean in a dream [by night]' (ver.24)=an obscure perception of that good when left to itself. 'Laban'=the middle good.

4126. 'And said to him, Beware lest thou speak with Jacob from good even to evil' (id.)=that there should be communication no longer.

4127. 'And Laban overtook Jacob' (ver.25)=something of conjunction.

4129. 'And Laban fixed with his brothers in Mount Gilead' (id.)=a state of good in something of this conjunction. 'Laban'=a good now separated from the good represented by Jacob.

4131. 'Laban said to Jacob' (ver.26)=a state of communication of the good now represented by Laban, with that good which is now represented by Jacob.

4132. Indignation (is signified by) these and the following words of Laban.

4145. 'Laban'=collateral good, or that which does not inflow directly. (Continued under GOOD, here.)

4150. Nothing of the good signified by Laban is in the good which Jacob represents.

4151. The good represented by Laban, after it was separated from the good represented by Jacob, came into another state by the separation. (Continued under GOOD.)

4159. 'Laban'=middle good.

4162. That those truths were not Laban's. Sig. and Ex.

4180. For Laban, as he was then separated from Jacob, that is, middle good from good Divine, was in such a state that he wanted to introduce (or inflict) evil.

4184. What Laban here says . . . =that middle good claimed to itself all goods and truths.

4189. The conjunction of the Divine Natural with the goods of works in which are the gentiles. Sig. . . 'Laban,' here, =the goods of works.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason 'Laban,' here, =the goods of works, in which are those who are at one side, or the gentiles, is that as Laban has now been separated from Jacob, that is, middle good from the Divine good of the Natural, he can no longer represent middle good; but, as he has served as a middle (or medium), he therefore represents some good, and in fact good at one side, or collateral good. Before Laban was conjoined with Jacob, he represented collateral good; (Refs.) consequently good at one side. . . The case of Laban is similar to that of Lot, and Ishmael. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is that 'Laban,' here, and in what now follows, represents the goods of works, such as are with those who are at one side, that is, with the gentiles. The gentiles are said to be at one side, or in collateral good, because they are outside the Church. Ex.

4195<sup>e</sup>. The quality of the good from truths on the part of Laban; that is, on the part of those who are in the goods of works. Sig.

4197. A testification of the conjunction of the good here signified by Laban with the good Divine of the Lord's Natural; consequently, the conjunction of the Lord through good with the gentiles; for it is this good which is now represented by Laban. Sig.

4198. The presence of the Lord's Divine Natural in the good which is now represented by Laban. Sig.

4206. Nahor represents the Church of the gentiles . . . Therefore, Laban, here, who was a son of Nahor, represents good at one side, such as is with the gentiles from the Lord. 4211<sup>2</sup>.

4214. 'And Laban arose early in the morning' (ver. 55)=the enlightenment of that good by the Lord's Divine Natural. . . 'Laban'=good such as is that of the gentiles.

4217. 'And Laban went and returned to his place' (id.)=the end of the representation by Laban.

4243. 'I have sojourned with Laban . . .' (Gen.xxxii. 4)=that he had imbued the good signified by Laban; (for) 'Laban'=middle good, that is, good not genuine, but which serves to introduce genuine truths and goods.

[A.4243]<sup>f</sup>. The case is this: truth cannot be implanted in good, except by media; which media have been treated of in the preceding chapters, which treat of the sojourning . . . of Jacob with Laban, and of the flock he there acquired.

4395. By 'Laban' is represented the affection of such good. Refs.

E. 696<sup>24</sup>. As Laban was a natural man, Jacob swore to him by the dread or terror of Isaac.

2385. 'They laboured to find the door' (Gen.xix.11)=that they could not see any truth which led to good.

3846<sup>e</sup>. The reason 'to serve'=study, is that the labour which is of the external man is study in the internal. Hence study is called the labour of the mind.

3975. 'To serve'=labour and study; which, when predicated of the Lord, =Own power. 3977.

5352. 'God hath made me forget all my labour' (Gen.xli.51)=removal after temptations. . . 'Labour'=combats, thus temptations.

6111. 'The land of Egypt laboured . . .' (Gen.xlvii.13) . . . =desolation.

6119. Then the spiritual life labours.

9278<sup>3</sup>. But when a man is in internal things, then, because he is in Heaven with the Lord, labour and combat cease . . . This is signified by 'the seventh day.'

H. 364. The poor who are content with their lot . . . love labour more than idleness.

R. 77. 'Thy labour, and endurance' (Rev.ii.2)=their study and patience.

81. 'For My name's sake hast laboured . . .' (ver.3)=the study and work of procuring for themselves . . . the things which are of religion and its doctrine.

153<sup>10</sup>. (In that cavern) all labour; and, as they labour, food is given them from Heaven.

640. 'That they may rest from their labours' (Rev. xiv.13)=. . . that those who afflict their soul, and crucify their flesh in the world, for the sake of the Lord and eternal life, will have peace in the Lord.

884. By 'the labour' which shall be no more (Rev. xxi.4) are signified temptations.

M. 268<sup>e</sup>. They are thrust into an infernal prison, where they are kept labouring for a garment and for food, and after that for some coins. . .

T. 301. 'Six days shalt thou labour . . .' in the natural sense, means that six days are for man and his labours . . . When the Lord came into the world . . . the seventh day was made a day of instruction in Divine things, and thus also a day of rest from labours . . .

302. By 'the six days of labour,' in the spiritual sense, is signified combat against the flesh and its concupiscences; and at the same time against the evils and falsities which are with one's self from Hell . . . That so long as this combat lasts, the man has spiritual labour . . . Refs.

798<sup>11</sup>. In that cave . . . they are driven to labour for food.

D. 2501. They regard those who . . . are laborious . . . as nothing.

6088<sup>4</sup>. In the Hells all are driven to works, and they who do not work receive no food, garments, or bed; thus are they driven to labours.

E. 98. 'I know thy works, and thy labour, and thine endurance'=all things which they will, think, and do; thus all things of love and faith in the spiritual and in the natural man . . . 'Labour'=the things which are of thought and faith.

— (Thus) by 'works,' in the spiritual sense, is meant all that which man wills and loves; and by 'labour,' all that which man thinks or believes . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. The reason why by 'labour,' in the spiritual sense, are meant all things which man thinks, is that to labour spiritually is to think.

102. 'For My name's sake hast laboured'=the acknowledgment of the Lord and of the Knowledges of truth which regard Him. . . 'To labour'=to apply the mind and study, that these things may be known and acknowledged; for this signifies to labour, when it is said of those who study the Knowledges of truth and good.

340<sup>13</sup>. By 'the labour of his hands which he should eat' (Ps.cxxviii.2) is signified study of life according to these things.

365<sup>40</sup>. 'The labour of justice' (Is.xxxii.17) = good conjoined with truth, in which there is peace; for 'labour,' in the Word, is said of truth . . .

388<sup>26</sup>. The Church is called 'labouring' (Ps.lxviii.9) from the study to do what is good.

409<sup>3</sup>. His combats with the Hells, and their subjugation, is signified by 'the labour of His soul' (Is.liii.11).

413<sup>2</sup>. When the equilibrium is perishing, the Heavens . . . begin to labour . . .

617<sup>10</sup>. By 'silver' is here signified truth from proprium, or Own intelligence; in like manner by 'labour' (Is.lv.2).

695<sup>16</sup>. By 'labour' (Jer.xxxi.16) is signified the Lord's combat against the Hells, and the subjugation of them, in order that 'a new Church might be established. —<sup>17</sup>.

900. 'That they may rest from their labours'=that they no longer have any combat against evils and falsities, or infestation by them.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason why by 'labours' are meant temptations, is that temptations are labours of the soul, or spiritual labours. Ill.

R. 535. 'To have in the womb;' 'to travail,' and 'to bear,' in the spiritual sense of the Word, =to conceive and bear those things which are of the spiritual life. —<sup>2</sup>, Ill.

E. 405<sup>14</sup>. The earth is said 'to travail' when . . . the man of the Church is being generated anew.

721<sup>9</sup>. 'Thou travailest O earth' (Ps.cxiv.7) = the establishment of the Church, or the reformation of those who will be of the Church. 'To travail'=to receive truths and to be reformed.

—<sup>18</sup>. That truths will be known, but still not received in the life; and that thus they cannot be reformed, is signified by, 'Sin shall travail, and there shall not be to break through,' namely, the matrix (Ezek.xxx.16).

— . As by 'to travail' is signified to receive the truths of the Word by hearing or reading; and by 'to bring forth' is signified to make fruitful and to produce them in act . . . therefore, when these things are effected with difficulty, on account of the falsities and evils which reign in the Church . . . it is said that 'they are seized with pain as of one in labour.' Ill.

—<sup>24</sup>. That 'pain as of one in labour' is also said of those who on account of falsities conjoined with evils of life, cannot receive truths any more; which, however, they want to receive, when destruction is imminent, especially in the Spiritual World at the time of the Last Judgment. Ladder. Scala.

A. 3690<sup>e</sup>. As it were according to the steps of a ladder.

3695<sup>e</sup>. These are the things which are represented . . . by 'the ladder set on the earth . . .'

3699. 'Behold a ladder set on the earth' (Gen.xxviii.12)=the communication of the lowest truth and of the good thence derived. 'A ladder'=communication. . . Hence it is evident that the ladder which was between earth and heaven, or between the lowest and the highest, =communication. That it is the communication of the lowest truth and of the good thence derived which is signified by 'the ladder set on the earth,' is evident from the fact that it here treats of the truth and derivative good of that degree which is here represented by Jacob.

—<sup>2</sup>. In the Original Language, the word ladder is derived from a word which means a path or way; and this is predicated of truth.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident what 'the ladder' signifies, one extremity of which was set on the earth, and the other reached to heaven; namely, the communication of the truth which is in the lowest place with the truth which is in the highest. . . That there are lowest truths and goods, and highest truths and goods, and between them steps as of a ladder. Ref.

[A.] 3700. 'Its head reaching to heaven' (id.)=that there was communication with the Divine. (For) 'the head,' or summit, of a ladder=what is highest; and 'heaven'=the Divine.

3701. That by 'ascending and descending on the ladder,' is signified, in the supreme sense, infinite and eternal communication and consequent conjunction, is evident . . .

— (Thus) by 'the ladder set on the earth, and its head reaching to heaven, and behold the Angels of God ascending and descending upon it,' is signified in sum as it were an ascent from the lowest; and afterwards, when the order is inverted, a descent. Ex.

—°. Thus, by those truths which were of his infancy and childhood, the Angels of God ascended as by a ladder from earth to Heaven; but afterwards, by the truths which are of his adult age, the Angels of God descend as by a ladder from Heaven to earth.

3702°. Hence it is evident of what quality are those through whom the Divine things of the Lord descend even to the ultimates of nature, and from the ultimates of nature ascend to Him; and represent the Divine communication and consequent conjunction; which, in the supreme sense, is signified by the Angels ascending and descending on the ladder set on the earth, whose head reached to heaven, and above which Jehovah was standing.

3882. Ascent by a ladder from the earth even to the Lord. Sig. (by the births of the first four sons of Jacob.)

— When the regenerated one has arrived at (the Celestial of love), then the Lord appears to him; for he has then ascended from the lowest degree as by a ladder up to the degree where the Lord is. This ascent is also what is signified by the ladder seen by Jacob in his dream . . .

3939°. It treats of the regeneration of man, or of the states of man before he becomes the Church; and, in the supreme sense, of the Lord, how He made His Human Divine; thus of the ascent by the ladder which was seen by Jacob at Bethel, up to Jehovah.

5114<sup>3</sup>. There are degrees (or steps) as of a ladder, between the Intellectual and the Sensuous . . .

5147. For good from the Lord inflows through the inmost of man, and thence, by steps as of a ladder, to exteriors.

6819°. These ascending degrees (of the neighbour), are like the steps of a ladder, at whose top is the Lord.

C. J. 45. The English have a double theology; one from the doctrine of faith, and the other from the doctrine of life; from the doctrine of faith for those who are initiated into the priesthood; from the doctrine of life for those who are not initiated into the priesthood, and are commonly called laymen (or the laity).

R. 143°. Only the clergy know the arcana of the doctrine (of faith alone); but not the laity; and therefore the latter are chiefly meant by those 'who have not Known the depths of Satan.'

398. See CLERGY, here.

403. 'By 'the sea' is signified the Church with those who are in externals, and in faith alone; and they who are in externals are called by the general term the laity, because those who are in internals are called the clergy.

567. 'I saw a beast ascending out of the sea'=the laity in the Churches of the Reformed who are in the doctrine and faith of the dragon concerning God and salvation.

— The reason the laity are meant by 'the beast out of the sea' . . . is that by 'the sea' is signified the external of the Church . . . and the laity are in the externals of the doctrine of the Church . . .

570°. For the laity can (falsify the truths of the Word), but do not. Sig.

680. 'The second Angel poured out his vial upon the sea'=the influx of truth and good from the Lord with those in the Church of the Reformed, who are in its externals, and in that faith, and are called the laity.

767. 'The mourning of the shipmasters and sailors'= those who contribute, who are called laymen, (both those who are in greater dignity, and those who are in less, down to the common people, who are attached to that religiosity . . . 786.)

786. It now treats of those who are not in any order of the ministry, but who still love that religiosity . . . who are called laymen.

B. 59<sup>2</sup>. When they teach faith and at the same time good works . . . they select expressions and weave them into two senses ; one for the laity, and the other for the clergy ; for the laity, to prevent its nakedness from appearing, and for the clergy, that it may appear. 79<sup>2</sup>.

T. 112. He quotes many statements from the Word, to which our raw ones, by whom we mean the laity, attend and assent.

850. They said, Why has your Lord revealed (these) arcana to you who are a layman, and not to some one from the clergy ? (Swedenborg explains the reason ; and more fully in I. 20.)

D. 6099<sup>5</sup>. (The laity were found to know nothing whatever of the theology of Cocceius.)

Can. Trinity ix. 5. When the laity are asked about God, faith, and charity, they know almost nothing . . . (and the clergy answer almost like blind men in pits. 4.)

D. Love xii. What is general is like a lake . . .

Lake. Stagnum.

Stagnate. Stagnare.

Stagnant. Stagnans.

A. 819. There is a capacious lake towards the left, in a plane with the lower parts of the body, greater in length than in breadth. Near its front bank there appear . . . monstrous serpents, such as are in standing waters . . . On the left bank . . . appear those who devour human flesh, and each other . . . Further on to the left there appear great fishes, monstrous whales, which swallow men and vomit them up again. On the opposite bank there appear very deformed faces, especially those of old women . . . who run about as if they were insane. On the right bank are those who try to kill each other with cruel instruments . . . In the middle of the lake it is everywhere black, like what has stagnated. I have occasionally seen some brought to this lake . . . who were such as had cherished intestine hatred against the neighbour . . . D. 1379.

820. They who have practised robberies, and piracy . . . seem to themselves to dwell in filthily stinking lakes.

941. A city between Gehenna and the Lake where the better Jews seem to themselves to dwell . . . D. 747.

954<sup>e</sup>. They who have been delighted with mere pleasures . . . dwell in urinous and stinking lakes.

956. They who are tenacious of revenge . . . are conveyed into a miry lake, which is near the filthy Jerusalem, and are rolled and dipped therein, so that they become like mire . . .

1666. Such Spirits desire nothing more than to pass their time in things stagnant, miry, and excrementitious . . .

2132<sup>e</sup>. It appears as if they were cast down, some towards the Lake . . .

2446. 'The devil was cast into a lake of fire and brimstone . . .'

7324. 'And upon their pools' (Ex. vii. 19) = into the scientifics which serve . . . truths . . . or falsities.

— 'Pools,' in the Word . . . = intelligence from the Knowledges of good and truth ; for 'pools' there mean collected waters or lakes—lacubus, (which) = Knowledges in the complex through which is intelligence. III.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'To set the wilderness for a pool of waters' (Is. xli. 18) = to give the Knowledges of good and truth, and the derivative intelligence, where they were not before.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Pools of soul' (Is. xix. 10) = the things which are of intelligence from Knowledges . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. That 'pools of waters,' in the opposite sense, = evils from falsities, and the derivative insanity. III. They also = the Hell where such things reign, but in this case the pool is called 'a pool (or lake) of fire' . . .

7383. 'Upon the streams, upon the rivers, and upon the pools' (Ex. viii. 5) = against falsities.

10194<sup>e</sup>. Around those who are in truths, and not from good, there appear nothing but rocks, crags, and pools . . . But around those who are in falsities from evil there appear marshes . . .

H. 585. Some (of the openings to the Hells appear) like marshes ; and some like pools of water . . .

J. 50. The evil are cast into marshes and pools.

P. 117. The concupiscences of evil together with their delights then remain with them, like impure waters stopped up and stagnated.

304. The general delight in Hell is smelled as stagnated water, into which have been thrown various kinds of filth . . .

R. 675<sup>2</sup>. When we sank down, the place at first appeared to us like a lake, but presently like dry land, and afterwards like a small city . . .

835. 'The lake of fire burning with brimstone' (Rev. xix. 20) = the Hell where are they who are in the loves of that falsity, and at the same time in the cupidities of evil. By 'a lake' is signified falsities in abundance.

[R. 835]<sup>2</sup>. The Hell where such are, appears from afar like a fiery lake with a green flame as of brimstone. But those who are therein do not see this . . . It is their love of falsity, together with the cupidities of evil, which makes the appearance of such a lake.

—<sup>3</sup>. That by 'a lake' is signified where there is truth in abundance; and thence, in the opposite sense, where there is falsity in abundance. III.

864. By 'the lake of fire into which he was cast' (Rev. xx. 10) is signified the Hell where are the loves of falsity and the cupidities of evil.

872. 'And death and Hell were cast into the lake of fire' (ver. 14) = that the impious at heart . . . were cast down into Hell among those who were in the love of evil, and thence in the love of the falsity which agrees with evil.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'A lake' = where there is falsity in abundance. 874.

893. 'Their part is in the lake of fire burning with brimstone' (Rev. xxi. 8) = the Hell for them where are the loves of falsity and the cupidities of evil.

M. 71. These shun extra-conjugal loves . . . as the lakes of Hell.

79<sup>2</sup>. Lakes (seen), out of which crocodiles raised their heads.

—<sup>e</sup>. They are cast into the gulfs of the west, which from afar appear like lakes of fire and sulphur.

So. I looked at the end of the west, and lo there appeared as it were lakes of fire and sulphur; and I asked the Angel why the Hells there appear so. He replied, They appear as lakes, from falsifications of truth, because water, in the spiritual sense, is truth; and there appears as it were fire about them and in them, from the love of evil; and as it were sulphur, from the love of falsity. These three things—the lake, the fire, and the sulphur, are appearances, because they are correspondences of the evil loves in which they are. All there are shut up in eternal workhouses . . .

521<sup>b</sup>. The Angel opened the Hell in the western quarter . . . and said, Look there. And they saw a lake as it were fiery, and recognized there some who had been their friends in the world . . .

522. The next day . . . I saw that the forest had disappeared, and in its place there was a sandy plain, and in the middle of it a lake, in which were some red serpents . . . But some weeks afterwards . . . I saw on its right side some fallow land . . .

T. 120. The World of Spirits is as full of the wicked . . . as a viridescent pond is of the spawn of frogs.

377<sup>e</sup>. If charity is without truths, (it is like) a man eating burnt bread, and at the same time drinking unclean water from some pond.

D. 466. That they might look into the sea, which is a lake.

467. The sea which is called a lake, is the penalty of those who oppose themselves to heavenly truth . . .

1174. They seem to live in lakes (of urine, etc.).

1379. On the Lake. Gen. art.

1396. On those who are at the right of the Lake . . .

1798. On the penalties of those who relate to the stagnant humours in the brain.

2825. He (then) falls downwards into a black and very filthy lake, and there remains until he is liberated by the Lord. The water is so filthily black that it can scarcely be described. Such falls frequently take place; for thus Heaven is freed from Falsities. But when they have been instructed in the World of Spirits . . . they are again received. 2831.

3469<sup>e</sup>. Thus they were immersed in their lakes.

3559. On a poisoner, who was cast into a lake. . . He said that it was excrementitious and filthy. 3562. 3564.

4453<sup>2</sup>. They returned through caverns towards the lake, so that I supposed that they would advance beneath the lake; but their cavernous way was bent . . . to the limits of this universe, and where there before appeared as it were a stagnant sea, into which they were cast in another universe . . .

4684. When anyone supposes himself to be greater than others . . . he is transferred far to the left . . . where there appears a lake smoking with fire . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. Elsewhere, also, there are smoking lakes . . . for filthy adulterers . . . (and) for the cruel.

4734. Around the cities, and elsewhere, there appear marshes or lakes.

4788<sup>2</sup>. There was a marsh near, or an utterly marshy water, a lake . . .

5204. On gulfs which are also Hell; lakes of sulphur.

5207. On the casting of Babel into the lake of sulphur.

5217. They who were carried away into the lakes were carried away in a moment.

5467. This shining lake appeared (so) from the sulphureousness of lasciviousness. Into this lake all the women were cast. The lake was situated transversely at the end of the angle; it was great; and a great number were cast into it . . .

5468. (The position of this lake shown by a diagram.)

5723<sup>e</sup>. All these were cast into their lake . . .

5838. They were cast down; very many into marshes and lakes . . .

E. 304<sup>21</sup>. 'A pool of waters,' and 'a spring of waters' (Is. xli. 18) = good, because there is truth; for all spiritual good . . . is procured through truths.

386<sup>21</sup>. 'A pool of waters' (Ps. cvii. 35) = an abundance of truth.

405<sup>14</sup>. 'A pool of waters' (Ps. cxiv. 8) = the Knowledges of truth; and 'a fountain of waters' = the Word from which they are. (= truths in abundance. 483<sup>e</sup>.)

—<sup>47</sup>. 'I will dry up the pools' (Is. xlii. 15) . . . 'The pools' = the perception of truth. The understanding of truth is from the light of truth, but the perception of truth is from the heat or love of truth. (= that the Knowledge of truth will perish. 518<sup>31</sup>.)

483<sup>2</sup>. 'A pool of waters,' etc. (Is. xli. 18) = an abundance of the Knowledges of truth.

518<sup>3</sup>. It is from the signification of 'waters,' as being truths, that 'a fountain'=the Word, and the doctrine of truth; and that 'pools,' 'lakes,' and 'seas'=the Knowledges of truth in the complex.

627<sup>3</sup>. That then there will be intelligence through Divine spiritual truth with those with whom before there was not any, is signified by 'The dry place shall be for a pool' (Is.xxxv.7). 714<sup>15</sup>.

730<sup>24</sup>. Truths in abundance in the spiritual man, are meant by 'a pool of waters' (Is.xli.18); and truths in abundance in the natural man, by 'springs of waters.' —<sup>25</sup>.

J. (Post.) 236<sup>o</sup>. Such are carried to the boundaries of the Spiritual World of our Earth, where there appears a lake smoking with fire . . .

Lamb. Agnus, Agna.

A. 45. See BEAST, here. 2781.

430. 'Lamb,' 'kid,' and 'calf' (Is.xi.6)=the three degrees of innocence and love.

1361<sup>2</sup>. The lambs and sheep which were sacrificed, represented celestial things.

1736<sup>3</sup>. 'He shall carry the lambs-agnellos-in His bosom.'

2179<sup>2</sup>. When lambs appear in the World of Spirits, they know that the Angels are discoursing about goods still more interior, and about innocence.

2276<sup>6</sup>. Celestial good was represented by the sacrifice of a lamb.

2720<sup>8</sup>. 'Abraham set seven ewe-lambs of the flock by themselves' (Gen.xxi.28)=the holiness of innocence.

2830<sup>3</sup>. Therefore the Nazarite was to sacrifice a he-lamb and a ewe-lamb (Num.vi.14) by which was signified the Celestial. 10132<sup>10</sup>.

2906<sup>9</sup>. 'That the lambs which were offered in the burnt-offering and sacrifice, were 'lambs of their year' (Lev.xii.6, etc.)=the celestial things of innocence in the Lord's Kingdom, which are eternal.

3081<sup>9</sup>. They are said to 'follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth;' for by 'the Lamb' is meant the Lord as to innocence. 3325<sup>6</sup>.

3268<sup>1</sup>. 'Lambs, rams, and he-goats' (Ezek.xxvii.21)=spiritual goods and truths.

3519<sup>3</sup>. He-lambs and she-lambs (as sacrificed)=the innocence of the internal or rational man.

3994. 'All the black cattle in the lambs' (Gen.xxx.32)=the proprium of the innocence which belongs to the good signified by Laban. . . 'A lamb'=innocence.

—<sup>2</sup>. Whereas the white in the lambs=the merit which is placed in goods.

—'. 'The wolf shall dwell with the lamb' (Is.xi.6) . . . 'The lamb'=those who are in innocence.

—'. 'The wolf and the lamb shall pasture together'

(Is.lxy.25) . . . 'The lamb'=those who are in innocence.

—'. As the wolf and the lamb are opposites, the Lord said to the seventy . . . 'Behold I send you forth as lambs into the midst of wolves' (Luke x.3).

—'. 'The fat of lambs' (Deut.xxxii.14)=the charity of innocence.

—<sup>1</sup>. 'Lambs,' in the Original Language, are expressed by various names, and thereby are signified different degrees of innocence; for in all good there must be innocence . . . and thence also in truth. Here, 'lambs' are expressed by a word by which 'sheep' also are expressed (Ill.); and it is the innocence of the faith which is of charity which is signified. 'Lambs' are expressed by other words elsewhere. Ill.

—'. 'To gather the lambs into His arm' (Is.xl.11)=those who are in charity in which is innocence.

—<sup>5</sup>. As there is no charity and love except from innocence, the Lord first asks Peter whether he loves Him; that is, whether there is love in the faith, and then says, 'Feed My lambs' (John xxi.15); that is, those who are in innocence. 4169<sup>3</sup>. 10087<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>6</sup>. As the Lord is the innocence itself which is in His Kingdom, for all innocence is from Him, He is called 'the Lamb.' Ill.

—'. It is known that the paschal lamb, in the supreme sense,=the Lord. . . In the representative sense, the paschal lamb=that which is essential of regeneration, namely, innocence; for no one can be regenerated except through charity in which is innocence.

—<sup>7</sup>. As innocence is the primary thing in the Lord's Kingdom, and is the Celestial itself there, and as the sacrifices and burnt-offerings represented the spiritual and celestial things of the Lord's Kingdom; therefore the essential itself of His Kingdom, which is innocence, was represented by the lambs; and therefore the continual burnt-offering was made of lambs, one in the morning, and the other between the evenings . . . and two on the Sabbath days . . . and by still more lambs on stated feasts. Ill.

—'. The reason a parturient woman, after the days of her cleansing were passed, was to offer a lamb for a burnt-offering, or a young dove, or a turtle, (Lev.xii.6), was that there might be signified the effect of conjugal love, which is innocence; and because infants=innocence. 10132<sup>9</sup>.

3995<sup>o</sup>. Hence it is that 'spotted,' in the Original Language, is expressed by a word which also means 'lambs.' Ill.

4021. 'And Jacob separated the lambs' (Gen.xxx.40)=as to innocence; (for) 'lambs'=innocence.

5913. See FLOCK, here.

7073. See INNOCENCE, here.

7832. A lamb, or a she-goat, which, here, are 'a small cattle'=innocence; a lamb, the innocence of the interior man . . .

7839<sup>o</sup>. By 'a burnt-offering from a lamb' (Ezek.xlvi.13) is meant the worship of the Lord from the good of innocence.

7840. 'Thou shalt take from the lambs and from the she-goats' (Ex.xii.5)=the good of innocence interior and exterior. Ex.

[A.]9127°. 'The blood of the Lamb'=innocent blood ; for 'the Lamb'=innocence.

9295<sup>2</sup>. The burnt-offering from lambs, etc.=the worship of the Lord from the quality of that good (that is, from good not as yet fully purified).

9391. Lambs and sheep signified the good of innocence and of charity in the internal or spiritual man . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. 'To eat the lambs from the flock' (Amos vi.4) =to learn and appropriate to themselves the goods of innocence which are of the internal or spiritual man.

9990<sup>2</sup>. The purification of the internal itself, which is inmost, was represented by the burnt-offerings and sacrifices from lambs. 10042<sup>8</sup>.

10132. 'Two lambs the sons of a year every day (constantly)' (Ex.xxix.38)=the good of innocence in every state (in all Divine worship). 'Lambs'=the good of innocence. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. The inmost good of innocence is signified by 'a lamb' (Is.xi.).

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'a lamb'=the good of innocence in general; and, in special, the inmost good of innocence, may be evident from the fact that it is mentioned in the first place; and also from the fact that the Lord Himself is called 'the Lamb.'

—<sup>5</sup>. As the Lord when in the world was, as to His Human, innocence itself; and as, therefore, all innocence proceeds from Him, He is called 'the Lamb,' and 'the Lamb of God.' Ill.

—<sup>6</sup>. As 'lambs'=those who are in innocence, the Lord said to Peter, first, 'Feed My lambs.' . . . 'Lambs,' here,—those who are in the good of love to the Lord; for these are in the good of innocence above all others.

—<sup>7</sup>. As by 'lambs' are meant those who are in love to Him, thus in the good of innocence, it is said, that 'He will gather them in His arm, and carry them in His bosom;' for they are conjoined with the Lord by love . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. From these things it may now be evident what is signified by the burnt-offerings and sacrifices from lambs, and why they were made every day, every Sabbath, every new moon, and every feast; on the feast of the passover, each day; and why, at the feast of the passover, a lamb was eaten, which was called the paschal lamb. Ill. and Ex.

—<sup>11</sup>. From these things it may be evident that by 'a lamb' is signified the good of innocence. . . This is especially evident from the fact that the Lord Himself is called 'the Lamb' . . . and also that those are called 'lambs' who love the Lord. Ill.

—<sup>12</sup>. The good of innocence is signified not only by 'a lamb,' but also by 'a ram,' and 'a bullock;' but with this difference, that by 'a lamb' is signified the inmost good of innocence . . . (Continued under INNOCENCE, here.) 10137<sup>10</sup>.

—<sup>13</sup>. Its being said that the lamb which was offered in the burnt-offering was to be the son of a year, signified that when a lamb exceeded a year it was a sheep; and as a lamb was as it were the infant of a sheep, there was signified by it such good as is of infancy, which is the good of innocence. Hence also it was, that lambs were offered for a burnt-offering in the first month of the year, when the passover was . . . also on the day of the firstfruits . . . and on the day in which they waved the sheaf. Ill. For by (these times) there was also signified a state of infancy, thus a state of innocence.

10133. It treats of purification from evils and falsities by the good of innocence; for this good is signified by 'lambs;' and the purification from evils and the derivative falsities, by the burnt-offering from them . . .

H. 110. Sheep and lambs correspond to affections of the spiritual mind.

282. Hence the Lord is called 'the Lamb;' for 'a lamb'=innocence.

N. 1<sup>2</sup>. By 'God and the Lamb' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Itself and the Divine Human.

S. 18<sup>3</sup>. 'A lamb' (in the Word)=innocence.

R. Pref.<sup>2</sup>. 'The Lamb'=the Lord as to the Divine Human. 6. 256. 288. 291. 339. 368.

295. 'When the Lamb opened the first of the seals' (Rev.vi.1)=exploration by the Lord . . .

383. 'The Lamb who is in the midst of the throne shall feed them' (Rev.vii.17)=that the Lord alone will teach them. By 'the Lamb in the midst of the throne' is signified the Lord as to the Divine Human in the inmost, and thus in all things of Heaven.

588. 'The names not written in the Lamb's book of life' (Rev.xiii.8) =except those who believe in the Lord.

595. 'He had two horns like a lamb' (ver.11)=that they want their things as if they were Divine truths of the Lord, because from the Word; for by 'a lamb' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human, and also as to the Word, which is the Divine truth from the Divine good. Hence it is that upon this beast, which is also the false prophet, there appeared two horns like a lamb . . .

612. 'Behold a Lamb standing upon the Mount Sion . . .' (Rev.xiv.1)=the Lord now in the New Heaven . . . by 'the Lamb' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human.

636<sup>2</sup>. It is said '(he shall be tormented) before the Angels and the Lamb' (ver.10) because these loves are against Divine truths, and against the Lord who is the Word; for by . . . 'the Lamb' is signified the Lord as to the Divine Human, and at the same time as to the Word. 743.

662. 'By 'the song of the Lamb' (Rev.xv.3) is signified confession from faith concerning the Divinity of the Lord's Human; for by 'the Lamb' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human. 918. 932.

743. 'These shall fight with the Lamb, but the Lamb shall overcome them; because He is Lord of lords and King of kings' (Rev.xvii.14)=the Lord's combat with them concerning the acknowledgment of His Divine Human, because in it the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and also the Word.

812. 'For the marriage of the Lamb is come' (Rev.

xix.7)=because henceforth there is a full marriage of the Lord and the Church. In order that this may be signified, it is said 'the Lamb,' and by 'the Lamb' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human. E.1219.

903. 'The Lamb'=the Lord. 919. 925.

D. 4785<sup>7</sup>. As (the Moravians) do not acknowledge the Lord as God, but as a man, in common discourse they call Him the Lamb, and by this they understand one who is innocent. 4810.

E. 9<sup>2</sup>. 'Lambs'=those who are in the good of innocence and of love to the Lord. Refs.

67. 'Lambs'=celestial good. Refs.

220<sup>4</sup>. 'The Lamb'=His Divine Human.

279<sup>4</sup>. 'To eat the lambs from the flock'=to imbibe the Knowledges of internal good, or of the spiritual man.

297. The Divine truth from the Lord is called 'the Son of Man,' but here 'the Lamb.'

—<sup>4</sup>. 'God'=the Lord as to Divine good; and 'the Lamb,' as to Divine truth.

314. 'A Lamb standing'=the Lord as to the Divine Human . . . because 'a lamb'=the good of innocence, and the good of innocence is the good itself of Heaven which proceeds from the Lord . . .

— It is believed . . . that the Lord is called 'the Lamb' from the fact that the continual burnt-offering . . . was of lambs, and especially on the days of the passover when a lamb was also eaten, and because the Lord suffered Himself to be sacrificed; but this reason for the name is for those . . . who do not think beyond the sense of the letter . . . But in Heaven . . . when a lamb is mentioned, or when 'lamb' is read in the Word, then the Angels . . . perceive the good of innocence; and when the Lord is so called, they perceive His Divine Human, and at the same time the good of innocence which is from Him. —<sup>2</sup>, Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. By 'the lambs which He will gather in His arms' are signified those who are in love to Him. This love is that which, regarded in itself, is innocence . . . and because this love is signified by 'lambs,' it is also said 'He shall gently lead those which are sucklings.'

—<sup>5</sup>. As 'lambs'=those who are in love to the Lord, which love is one with innocence . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. By 'lambs,' etc. are signified the three degrees of the good of innocence . . . —<sup>8</sup>.

—<sup>9</sup>. As by 'a lamb' is signified innocence, which, regarded in itself, is love to the Lord, therefore by 'a lamb,' in the supreme sense, is signified the Lord as to the Divine Human; for the Lord as to that was innocence itself. Ill.

—<sup>10</sup>. As . . . the burnt-offerings signified all representative worship from the good of love . . . therefore 'every day, morning and evening, a burnt-offering of lambs was made.' 'On every Sabbath, of two lambs, besides the continual burnt-offering of them.' 'At the beginnings of the months, of seven lambs.' In like manner 'on the day of the first-fruits.' In like manner 'in the seventh month, when there was a holy convocation.' In like manner, to wit, 'of seven lambs on each day of the passover . . .' Ill.

— On account of this representation, there was also instituted the paschal supper of 'lambs, or kids' (Ex.xii.1-29); for by the feast of the passover there was represented the glorification of the Lord's Human.

337. 'The Lamb'=the Lord as to the Divine Human. 456. 864.

343. 'The Lamb'=the Divine truth proceeding.

412. 'The Lamb'=the Lord as to Divine truth. 460. 482. 936.

460<sup>3</sup>. It is said 'He that sitteth upon the throne, and the Lamb,' and by both is meant the Lord; by 'He that sitteth upon the throne,' Himself as to the Divine good; and by 'the Lamb,' Himself as to Divine truth, both from His Divine Human . . . and therefore also elsewhere there is mentioned the Lamb alone upon the throne (Ill.) 482.

—<sup>c</sup>. That by 'the Lamb' is meant the Divine Human of the Lord; and, in the relative sense, the good of innocence. Ref.

476. 'The blood of the Lamb'=the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord. —<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

780<sup>6</sup>. By 'a lamb' is signified innocence.

816. 'Like a lamb'= . . . as if from the Lord.

817<sup>12</sup>. The celestial goods and derivative truths in which are the Angels in the Third Heaven, were signified by (the sacrifices of) lambs . . .

888. 'The Lamb'=the Divine Human of the Lord; here (Rev.xiv.10) the Divine which proceeds from the Lord, which is Divine good united to Divine truth in the Heavens; here, therefore, the Divine good . . .

936. 'The Lamb'=the Lord as to Divine truth, thus as to the Word, for this is Divine truth. Hence, because it is said 'Moses and the Lamb,' there is signified the Word of the Old and of the New Testament . . .

1038<sup>2</sup>. Hence . . . the Lord Himself, from Divine innocence, is called 'the Lamb.'

1072. 'To fight with the Lamb'=to have controversy concerning the holiness of the Word, and concerning the Power of the Lord to save men. . . 'And the Lamb shall overcome them'=that He will rescue those who want to be instructed and led by Him through the Word.

Lame. Claudus.

Halt, To. Claudicare.

A. 210<sup>e</sup>. In the Word such are called 'the lame,' and 'the blind.'

2417<sup>8</sup>. Some they called the lame . . . 4302<sup>5</sup>.

4302. 'He halting upon his thigh' (Gen.xxxii.31)=that truths were not yet disposed into that order so that all together with good might enter celestial spiritual good. 'To halt'=to be in good in which as yet are no genuine truths, but general ones into which genuine truths can be insinuated, and such as do not disagree with genuine truths. —<sup>4</sup>, III.

[A. 4302.]<sup>4</sup>. Thus 'the lame'=those who are in good, but not in genuine good, on account of their ignorance of truth; in such good as are the Gentiles who live in mutual charity. III. —<sup>4</sup>.

—<sup>5</sup>. By 'the foot which was to be cut off' is meant the Natural . . . Thus that on account of the disagreement and dissuasion of the natural man it is better to be in simple good, although in the denial of truth . . . is signified by 'to enter halt into life' (Mark iv. 45; Matt. xviii. 8).

—<sup>7</sup>. By 'the lame,' in the Word, are also signified those who are in no good, and thence in no truth. III.

—<sup>8</sup>. In the Original Language 'the lame,' is expressed by one word, and 'he that halteth,' by another; and by 'the lame,' in the proper sense, are signified those who are in natural good, into which spiritual truths cannot inflow, on account of natural appearances and the fallacies of the senses; and, in the opposite sense, those who are in no natural good, but in evil, which completely hinders the influx of spiritual truth: whereas by 'one who halteth,' in the proper sense, are signified those who are in natural good, into which general truths are admitted, but on account of their ignorance, not particular and singular ones; and, in the opposite sense, those who are in evil, and who thus do not admit even general truths.

4314. In the internal historical sense, by 'he was halting upon his thigh' is signified that goods and truths were completely destroyed with that posterity. . . . 'To halt upon the thigh'=those who are in no good, and thence in no truth . . .

6413<sup>2</sup>. 'The lame one shall leap as a hart' (Is. xxxv. 6) . . . By 'the lame one' is signified him who is in good, but not as yet in genuine good. E. 455<sup>20</sup>.

9014<sup>5</sup>. 'One that supporteth himself with a staff,' or one who is lame (2 Sam. iii. 29)=those with whom all good is destroyed.

9042<sup>6</sup>. 'One lame' (Jer. xxxi. 8)=one who is in good but not genuine on account of ignorance of truth. 9209<sup>4</sup>.

E. 223<sup>22</sup>. 'The lame,' etc. (Luke xiv. 21)=those who are not in truths and goods, but still long for them. (=those who because they had not the Word were in ignorance of truth, and thence in want of good; but who still longed for truths, through which they would have good. 652<sup>32</sup>.)

518<sup>4</sup>. By 'the lame who shall leap as a hart,' is signified him who is not in genuine good, because not in the Knowledges of truth and good.

721<sup>10</sup>. 'One lame' (Jer. xxxi. 8)=one who is not in goods.

Lamech. Lamech.

A. 332. In the last of these heresies, which is called 'Lamech,' nothing of faith any longer remained.

384. That all the good of charity afterwards perished, is evident from 'Lamech' (Gen. iv. 19-24).

406. By 'Lamech' is signified vastation, or that there was no faith; as is evident from verses 23, 24: that 'he slew a man to his wound, and a little one to his bruise;' where by 'a man' is meant faith, and by 'a little one,' or a little child, charity.

409. Lamech, who was the sixth in order, utterly denied even faith.

— Adah and Zillah are called 'the wives of Lamech,' who was of no faith, as the Internal and the External Church of the Jews, who also were of no faith . . . are also called 'wives.'

428. From these things . . . it is manifestly evident that by 'Lamech' is signified vastation; for he says that 'he had slain a man, and a little one;' and that 'Cain should be avenged sevenfold, and Lamech seventy and seven times.'

441<sup>6</sup>. After the Church had been extinguished by those who are called 'Cain,' and finally 'Lamech.'

465. The ninth Church was called 'Lamech.' 523.

467. Lamech is described—that with him there was nothing left of the perception of the Most Ancient Church.

485. That Churches of different doctrines were called by a like name, is evident from those which in the preceding chapter were called 'Enoch,' and 'Lamech,' being different from those which are here called 'Enoch,' and 'Lamech.'

526. By 'Lamech' is here signified the ninth Church, in which there was so general and obscure a perception of truth and good that it was almost none, thus a vastated Church. 527.

527. 'Lamech,' in the preceding chapter, has nearly the same signification as here, namely, vastation. . . . 'Lamech' means what is destroyed.

532. By 'Lamech' is signified the Church vastated.

533. Both of these Churches, which are called 'Methuselah' and 'Lamech,' expired immediately before the Flood.

R. 237. 'The seven lamps of fire before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God'=the New Church thence in Heaven and on earth from the Lord through the Divine truth proceeding from Him. By 'the seven lamps' are here signified the like as by 'the seven candlesticks,' and also by 'the seven stars' (which)=the New Church on earth . . . and the New Church in the Heavens. And as the Church is the Church from the Divine which proceeds from the Lord, which is the Divine Truth and is called 'the Holy Spirit,' therefore it is said, 'which are the seven Spirits of God.'

408. 'There fell a great star from Heaven burning as it were a torch' (Rev.viii.10)=the appearance of Own intelligence from conceit originating from infernal love. . . . By 'a star' and also by 'a torch' is signified intelligence; here, Own intelligence, because it was seen to burn; and all Own intelligence burns from conceit . . . —e. 'A torch,' or 'lamp'=intelligence.

—<sup>8</sup>. As faith, and the derivative intelligence and wisdom, are signified by 'a lamp,' the kings of Judah are called 'the lamps of David' (1 Kings xi.36; xv.4; 2 Kings vii.19); and David is called 'the lamp of Israel' (2 Sam.xxi.17): not that the kings of Judah were lamps, nor David; but because by a king is signified the Divine truth which is from the Lord; and by David the Lord as to the Divine truth; from which are faith, intelligence, and wisdom.

9569. 'Thou shalt make the lamps thereof, seven' (Ex.xxv.37)=the holy spiritual things thence; (for) 'a lamp'=faith and the intelligence of truth, which are from the Lord alone; thus the Spiritual; for the Divine truth which is from the Lord, and through which are faith, intelligence, and wisdom, is the Spiritual. . . The reason the lamps were seven in number, was that the Divine truth, from which are faith, intelligence, and wisdom, is what is called holy . . .

9684<sup>3</sup>. 'The lamp, which is the Lamb,' that is, the Lord,=faith, and the derivative intelligence of truth and wisdom of good, which are from the Lord alone.

9783. 'To cause the lamp to go up constantly' (Ex. xxvii.20)=faith thence, and through faith the intelligence of truth and the wisdom of good from the Lord. . . The reason 'a lamp'=faith, is that the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord is the light in the Heavens. This light, received by the Angels there, or by man, is like a lamp; for it illuminates all things of the mind, and gives intelligence and wisdom. Light, received, is faith. But it is to be known that faith is not a lamp, nor an illuminator of the mind, unless it is from charity . . .

9930<sup>4</sup>. 'A lamp' (Ps.cxxxii.17)=the Divine truth from which is intelligence.

10201. 'In dressing the lamps . . .' (Ex.xxx.7)=when truth also comes into its light. 'Lamps'=Divine truth, and the derivative intelligence and wisdom. That 'to dress or kindle them=when those things come into their light, is evident. 10202.

R. 43<sup>2</sup>. There is nothing said about the lamps of these (seven) candlesticks; but in what follows it is said that the Holy Jerusalem, that is, the New Church, has 'no need of the sun, nor of the moon, because its lamp is the Lamb . . .'; and further, 'They have no need of a lamp, because the Lord God enlightens them' (Rev.xxii.5); for those who will be of the Lord's New Church are only candlesticks, which will shine from the Lord.

796. 'The light of a lamp shall not shine in thee any more' (Rev.xviii.23)=that with those . . . there is not any enlightenment from the Lord and the derivative perception of spiritual truth.

919. 'Because the glory of God hath enlightened it, and its lamp is the Lamb'=that the men of that Church . . . from the Divine truth of the Word are in spiritual light from the Lord alone. . . Because this enlightenment is from the Lord, it is said, 'and its lamp is the Lamb.'

223<sup>18</sup>. By 'a lamp,' in general, is signified truth from good and the derivative intelligence.

272<sup>2</sup>. 'A lamp' (Ps.cxxxii.)=Divine truth from which is Divine intelligence.

274<sup>3</sup>. The eye is here called 'a lamp,' or a lampas=shining, because 'the eye'=the understanding of truth, and thence also the truth of faith.

316<sup>10</sup>. That the Lord as to Divine truth proceeding from His Divine good is called 'a lamp.' Ref.

638<sup>10</sup>. By the fire kindled in the lamps (in the tabernacle) was signified spiritual love, which is love towards the neighbour; in like manner by the oil of olive . . . of which was the fire.

684<sup>20</sup>. 'I will dispose a lamp for Mine Anointed' (Ps.cxxxii.17)=the enlightenment of Divine truth from the union of the Divine and the Human in the Lord; 'a lamp'=Divine truth as to enlightenment.

1081<sup>4</sup>. The eye . . . is called 'a lamp,' from the light of truth, which man has from understanding and faith.

1089<sup>2</sup>. Unless doctrine is the lamp.

1188. 'The light of a lamp shall not shine in thee any more'=that there is nothing of the truth of Heaven and of the Church. . . 'A lamp,' or a candlestick,=Heaven and the Church.

Lap. Lambere.

A. 324<sup>2</sup>. In Judges vii. etc., each and all things are representative of the falsification of truth, and of punishment on that account, even to this, that they were destroyed by such things as are signified by 'to lap waters with the tongue, like a dog' (ver.5,6).

E. 406<sup>16</sup>. By 'enemies' are signified evils, of which it is said that they 'shall lick the dust' (Ps.lxxii.9), that is, that they are damned.

455<sup>9</sup>. By 'Midian' are here (Judg.vii.) meant those who do not care for truth, because they are merely natural and external; and therefore they were smitten by those who lapped waters in their hand with their tongue, as a dog lappeth; for by these are meant those who have an appetite for truths, thus who from some natural affection strive to know truths; for by 'a dog' is signified appetite and desire; by 'waters,' truths; and by 'to lap them with the tongue,' is signified to have an appetite for, and to strive after from desire.

These, when interrogated, were found to be like those who were formerly in Lapland-Lapponiae, with garments not dissimilar. But this has now been begun because now they have been instructed. Before, they did not come so, but having sent forth two with dusky hair, they entered with offensive little animals. Lascivious. Lascivus, Lasciviosus.

Lasciviousness. Lascivia.

Lasciviously. Lascive.

Lascivious, To be. Lascivire.

A. 824. On the Hells of those who have passed their life in adulteries and lasciviousnesses.

829. Those who in the life of the body think lasciviously, and who turn whatever others say, even holy things, into lasciviousness; even when adult and old, when nothing of natural lasciviousness blows on them; these do not desist so as to think and speak differently in the other life; and as their thoughts are there communicated, and sometimes go forth with other Spirits into obscene representations, causing scandals, they undergo the penalty that before the Spirits whom they have injured they are prostrated horizontally, and are circumrotated like a roll quickly, from left to right; then transversely, in another position; and so in another; naked before all, or half-naked, according to the quality of the lasciviousness; and at the same time shame is infused into them. Then they are revolved round and round by the head and feet transversely like axles; and resistance is instilled, and at the same time pain; for there are two forces acting; one round and round, and the other backwards, which is attended with a painful tearing asunder. When these things have been executed, an opportunity is given them to withdraw themselves from the sight of the Spirits; and shame is insinuated into them. But still there are some who try him, as to whether he still persists in such things; but so long as he is in a state of shame and pain, he is on his guard. This penalty appeared in front at some distance. D.1694-1696. De Conj.127.

1907<sup>e</sup>. Conjugal love . . . which is divided among a number, is not conjugal love, but is [that] of lasciviousness.

2307<sup>e</sup>. When remitted into the life of the evils innate to him . . . he accounted lascivious things as nothing.

2732<sup>e</sup>. They who have lived in marriage not conjoined by conjugal love, but by lascivious love, are separated in the other life; because nothing of lasciviousness is tolerated in Heaven.

2733. As I perceived that there was what was lascivious in the ideas of his thought, I spoke to him about marriage . . .

2735<sup>e</sup>. The affections and thoughts of (conjugal love) are represented by diamond-like auras which sparkle as it were with rubies, and these [are attended with] deliciousnesses which affect the inmost things of their minds; but as soon as anything of what is lascivious intervenes, they disappear.

2741. Good and truth continually inflow from the Lord with all, consequently genuine conjugal love; but it is diversely received; and as it is received, such does it become. With the lascivious it is turned into lasciviousness . . .

2742. There exists with some a certain likeness of conjugal love . . . with some it is induced by the love of lasciviousness. At first this appears as if it were conjugal; for at that time they emulate something of innocence; they sport like little children; they perceive a joy like something from what is heavenly; but in process of time they are not united more and closer, like those who are in conjugal love, but they are separated. H.381.

2746. There was a certain Spirit at a middle height above the head who in the life of the body had lived lasciviously. (His lascivious life described.) He had thus extinguished the desire for marriage, and even for the procreation of children, and had thus contracted an unnatural nature. All these things were disclosed, and he was miserably punished . . . and was afterwards cast into Hell. D.1663. 1664.

9182<sup>e</sup>. Illegitimate conjunction is that which is effected not from a conjugal affection, but from some other affection, as from . . . lasciviousness . . .

10837<sup>e</sup>. That all things may be done . . . without lasciviousness, an old man sits behind the maiden girls . . .

H. 377<sup>e</sup>. It has been given to see the quality of the marriage between those who are in the falsities of evil, which is called the infernal marriage. They converse together, and are also conjoined from what is lascivious; but interiorly they burn with deadly hatred against each other.

379. The Angels clearly perceive that marriage with more than one would close their Internal, and cause that the love of lasciviousness would introduce itself in place of conjugal love, which love withdraws from Heaven.

—<sup>2</sup>. There are few who are in genuine conjugal love, and they who are not in it know nothing whatever about the interior delight which is in that love; but only about the delight of lasciviousness, which delight, after a brief cohabitation, is turned into what is un-delightful.

Life 74. By 'to commit adultery' . . . in the natural sense, is . . . also meant to do obscene things, to speak lascivious things, and to think filthy things.

75. The reason why . . . in proportion as anyone shuns the lasciviousness of adultery, he loves the chastity of marriage, is that the lasciviousness of adultery and the chastity of marriage are two opposites; and therefore in proportion as he is not in the one, he is in the other.

76. No one can know what is the quality of the chastity of marriage except him who shuns the lasciviousness of adultery as a sin . . .

M. 55<sup>e</sup>. The chaste love of the sex . . . is the love of a man towards a maiden or wife who is beautiful in form and graceful in manners, free from all idea of lasciviousness; and contrariwise.

102<sup>e</sup>. Moral wisdom shuns evils and falsities as leprosy; especially lascivious things, which contaminate its conjugal love.

140°. That a sphere of lasciviousness pours out from those who are unchaste, is evident from the statutes among the sons of Israel, that each and all things were unclean which those defiled by such things should touch with their hands.

148°. I have heard from the Angels . . . that the External from the Internal, which they called the External of the Internal, is devoid of all lasciviousness, because the Internal cannot be lascivious, but can only be chastely delighted; and that it imparts the same to its External . . . Quite different is the External separated from the Internal—this, they said, is lascivious in general and in every part.

191°. The love descends from the mind, and acts into the lower things according to their disposition; and therefore a lascivious mind acts lasciviously, and a chaste mind chastely; and the latter disposes the body, whereas the former is disposed by the body.

212. The contrary takes place with those who from being in no love of wisdom are in no conjugal love. These do not enter into marriages except also with the end of being lascivious, and in this end there is also the love of being insane; for, regarded in itself, every end is a love; and lasciviousness in its spiritual origin is insanity.

240°. With those (who reject the holy things of the Church) the interiors . . . are more and more closed up, and in the body are stopped up; and then even the love of the sex becomes vile, or is insanely lascivious in the interiors of the body, and thence in the lowest things of their thought. It is these who are meant in the Memorable Relation, no. 79.

256. The reason commonness from being continually allowed is an accidental cause of cold, is that it attaches to those who think lasciviously about marriage and about a wife . . .

304°. The state of betrothal with (the unchaste) answers scarcely any other purpose than that they may infl their concupiscences with things lascivious, and by them contaminate the Conjugal of love.

305. In the lowest region of the mind . . . reside all the concupiscences of evil, and lasciviousnesses; but in the higher region, which is called spiritual, there are not any concupiscences of evil and lasciviousnesses . . .

345. That polygamy is lasciviousness. Gen.art. The reason is that its love is divided among a number, and is the love of the sex, and is the love of the external or natural man, and thus is not conjugal love, which alone exists chaste. . . Hence polygamous love is lascivious, and polygamy is lasciviousness. . . Thus, as it is the love of the sex, it is the love of lasciviousness.

352. If there were a communication (between the Christian and the Mohammedan Heavens) what is unchaste and lascivious would inflow from the Mohammedans into the Christian Heaven, which could not be endured there . . . (thus) the Christian Angels would become natural, and thus adulterers; or, if they remained spiritual, they would continually feel about them what is lascivious, which would intercept all the bliss of their life.

429. All who are in Hell are in the connubial connection of evil and falsity . . . and as this is adultery, Hell is also that. Hence it is that all there are in the lust, lasciviousness, and immodesty of scortatory love.

439°. I have heard from the Angels that they discriminate in the extremes what is lascivious from what is not lascivious, as anyone discriminates the fire of dung . . . from the fire of spices . . .; and that this is from the difference of the internal delights which enter into the external ones . . .

511°. Wives resist . . . also from an idea of lasciviousness . . .

T. 80. Then she inspired lasciviousness into the man, which Sirens are dexterously skilled in doing, on the reception of which he kissed her . . .

313. In the natural sense, by the sixth commandment is meant not only to commit adultery, but also to will and do obscene things, and thence to think and speak lascivious ones.

590. Like one who alternately . . . satiates his lasciviousness below with a harlot.

D. 386. That those who indulge in lasciviousnesses . . . seem to themselves to be in subterranean places.

— They who have loved a lascivious life, being lascivious in a clandestine way [seem to themselves] to pass their time in subterranean places, as in cellars, which are furnished with candles, and indeed with things like those which belong to their lascivious licence in secret; for phantasies reign when they depart this life, and are turned into like things. But even these also are infested according to the degree and end of their lasciviousnesses, as by mice, and by filthy insects of that kind, which had been inwardly the ends of their lasciviousness; and although they are ignorant that such had been their ends, still they are then manifested by the filthy insects and the like, even until they abstain from these things; for a soul is first given by means of phantasies, by which they are gradually averted. Thus in place of pleasure they are allotted direful phantasies, which afterwards take possession of them, even until they so abhor the pleasures that they desire nothing of them any longer; so that at last they are averse to them; nay, they abhor them. Thus [is it done] according to the ends, or the hidden loves. (Their infestation by filthy little animals further described. 387.)

1663. On the penalty of lasciviousness. (See A.2746, above.)

1664,5. He was thus punished . . . He was driven towards an extended rope, upon coming in contact with which he stooped his head in order to pass under, but was immediately caught by the back, and fastened to the rope, and was then made to revolve round . . . in full view of all the Spirits and Angels, and at the same time shame and pain were struck into him. After he had been released, he came to me . . . and told me that he had been such in his life, but still he spoke with shame . . . he also said that he had been so lacerated that he supposed nothing [of him] was holding together; but still he spoke modestly, and repented that he had been such ; and therefore he had not suffered so much as others who have led such a lascivious life.

1704. To the things which reign in the mind of a man, Spirit, or Angel, are bent all the things which they hear . . . Consequently those who are lascivious (bend) whatever they hear into lascivious visions with them, and thus into lascivious expressions.

1787. There were certain who in the body had led a lascivious life, and who also had been infected, and had infected others with their contagion . . . Not long after death . . . they came to me ; for they did not know that they were in the other life ; and I observed that they wanted to live here in like manner . . . Their life in the body had been to insidiate with wives . . . 1788.

3319<sup>e</sup>. The spheres of adulteries and of cruelties are one, together with such lasciviousness as appears to be conjugal.

3468. The lasciviousness of those (in Gehenna), which is fiery, was (then) as it were diminished, because the delight of the other lasciviousness was greater . . . Hence it was evident that the lasciviousness (of these adulterous priests) was much more atrocious than the lasciviousness of those who are in Gehenna . . .

3912. I perceived that they were such that they were operated through by others who are lascivious ; they had been lascivious (women), from no other end than that lasciviousness might delight them . . .

3922. On the lascivious. There are lascivious men who have lasciviousness as the sole end. When they have wives, they do not care for marriages [except] solely for the sake of lasciviousness, which is their end. Thus in their marriages they do not desire to have infants, because as their wife is then pregnant, they cannot live with her lasciviously ; for the end rules all things ; and therefore they are prone to lasciviousnesses outside of those which they have with their wives, which they practise in foul ways ; and thus they pervert and carry away into lasciviousnesses those who would otherwise be good wives. When the lascivious cannot be with their wife, then they loathe her, and live lasciviously with harlots, and thus their wives also become harlots, caring nothing for the conjugal debt, nor for the procreation of offspring . . . Harlotry in marriage they account as nothing, provided they can practise lasciviousnesses ; and they care nothing for their wives being such. These dwell over the head, rather high up, but a little to the back. Operantur in bulbum penis, quem incendunt, et ei dolorem infligunt.

3923. Such wives, who have lasciviousness as their sole end, have also been seen ; one in a sort of kitchen place . . . Lascivious men, when revolving deceits and wickednesses in their minds, call such into their company . . .

3924. Such a lascivious wife . . . had a knife in her hand . . . and in her phantasy there was an infant . . . because they are such that they have lasciviousnesses as the end, and thus murder infants, because they do not desire them, but as it were destroy them by las- civiousnesses . . . Being inspected by the Angels, they were represented as filthy conglomerated intestines . . . Hence it appeared that they were magical women, and at the same time wickednesses, and deceitful.

4268<sup>o</sup>. One (method of reducing Spirits into order) is that some evil Spirits are admitted among the upright ones, who at once have their sphere with them. The spheres are such that all who are like them are affected ; as when there are lasciviousnesses, then all who are lascivious are excited in a like way . . . and thus they are separated . . .

4547. To the right, a little in front (in Hell) are the brothels of the lascivious ; and those of the voluptuous ; who are in excrements.

4631<sup>o</sup>. These Genii inspire lascivious things in unspeakable ways.

— These points which were . . . blunt, are representative of the greatest lasciviousness.

4719. Conjugal love with the spiritual begins from externals, thus from a certain lasciviousness ; they love nudity, and it excites them. At last, indeed, the externals vanish, but then the conjugal love is also wont to cease in its effect. It is otherwise with the celestial . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. In the other life the spiritual appear clothed. These are lascivious from their nature in the world . . . The reason is that . . . the spiritual love from the intellectual part, which is relatively external ; hence comes what is lascivious in the beginning.

4866. Lasciviousness was excited in me, and this was felt . . . in the common way ; which was perceived by the bystanders, who said Rua raha, which meant the excitation of the lasciviousness of that part . . .

5124. Conjugal love cannot be described : nothing enters into it which is lascivious ; what this is they do not at all know.

5179. On a mountain where is the Conjugal . . . They said that they were all naked . . . but no lasciviousness was excited . . .

5180. There was a certain person who had faith in the sense of the letter of the Word, and supposed himself to have the Conjugal, because he had lived sincerely with his own wife, and had never been lascivious . . . Therefore he was brought to [this place]. He could see naked women without any emotion of lasciviousness ; but they told him that he must strip off his clothes . . . and then . . . he was deprived of his senses . . . and thus he remained, like one half-dead . . . Such are they who believe the Word as to the sense of its letter, and . . . have not imbued interior truths from it.

5466. Where the women dwelt there appeared a brightness as it were sulphureous, which was from the lasciviousness in which they had been in the world ; for what is lascivious with women so appears in the other life when they are together.

[D.] 6055<sup>3</sup>. Those who are in conjugal love feel exactly whether there is what is lascivious or not; for all that is lascivious is of adultery; whereas with those who are in conjugal love, there is nothing of what is lascivious. This is felt by them most exactly. 6110<sup>25</sup>. D.Min. 4604. E.990<sup>3</sup>. De Conj. 4, Gen.art.

6106<sup>3</sup>. I asked Spirits newly arrived from the world, who had accounted things lascivious not to be sins . . . I said that it is allowable to commit whoredom and adultery in Hell . . . and would they rather be in Heaven or in Hell. I asked more than a hundred, and I could not extort an answer.

6110<sup>69</sup>. With those who are in conjugal love . . . the wife inflows into the sense of the husband, so that the sensations and delights themselves are mutually . . . communicated; thus quite different is lascivious love from conjugal love.

—<sup>75</sup>. With these who are in lascivious love, the interiors which are lascivious depart together with potency, and thus a cold is produced from which the common plane as it were dies.

D. Min. 4612. He thus destroys conjugal love, and turns it into what is lascivious.

4628. It is then the love of lasciviousness which reigns, on the cessation of which there is no love.

E. 710<sup>27</sup>. They who are merely natural . . . are not in any conjugal love, but in what is lascivious, such as is that of adultery.

—<sup>28</sup>. The reason they are called 'eunuchs' is that there is not what is lascivious in them, such as there is in those who from the hardness of their hearts . . . married a number of wives . . . —<sup>29</sup>.

803. II. He learns . . . also that lascivious and obscene thoughts are also 'adulteries.'

817<sup>13</sup>. 'He-goats,' in the opposite sense, = those who are in faith separated from charity, because they are lascivious more than all others . . .

1004<sup>5</sup>. For with those who are merely natural, there is . . . only a union of bodies from the lower mind lasciviating in the flesh; which lasciviousness is from a universal law implanted from creation in everything alive and not alive, which is, that everything in which there is force wants to produce its own likeness, and to multiply its species to infinity and eternity.

J. (Post.) 81. It was given to perceive the sphere of (Mohammed's) life. It was exteriorly delightful, concealing interiorly what is lascivious, which exists with them from matrimony with a number of wives and concubines . . .

233. All (Spirits) coming into the World of Spirits after death) have an idea of love from the idea of lasciviousness.

De Conj. 4. The internal of lasciviousness, or of adultery, is from . . . Hell, and from all its unhappiness . . .

55. On those who in the external form live modestly and chastely, but think lasciviously. Gen.art.

66<sup>e</sup>. Then the marriage of good and truth perished, from which nakedness became lascivious . . .

67. In all the rest of the Heavens below the Third all appear clothed, and blush at their nakedness before the eyes of others, because it excites what is lascivious.

Lasha. Lascha.

A. 1212. 'In coming to Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, even unto Lasha' (Gen.x.19)=the falsities and evils in which they are terminated.

Lassitude. Lassitudo.

D. Min. 4599. There were some who had general affection . . . They induced lassitude of the lower mind, with as it were lassitude of the body . . . because there is but little vital in such a general affection . . . Life itself consists in the intelligence and wisdom of truth, and if this is absent . . . there is lassitude.

E. 992<sup>3</sup>. The Angels are in continual potency; and after the act there is never lassitude . . . but alacrity of life . . .

Last, Ultimate. Ultimus.

See under BOUNDARY, EXTREME, FIRST, HAIR, and NAZARITE.

A. 118. 'Euphrates'=knowledge, which is the ultimate, or terminus.

1476. The Scientific in general then becomes the ultimate vessel . . .

1486<sup>e</sup>. Scientifics, therefore, are the ultimate and outermost things, in which are terminated interior things in their order . . .

1748. 'The sole,' and 'the heel' = the ultimate Natural.

—'. 'A shoe' = the Natural still more ultimate-ulteriorius.

—<sup>e</sup>. For the ultimate Natural and Corporeal is the lowest of all things which are with man. Sig.

1808<sup>3</sup>. All celestial and spiritual things . . . are substantial, and therefore they come forth actually in ultimate nature.

1837. 'Sunset' = the last time of the Church, which is called the consummation, when there is no longer any charity.

1839<sup>e</sup>. 'The day of Jehovah' = the last time and state of the Church.

1843<sup>2</sup>. That faith is rare in the last times . . .

1850. See LAST JUDGMENT, here.

1857. See CONSUMMATE, here. 4057.

1861<sup>9</sup>. The Falsities which will reign in the last times. Sig.

1886, Pref. (From these things) it may be evident . . . that the last time is at hand. 2121<sup>e</sup>. 2122<sup>e</sup>. 2123. 2126<sup>e</sup>.

2135, Pref. By 'the Last Judgment' is signified the last time of the Church.

2198<sup>e</sup>. 'Old age' involves nothing else than the last time . . .

2242. The last time of the Church in general, and the last time of anyone in particular, is called in the Word 'visitation,' and precedes the Judgment.

2335. 'Evening' = the state of the Church before the last, when there begins to be no faith . . .

2353. 'At night' = the last time when (the Divine Human and the Holy proceeding) are acknowledged no longer.

2371. The state of the Church is here described such as it is about the last times . . .

2456. The Lord's thought concerning the last time. Sig.

2492<sup>e</sup>. For the exterior memory is the ultimate of order, in which spiritual and celestial things are softly terminated and reside, when there are goods and truths therein. H.466.

2679<sup>e</sup>. (These erroneous things) may serve spiritual things as ultimate planes.

2760<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) it is evident that about the last time the internal sense of the Word will be opened.

2776<sup>e</sup>. If only they will think in the last hour . . . 3938<sup>e</sup>.

2906<sup>e</sup>. 'The posterity of years' = the last time of the Church. —.

2908. 'To die,' 'dead,' and 'death,' when predicated of the Church, = its last time, when all faith, that is, charity, has expired; which time is in the Word called 'night.'

2967<sup>e</sup>. Truths in their order down to the ultimate ones which are sensuous. Sig.

3134<sup>e</sup>. 'No man' . . . treats of the last time of the Church, when there is no longer anything of truth.

3293<sup>e</sup>. For the spiritual life (of the spirit after death) is terminated in the Natural as in the ultimate plane . . .

3301. 'Hair' . . . = the Natural, because hairs are outgrowths in the ultimates of man.

3382<sup>e</sup>. For all these things regard Him as the First from Whom, and as the Last to whom.

3398<sup>e</sup>. Such was the state which is meant by . . . 'the last day,' etc.

3483. For each and all things in nature are ultimate images . . .

3519<sup>e</sup>. By 'the wool of she-goats' is signified the ultimate or outermost of innocence, which is in ignorance, such as there is with the gentiles.

3632. See ORDER, here.

3657. How the Lord began to make Divine His Natural as to truth, from the ultimate of order, in order that He might thus dispose the intermediate things and conjoin each and all things to the First . . . Tr.

3702. For man is so created that the Divine things of the Lord may descend through him down to the ultimates of nature, and may ascend from the ultimates of nature to Him . . . and thus through man, as through the uniting medium, the very ultimate of nature may live from the Divine, which would be the case, if man had lived according to Divine order. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident that there would be a descent of the Divine through man into the ultimate of nature, and from the ultimate of nature an ascent to the Divine, if only, in the faith of his heart . . . he would acknowledge the Lord as his first and last end.

—<sup>3</sup>. When (the Most Ancients) were contemplating the lower and ultimate things of nature, they appeared before their eyes as if they were alive . . . From which it is evident of what quality are those through whom the Divine things of the Lord descend down to the ultimates of nature, and from the ultimates of nature ascend to Him, and represent the Divine communication . . . which in the supreme sense is signified by 'the Angels ascending and descending on the ladder set upon the earth . . .'

3720. 'This is nothing but the house of God' = the Lord's Kingdom in the ultimate of order.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason 'the house of God' here = the Lord's Kingdom in the ultimate of order, is that it is treating of Jacob . . . The Natural is in the ultimate of order; for therein are terminated all the interior things; and there they are together; and because they are together there, and thus innumerable things are together beheld as one, there is what is relatively obscure there.

3721. 'And this is the gate of Heaven' = the ultimate in which order ceases, through which ultimate, there is apparently as it were an entrance from nature. Ex.

3726. It treats . . . here now that it is truth which is the ultimate of order. It is this ultimate which is called the holy terminus, and is signified by the stone which Jacob took, and set for a statue. That truth is the ultimate of order may be evident from this, that good cannot be terminated in good, but in truth; for truth is what receives good . . . Hence it is evident that good is the first of order, and truth the ultimate.

3739. '(This stone) shall be the house of God' = (that the truth which is the ultimate) shall be the Lord's Kingdom in the ultimate of order, in which higher things are as in their house. Ex.

3752<sup>e</sup>. These things are said of the last time of the Church, that is, of its vastation . . .

3901. That the last state of the Church is compared to the eagles which are gathered together to a carcass . . .

4009<sup>e</sup>. Because in the Sensuous as in the ultimate of order prior things are together, each son (of Jacob) represents some General, in which those things are.

4089. 'Bethel' = good in the ultimate of order, consequently in the Natural, for this is the ultimate of order, because celestial and spiritual things are terminated there.

4090. 'The statue' = a holy terminus, thus the ultimate of order, and consequently truth.

4116. All the boundaries of the Land of Canaan represented . . . that which was ultimate, and that which was first; the ultimate, because it ceased there . . . 4240.

4240. The Ultimate or First Heaven is celestial and spiritual natural, being in simple good, which is the ultimate of order there. In like manner with a regenerate man, who is a little Heaven.

4255<sup>3</sup>. 'To remember from the land of Jordan' = from what is ultimate, thus from what is low.

4539. As interior things are terminated and bounded in the ultimates of order, and are together there, and as it were dwell together in one house ; and as the Natural with man is the ultimate with man, in which interior things are terminated, therefore by 'Bethel' is properly signified the Natural . . . In the Natural, or in the ultimate of order, also are Knowledges.

[A.] 455<sup>2</sup>. But when a man does not suffer himself to be led by the Lord, but by evil, they are then in the opposite order . . . and to the ultimate circumferences are rejected the veriest Divine truths . . .

458<sup>o</sup>. When they saw these stones as boundaries, they thought about truths which are the ultimates of order.

458<sup>5</sup>. For the Lord . . . progressed . . . from truth which is in the ultimate of order . . .

4618<sup>3</sup>. Therefore the Heavens have been so formed . . . that one may serve another for reception, and at last man as to his Natural and Sensuous for the ultimate reception ; for there the Divine is in the ultimate of order, and passes into the world. Therefore if the ultimate agrees or corresponds with the prior things, then the prior things are together in the ultimate ; for the things which are ultimate are receptacles of the things prior to themselves, and there the successives are together.

4638. The last time of the old Church and the first of the new. Sig.

4697<sup>4</sup>. As it here treats of the last day, or of the last state of the Church . . .

5006. That truth not spiritual applied itself to the ultimate of spiritual truth. Sig.

5008. That it withdrew that ultimate truth. Sig. and Ex. 5010. 5028. 5036<sup>4</sup>.

— In ultimates there is affinity, but not any conjunction. Ex.

5044<sup>4</sup>. By 'Egypt' is signified the Scientific of the Church, thus natural truth which is the ultimate of order . . .

5078<sup>6</sup>. That he will not rise until the last day : when yet it is the last day for everyone when he dies.

5114. Derivations thence down to the ultimate one. Sig. and Ex. 5122<sup>3</sup>, Ex.

— To the ultimate which is the Sensuous : for the first in order is the Intellectual, and the ultimate is the Sensuous. Ex.

— 4. The life of man . . . passes through these degrees from the inmost to the ultimate, and according to its derivation it becomes more and more general, and in the ultimate most general. Ex.

5122<sup>2</sup>. At last the order is inverted, and then that which was last becomes the first.

5125<sup>2</sup>. Then sensuous things are reduced into order, in order that they may be in the last place. When sensuous things are in the last place . . .

5153. 'Are three days' = to the ultimate.

5154. 'Within three days' = that which is in the ultimate.

5168<sup>3</sup>. At this day within the Church there is no longer any charity ; for it is the last time of the Church ; consequently neither is there any affection for knowing such things. 5639<sup>3</sup>.

5189<sup>3</sup>. In ultimates the fibres act dissimilarly, but still they are from one beginning ; thus they act dissimilarly in ultimates as to the appearance, but similarly as to end.

5196. (These) were the ultimate boundaries of Canaan . . . consequently these rivers represented the ultimates or boundaries (in the Lord's Kingdom). The Nile . . . represented the sensuous things subject to the intellectual part, thus the scientifics which are from them ; for these are the ultimates of the spiritual things of the Lord's Kingdom.

—<sup>e</sup>. To view anything from the interior down to the ultimate, is represented by standing near the ultimate. This is the case in the Spiritual World.

5247<sup>4</sup>. As the Internal does not exist without the External—the External is the ultimate of order in which the Internal subsists—it was a dishonour to the Word to call Elisha 'bald.'

5373<sup>3</sup>. Scientifics which are of the Natural are the ultimates of order : prior things must be in ultimates in order that they may come forth and appear in that sphere ; and moreover all prior things tend to ultimates as to their termini or ends, and therein they come forth together—as do causes in their effects, or as do higher things in lower ones—as in their vessels. The scientifics which are of the Natural are such ultimates. Hence it is that the Spiritual World is terminated in the Natural of man ; in which the things of the Spiritual World are presented representatively . . .

5874. (Mercy and joy) even to ultimates. Sig.

— 'The Egyptians' = scientifics, thus ultimates ; for the scientifics with man are his ultimates. That scientifics are man's ultimate things—that is to say, in his memory and thought—does not appear : it seems to him that they make everything of intelligence and wisdom. But it is not so ; they are only . . . ultimate vessels ; for they conjoin themselves with the sensuous things of the body. That they are the ultimate things is evident to him who reflects upon his own thought . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) scientifics serve man to form the understanding ; but when the understanding has been formed, they then form the ultimate plane, in which the man no longer thinks, but above it.

5945<sup>2</sup>. Such doctrinal things (of scientifics), being the first things which a man learns, also serve him afterwards as an ultimate plane ; for when he has advanced to interior things they become the ultimate things. Moreover in these things celestial and spiritual things actually cease . . . for the Spiritual World has as it were its feet and soles in the natural ; and, with man, as to his spiritual life, in the doctrinal things of scientifics.

6000<sup>4</sup>. 'Midnight' = the last time of the old Church, when there is nothing of faith because nothing of charity ; and also the first time of the new Church.

— 'Night' = the last time of the old Church, and the first of the new.

6077. All things in the Spiritual World, and thence all things in the natural, seek something ulterior in which to be, and act the cause in the effect . . . This ulterior is as it were a body . . . This effort does not cease except in the ultimates of nature, where things inert oppose themselves.

6396<sup>2</sup>. Thus the ultimates of that Land represented the ultimates in the Lord's Kingdom; and therefore Dan represented those who are in the ultimates there; for truth before it has been conjoined with good is in the ultimate . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That the inheritance of Dan was the ultimate of the Land of Canaan, is evident from . . . 'from Beersheba even to Dan;' 'Beersheba'=the inmost of the Land.

6402<sup>e</sup>. These are in the Lord's Kingdom, but in its ultimates.

6451<sup>2</sup>. Life . . . does not become quiescent except in the ultimate of order, where it comes to a stand; and as interior things inflow according to order even to the ultimate, and there come to a stand, it is evident that the interior things are together in the ultimate; but in this order: the inmost . . . holds the centre there; the interior things . . . encompass the centre; and the exterior things make the circumferences; and this not only in general, but also in singulars.

—<sup>3</sup>. As all the interior things are together in the ultimate, there is an appearance as if life were in the ultimate, that is, in the body, when yet it is in the interior things . . .

6473. That the Lord rules man's ultimates equally as his primes, may be evident from the fact that order is from the Lord, which is successive from primes to ultimates; and in order itself there is nothing except the Divine; and because it is so, it is necessary for the presence of the Lord to be equally in ultimates as in primes . . .

6493<sup>e</sup>. Fortune is Providence in the ultimate of order, in which all things are relatively inconstant.

6495<sup>2</sup>. Into these (external) bonds, which make the ultimate plane, the Lord then inflows . . .

6587. Prediction concerning the last time of the Church. Sig.

6588. That the last time will come. Sig.

6592. By Joseph's 'bones' is signified that which is most external, or the ultimate of the Church, thus its representative; for the representatives . . . were the ultimates of the Church . . .

6666<sup>e</sup>. (This) is a sign that the last time of the Church is at hand . . .

6844<sup>2</sup>. Therefore (sensuous things) are the last which can be regenerated . . .

6895. 'To visit'=the Advent of the Lord, which precedes the last time of the Church, which time is called in the Word 'the Last Judgment.'

6952. 'Take it by the tail'=the power of elevating from the ultimate of the Sensuous . . . For 'a serpent'=the Sensuous . . . Thus its tail=the ultimate, or lowest there . . . (Thus) by 'the serpent's tail' is signified falsity itself, for this is ultimate or lowest . . .

7004<sup>2</sup>. So that the First Esse may be present in the derivatives mediately and immediately, thus equally in the ultimate of order and in its prime . . .

7270<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) there are continual successions from the First . . . down to ultimates which are with man (and which are here defined to be the Sensuous and Corporeal of man); nay, to the ultimates which are in nature. The ultimates which are with man, as also in nature, are relatively sluggish, and are thence cold; and are relatively general, and thence obscure.

—<sup>4</sup>. But it is to be well known that truth Divine . . . inflows also at the same time without successive formation, even into the ultimates of order . . .

7337. The effects in ultimates are miracles, when it pleases the Lord that they should be presented in that form.

—<sup>2</sup>. Order appears alike in the ultimates where the miracles are presented. For example: the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord has in itself all power; hence it is that there is power also in truths in the ultimate of order; and therefore the evil acquire power by truths . . .

7644. 'Shall cover the surface of the earth'=the ultimates of the natural mind. 'Surface'=external things, thus ultimates.

7645. That from the vastation of the extremes in the Natural the whole natural mind will be obscured (is in this way): the interior things with man are terminated in his ultimates or extremes; and there the things which are successive with him are together: when in the ultimates there is nothing except falsity and evil, then the truths and goods which inflow from the interiors into the ultimates inflow there into evils and falsities, and are thus turned there into such things, and therefore there appears nothing in the whole Natural except falsity and evil . . .

7729. As the ultimate of the Natural is signified by 'a hoof' . . . there is also signified the truth which is the ultimate of the Natural. —<sup>2</sup>, III.

7844<sup>2</sup>. 'Evening'=the last time of the Church, and also its first . . .

8480. It is called an abuse when the like comes forth in ultimates, but from a contrary origin . . .

8610. By 'Moses' is represented truth in the first of order . . . When the truth in the ultimate of order corresponds to this truth, the latter is supported; for they then act as one; for the interior ones are conjoined with the exterior, and finally with the ultimate ones, by correspondences: then the first truth has strength in the ultimate one, for it is in it and acts through it; whereas if there is not correspondence, there is disjunction; hence the first truth has no strength in the ultimate one

8906<sup>6</sup>. 'The day of Jehovah' = the last state or last time of the Church, when there is no longer truth, but in place of truth falsity.

9063. The Sensuous is the ultimate in the natural man.

9213<sup>1</sup>. 'To break the bones' = to destroy the truths from the Divine which are the ultimate in order. . . Truths ultimate in order are the truths of the sense of the letter . . .

9212. By 'the garment,' here, which is given in pledge, is signified the ultimate of the Natural, which is the Sensuous . . .

9216. The Sensuous is the ultimate of the life of man; (and) that which is ultimate contains all the interior things, and is their General, for they cease in it, and thus rest upon it: as for example the skin, which is the ultimate covering of the body . . . In like manner, in the body, the peritoneum . . . and so also the pleura relatively to the viscera of the chest . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Moreover, it is to be known that each and all things progress from the First or Inmost successively to their ultimates, and there rest; and the prior or interior things have a connection with the ultimate in successive order; and therefore if the ultimates disappear, the interior things also are dissipated . . . Hence the human race is the ultimate in order, in which ceases, and on which rests, Heaven . . .

9372<sup>3</sup>. 'A reed' = truth in the ultimate, such as is the Word in the letter.

9391<sup>2</sup>. 'The soles of the feet' = the things which are ultimate, in the natural man.

9406. 'And under His feet' = the ultimate sense, which is the sense of the very letter . . . (for) the ultimate of truth Divine or of the Word is such as is the sense of the letter . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. 'A cloud' = the Word in the letter, or Divine truth in ultimates.

—<sup>6</sup>. Truth Divine or the Lord in ultimates is meant by 'His arms and feet like the brightness of polished brass;' and also by 'the voice of His words like the voice of a multitude.'

9407<sup>9</sup>. The Nazarites = the Lord as to the Divine Natural; thence also Divine truth proceeding from Him in ultimates, which is the Word in the sense of the letter; for 'the hair' . . . = truth in ultimates.

9430. 'A cloud covered it' = the ultimate of the Word, that it is thus relatively obscure.

—<sup>2</sup>. For all who are in Heaven are instructed by the Lord from the truth Divine which is with man, thus from the Word. The reason is that man is in the ultimate of order, and all the interior things cease in the ultimate; the ultimate is as it were the support of the interior things, in which these subsist and rest. The Word in the letter is Divine truth in the ultimate of order; in like manner the man of the Church with whom is Divine truth, as to his Natural and Sensuous: in the latter as in the former the interior things are terminated and rest. Ex.

9433<sup>6</sup>. 'The bases upon which it is founded' = truths in ultimates, such as are those of the Word in its literal sense. . . Hence it is evident what is 'the bound set so that they may not pass over,' namely the ultimate of truth Divine in which the interior things cease; and upon which as upon a support and foundation they subsist and rest.

9536. 'Thou shalt make for it four rings of gold' = the ultimate receptacle of the heavenly marriage . . .

9537. 'The corners' = firmness . . . from the conjunction of Divine truth with Divine good in ultimates, which is signified by the four rings of gold.

9552<sup>9</sup>. 'To kill the last ones—postrema—with the sword' = thus to destroy the ultimates.

9608. 'Thou shalt make fifty loops in one curtain' = plenary conjunction in the ultimates of the spheres.

9628. 'The hinder parts of the Habitation' = the ultimate of Heaven.

9629. The manner in which this ultimate proceeds from good, so that Heaven may be rendered safe. Sig.

9726. 'Thou shalt make for it a grating, the work of a net' = the Sensuous which is the ultimate. 'A grating the work of a net' = the external Sensuous, thus that which is the ultimate of life with man; and because it = the ultimate, it was put around the altar . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore (the Sensuous) is the last which is regenerated.

9730. 'Thou shalt put it beneath the circuit of the altar downwards' = this in ultimates. . . For 'a circuit,' when the Sensuous is treated of, = the ultimate. That the external Sensuous is the ultimate of life with man. Ref.

9823. 'The breastplate' = Divine truth shining forth from Divine good; here, in ultimates progressively from the inmost things in the Heavens; for the ephod, upon which that breastplate was, represented the ultimates of the Spiritual Kingdom, and consequently the ultimates of Heaven. Ex.

9824<sup>2</sup>. Successives, which proceed and follow in their order, in ultimates present themselves together. Take for example, end, cause, and effect; the end is the first in order, the cause is the second, and the effect is the ultimate; and so do they successively progress; but still in the effect, which is the ultimate, the cause is presented together, and the end in the cause . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The case is similar with willing, thinking, and doing . . . To will is the first, to think is the second, and to do is the ultimate, which also is the effect, in which the prior or interior things come forth together . . . Hence it is that . . . man is to be judged according to his deeds or works . . .

— . As, then, the interior things present themselves together in the ultimate, therefore . . . the ultimate, if the order is perfect, is held as what is holy above the interior things ; for the holiness of the interior things is there complete.

—<sup>4</sup>. As in ultimates the interior things are together . . . therefore John was loved by the Lord more than the rest of the disciples . . . Hence also it is evident why the external or ultimate which is in perfect order, is holy above the internal things regarded one by one ; for when the Lord is in the ultimate, He is simultaneously in all things ; and when He is in that ultimate, the interior things are held together in their order, connection, and form, and under supervision and guidance at pleasure.

—<sup>5</sup>. This, then, is the reason why the ephod, because it was a representative of the ultimate in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, was held to be more holy than the rest of the garments of the priesthood ; and therefore the ephod was the principal sacerdotal dress, and was made of threads of gold woven in the midst of hyacinthine, crimson, scarlet double-dyed, and fine linen . . .

983<sup>6</sup>. Because all preservation depends on the state of the ultimates ; for all the interior things cease there, and form a plane there, in which they subsist. Ultimates are like the soles and the feet on which the whole body stands ; and they are also like the hands and arms, by means of which the body exercises its powers . . . Hence, too, it is, that the hands and arms, and also the soles and feet, correspond to the ultimates of Heaven. That power and strength consists in ultimates, was represented in the Ancient Church by the hair with the Nazarites . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That in ultimates there is power, and also the preservation of interior things in their state, can be understood by those who know how the case is with things successive and thence simultaneous in nature ; namely, that things successive at last form in ultimates what is simultaneous, in which they are collaterally in the like order ; and therefore things simultaneous, which are ultimates, serve the successive things, which are prior, as corresponding supports on which they rest, and thus by means of which they are preserved.

985<sup>4</sup>. It here treats of the conjunction of truths through good in the ultimates of the Spiritual Kingdom . . .

986<sup>6</sup>. Hence it is that the three Heavens are one in ultimates ; in like manner each Heaven . . .

989<sup>1</sup>. It treats of the conjunction of all the goods and truths of Heaven with the ultimates there, and thence of the preservation of the whole and of all its parts.

989<sup>5</sup>. That those things which are lowest, or which are ultimate, hold together the higher or interior things in connection and form. Ref. This lowest, or ultimate, is represented by the belt of the ephod.

990<sup>5</sup>. 'The urim and thummim' = the shining forth of the Divine truth from the Lord in ultimates. —<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>5</sup>. It is to be known that this shining forth appears in ultimates, because all things which are of light from the Divine descend down to ultimate ends ; and because they descend thither, they also shine forth there and thence. Hence it is that the breastplate was put upon the ephod and upon its belt ; for the ephod represented Divine truth in ultimates . . .

991<sup>7</sup>. That from the Divine in extremes or ultimates healing went forth. Sig.

991<sup>8</sup>. 'The fringes' = the ultimates or extremes of Heaven and the Church ; and the ultimates or extremes there are scientifics. Ex.

993<sup>5</sup>. 'Pure frankincense,' which was put upon the cakes, = truth from celestial good, which is the ultimate or extreme of the Celestial Kingdom.

996<sup>6</sup>. The reason 'a basket' = the Sensuous, is that the Sensuous is the ultimate of the life of man ; and in the ultimate are stored up all the interior things in order.

— . The ultimate of the Intellectual is called the sensuous Scientific ; and the ultimate of the Voluntary is called sensuous delight . . . The ultimate of the Intellectual is imbibed through . . . hearing and sight ; and . . . the ultimate of the Voluntary is imbibed through . . . taste and touch ; the ultimate of the perception of both is smell . . . The ultimate of the Intellectual is meant . . . by 'a cup' . . . and the ultimate of the Voluntary by 'a basket' ; and as the ultimate is the containant of all the interior things, the interior things also are meant by these vessels . . .

1002<sup>8</sup>. The whole of Divine truth in the Sensuous, which is the ultimate of the life of man. Sig. and Ex.

— . The ultimate of life in the human is that which is called the external Sensuous, which is here meant.

—<sup>2</sup>. These truths, with the prior ones in their order, cease in ultimates, which are of the external Sensuous, and are there together. Hence it is evident that all interior truths are together in the truths of the sense of the letter of the Word ; for these latter truths . . . are ultimate.

1003<sup>0</sup>. (Accommodated good) which is in the ultimates or lowest things. Sig. and Ex.

— . 'The intestines' = the ultimate or lowest things.

1003<sup>6</sup>. 'Its skin' = falsity in ultimates. Ex.

1004<sup>2</sup>. There are two things which signify the whole, namely, the highest and the lowest. The reason the lowest or ultimate [does so], is that all the interior things cease in ultimates . . . and are there together. Hence it is that the highest through the ultimate holds together all the interior things—which are the intermediates—in connection and in form, so that they look to one end. That the ultimate = the whole, is evident from many things in the Word, as that the whole man is called 'flesh.' Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. As ultimates = all things, or the whole, therefore the hair and the beard, which are the ultimates that are excrescent with man, are taken for them ; and also the feet ; nay, the toes and the fingers. Ill.

[A. 10044<sup>3</sup>]. 'To shave the head, the hair of the feet, and the beard' = to take away the ultimates; for when these are taken away, the interior things dissolve and perish.

—<sup>6</sup>. That all things are held together in connection . . . from the first or highest through ultimates or lowest things. Sig.

—<sup>7</sup>. That the first holds together all things in connection through the ultimate, may be evident from the Word, and from man. Ex. —<sup>8</sup>.

—<sup>8</sup>. As to man, man in ultimates is the Church on earth . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. The ultimate of man is the skin . . . That the skin is the ultimate holding the interior things in connection is evident . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. From these things the arcanum is manifest why the Lord glorified His Human also as to ultimates; the ultimates are called 'bones and flesh' . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. That the interior things cease and rest in ultimates, and are there together; and that ultimates hold the interior things together in connection, even in spiritual things. Refs. That therefore in ultimates there is strength and power; and that therefore there is holiness in ultimates; and that in ultimates there are things revealed and answers. Refs.

10062<sup>2</sup>. But it is to be known that the ultimate or outermost of any member = the same as the whole member.

10125<sup>4</sup>. That the Lord glorified His very body even to its ultimates, which are the bones and the flesh . . .

10129<sup>7</sup>. The incense . . . is called 'the holy of holies,' because it = celestial good in ultimates . . .

10137<sup>2</sup>. It here treats of the last time of the Church, when there is no longer there the good of love and the truth of faith . . .

10186. For in outermost or ultimate things truth from good is in its power.

10236<sup>2</sup>. By the Sensuous which is the ultimate of the Natural, is meant that which is properly called the flesh, and which perishes when the man dies . . . That this Sensuous is the ultimate plane in which the life of man is terminated, and upon which as upon a base it rests itself, may be evident. (Continued under SENSUOUS.)

10259<sup>9</sup>. For 'myrrh' = sensuous truth, which is truth ultimate in order . . . and from the ultimate and the inmost there must be what is full . . .

10313<sup>2</sup>. Therefore by 'servants' . . . is signified the Sensuous which is the ultimate of the life of man.

10376. 'A stone' = Divine truth in ultimates . . . and Divine truth in ultimates is the sense of the letter of the Word . . .

10634. The Divine things of the Word . . . are said to be 'created,' when they are Divine from inmosts to outermosts, or from primes to ultimates.

—<sup>2</sup>. For all that which is from the Divine begins from Him, and progresses according to order down to the ultimate end, thus through the Heavens down into the world, and there rests as in its ultimate; for the ultimate of Divine order is in the nature of the world. That which is such is said to be 'created.'

10728. For the representatives of the Church with the Israelitish nation were truths in the ultimate of order. For with representatives the case is this: the things which appear in nature, in its three kingdoms, are the ultimates of Divine order; for in them are terminated all things of Heaven, which are called things spiritual and celestial . . .

H. 65<sup>o</sup>. For the arms and hands are ultimates of man, although at the side.

102<sup>o</sup>. Nature has been created solely that it may invest what is spiritual, and present it correspondently in the ultimate of order.

297. The Lord Himself inflows with every man according to the order of Heaven, both into his inmosts and into his ultimates, and disposes him to receive Heaven; and rules his ultimates from his inmosts, and at the same time his inmosts from his ultimates, and thus holds together in connection each and all things with him. This influx of the Lord is called immediate influx.

304<sup>2</sup>. The exteriors of man which are in the natural world are all things which are of his . . . external memory, and which are thence of his thought and imagination; in general Knowledges and knowledges with their delights and pleasantnesses, in proportion as they savour of the world; and also many pleasures which are of the sensuous things of the body; and moreover the senses themselves, the speech, and the actions. All these things are also the ultimates, in which the Divine influx of the Lord ceases; for this influx does not subsist in the middle, but advances to its own ultimates. From these things it may be evident that in man is the ultimate of Divine order; and because he is the ultimate, he is the basis and foundation.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason the Divine influx . . . does not subsist in the middle, but advances to its ultimates . . . is that the middle through which it passes is the angelic Heaven, and the ultimate is with man . . .

315. Divine order never subsists in the middle, and there without an ultimate forms anything; for it is not in its fulness and perfection; but it goes to the ultimate. But when it is in its ultimate, then it forms . . .

353 (y). That the Sensuous is the ultimate of the life of man. Refs.

475. In the deeds or works is presented the whole man; and his will and thought . . . are not complete until they are in deeds or works . . . for these are the ultimates in which those things are terminated . . .

540<sup>o</sup>. Falsities from evil . . . would affect the simple good who are in the ultimates of Heaven . . .

580. The second kind (of the arts of infernal Spirits) relates to the abuse of the ultimates of Divine order.

J. 1. Because the sense of the letter of the Word is natural, and in the ultimate of Divine order . . .

9. Creation commenced from highest or inmost things . . . and proceeded to ultimate or outermost things, and then first subsisted. The ultimate of creation is the natural world, and in it the terraqueous globe with all things which are upon it. When these things had been completed, then man was created, and into him were collected all things of Divine order from primes to ultimates; into his inmost were collected those things which are in the primes of that order; into his ultimates, the things which are in its ultimates; so that man was made Divine order in form.

—<sup>8</sup>. Man's spiritual things, which are of his thought and will, inflow into his natural things, which are of his sensations and actions, and there cease and subsist. If man did not enjoy these latter also, or were devoid of these termini or ultimates, his spiritual things . . . would dissolve, like things interminate or devoid of a bottom. In like manner is it when a man passes out of the natural world . . . then, being a Spirit, he does not subsist upon his Own basis, but upon the common basis, which is the human race.

20<sup>e</sup>. 'To create in the image of God, and in the likeness of God,' is to collect into him all things of Divine order from primes to ultimates, and thus make him an Angel as to the interiors of his mind.

L. 36. That thus God became a Man, as in primes, so also in ultimates. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. It is from this that the Lord is called . . . 'the First and the Last.' III.

S. 6<sup>2</sup>. Therefore when (the Divine) is in its ultimate degree, it is in its fullness. Such is the Word. This, in its ultimate sense, is natural . . .

27. In every Divine work there is a first, a middle, and an ultimate; and the first goes through the middle to the ultimate, and thus comes into existence and subsists: hence the ultimate is the basis. Also, the first is in the middle, and, through the middle, in the ultimate: thus the ultimate is the containant. And as the ultimate is the containant and the basis, it is also the support.

28<sup>e</sup>. When these things are comprehended, it is also comprehended that every Divine work is complete and perfect in the ultimate; and also that in the ultimate, which is a trine, is everything, because the prior things are in it simultaneously.

38. How successive order becomes in the ultimate simultaneous order. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. As to the Word: the Celestial, Spiritual, and Natural proceed from the Lord in successive order, and in the ultimate they are in simultaneous order.

49<sup>2</sup>. Hence by 'the hairs of the head' is signified celestial wisdom in ultimates; and also Divine truth in ultimates.

98. That the Lord came into the world in order that He might infl all things of the Word, and thereby become Divine truth or the Word also in ultimates. Gen.art.

— (This) is meant by these words in John: 'The Word has been made flesh, and has dwelt among us, and we have seen His glory . . . ' (i. 14): 'to become flesh' = to become the Word in ultimates.

— His quality as the Word in ultimates, He showed to His disciples when He was transfigured . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lord as the Word in ultimates is described in Rev. i. 13-16; where all things of the description of Him = the ultimates of Divine truth, or of the Word.

—<sup>e</sup>. The Lord had indeed been the Word before, but in primes . . . But when the Word had been made flesh, then the Lord became the Word in ultimates also. It is from this that He is called 'the First and the Last.' III.

W. 52. There is a correspondence . . . of (man's) ultimate life with all things of the mineral kingdom.

—<sup>2</sup>. In the Spiritual World there are all things which come forth in the natural world; and they are correspondences . . . also of the ultimates of life of those who are there.

61<sup>e</sup>. The endeavour (in minerals) towards vegetating, and thus towards performing uses, is the ultimate from the Divine in created things.

65. The uses of all things which have been created ascend through degrees from ultimates to man . . . Gen.art.

— Ultimates are each and all things of the mineral kingdom, which are matters of various kinds, of stony, saline, oily, mineral, metallic substance, covered over with soil consisting of what is vegetable and animal mouldered into the finest dust. In these lie concealed the end and also the beginning of all the uses which are from life. The end of all uses is the endeavour to produce them; and the beginning is the force which acts from that endeavour. These are of the mineral kingdom.

165. The reason a dead sun has been created is that all things may be fixed, stated, and constant in ultimates; and in order that there may thence come forth things which are perennial and ever-enduring. Thus and no otherwise is creation founded. The terraqueous globe, in which, upon which, and around which, such things are, is as a basis and a support; for it is the ultimate work, in which all things cease, and upon which they rest. That it is also as it were a matrix, from which are produced the effects which are the ends of creation, will be told in what follows.

167. That the end of creation comes forth in ultimates; which is, that all things may return to the Creator, and that there may be conjunction. Gen.art. 171.

207. In every ultimate there are discrete degrees in simultaneous order. (Continued under DEGREE.)

208. In a word, there are such degrees in every ultimate, thus in every effect; for every ultimate consists of prior things, and these of their primes . . .

209. That the ultimate degree is the complex, the containant, and the basis of the prior degrees. Gen.art. 211. 212.

212<sup>e</sup>. The effect is nothing else than the end in its ultimate; and as the ultimate is the complex, it follows that the ultimate is the containant, and also the basis.

215. That the ultimate of each (of these) series, which is use, action, work, and exercise, is the complex and the containant of all the prior things, has not yet been known. It appears as if in use, action, work, and exercise, there is no more than such as is in motion; but still all the prior things are in them actually, and so fully that nothing is wanting. They are enclosed in them as wine is in its vessel, and as furniture is in its house. The reason they do not appear is that they are regarded only exteriorly, and regarded exteriorly they are only activities and motions. It is as when the arms and hands move, and it is not known that a thousand motor fibres concur to each of their motions, and that to the thousand motor fibres there correspond thousands of things of thought and affection, which excite the motor fibres; and which, as they act inmosty, do not appear before any sense of the body. This is known: that nothing acts in the body, or through it, except what is from the will through the thought; and as both act, it must needs be that each and all things of the will and thought are in the action. They cannot be separated. Hence it is that from the deeds or works a judgment is formed by others concerning the thought of the man's will, which is called the intention. This has been made known to me: that from a man's deed or work alone the Angels perceive and see everything of the will and thought of him who does it. . . . Hence it is that in the Word 'works' and 'deeds' are so often commanded, and it is said that a man is Known from them.

[W.] 216. Unless will and understanding, or affection and thought, and also charity and faith, impart and involve themselves, when possible, in works or deeds, they are nothing better than airy things which pass away. . . . The reason is that the ultimate is the complex, the containant, and the basis of the prior things.

217. That degrees of height are in fulness and in power in their ultimate. Gen.art.

218. That (these degrees) in their ultimate are in their power, may be confirmed from all those things which have been adduced. . . . from things sensible and perceptible. . . . but here I shall confirm them only by the endeavours, forces, and motions in dead subjects and in living subjects. Ex.

— As motion is the ultimate degree of endeavour, by this it exerts its power.

220. As the body has determined its powers chiefly into the arms and hands, which are ultimates, (they)= power.

221. Therefore the ultimate sense (of the Word), which is . . . called the sense of the letter, is not only the complex, containant, and basis of the corresponding interior senses, but the Word in the ultimate sense is also in its fulness and in its power.

—<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord fully glorified the natural Human even to its ultimates, He therefore rose with the whole body. . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. As by the assumption of the natural Human the Lord made Himself Divine truth in ultimates, He is therefore called 'the Word,' and it is said that 'the Word has been made flesh;' and Divine truth in ultimates is the Word as to the sense of the letter: this He made Himself by the fulfilling of all things of the Word concerning Himself in Moses and the Prophets. Ex.

233<sup>2</sup>. For the Divine, which had filled all spaces without space, (then) penetrated also to the ultimates of nature.

257<sup>6</sup>. Through such a covering, which has been taken from the natural world, the spiritual bodies (of Spirits and Angels) subsist; for the Natural is the containing ultimate: hence it is that there is not any Spirit or Angel who has not been born a man.

259<sup>2</sup>. With these [persons] the Rational cannot be elevated; for the life . . . with them has not the termini in which it ceases so disposed that it can perform ultimate acts according to order; for it acts according to the ultimate determinations, but not from them.

278. The reason why the acts of the body, viewed by the eye, appear thus simple and uniform; as seeds, fruits, eggs, or as nuts and almonds in shells, appear in the external form; and yet contain in themselves all the prior things from which they are, is that every ultimate is covered round about, and is thereby distinct from the prior things. . . .

302. That the atmospheres, which are three in both worlds . . . in their ultimates cease into substances and matters such as are in earths. Gen.art.

303. That substances or matters such as those in earths have been produced by the sun through its atmospheres, is affirmed by everyone who thinks that there are perpetual mediations from the First to the ultimates. . . . Now as the atmospheres are those prior things through which that Sun presents itself in ultimates, and as those prior things continually decrease in activity and expansion down to the ultimates, it follows that when their activity and expansion cease in the ultimates, they become substances and matters such as are in earths; which, from the atmospheres, from which they originated, retain in themselves an effort and endeavour to produce uses.

304. From this universal origin of all things in the created universe, each thing therein derives the like, namely, that it progresses from its prime to ultimates, which are relatively in a state of rest, in order that it may cease and subsist. . . . As there is such a progression in man of the fibres and vessels from primes to ultimates, therefore there is a like progression of their states: their states are sensations, thoughts, and affections: these, also, from their primes, where they are in light, pass to ultimates, where they are in shade; or, from their primes, where they are in heat, to ultimates, where they are not in heat: and as there is such a progression of them, there is also such a progression of the love and of all things of it; and also of the wisdom, and of all things of it: in a word, there is such a progression of all things in the created universe. . . .

310. The very quality of being able to produce forms of uses (the substances and matters of which earths consist) derive from their origin, which is, that they are the ultimates of the atmospheres, with which they are therefore in agreement.

—<sup>2</sup>. This endeavour (in these substances and matters to cause seeds to germinate and grow) is afterwards continuous from the earths through the root even to ultimates, and from ultimates to primes, in which the use itself is in its origin. Thus do uses pass into forms; and the forms, from the use, which is like a soul, in the progression from primes to ultimates and from ultimates to primes, derive that each and all things of them are of some use.

—<sup>3</sup>. These things follow from this: 1. That there are ultimates, and in ultimates are all the prior things together in their order. 2. That there are degrees of both kinds in the greatest and the least of all things; in like manner in this endeavour. 3. That all uses are produced by the Lord from ultimates; and therefore in ultimates there must be an endeavour towards them.

311. But still all these endeavours are not alive; for they are endeavours of the ultimate forces of life... The atmospheres in the ultimates become such forces, by which the substances and matters such as are in earths, are actuated into forms, and are held together in forms both within and without.

314. In the forms of uses of the vegetable kingdom the image of creation appears in this,—that from their primes they proceed to their ultimates, and from the ultimates to the primes. Their primes are seeds; their ultimates are stems clothed with bark; and, through the bark, which is the ultimate of the stems, they tend to seeds, which... are their primes. The stems clothed with barks relate to the Earth clothed with earths; from which comes forth the creation and formation of all uses... The image of creation in the forms of uses is exhibited in the progression of their formation from primes to ultimates, and from ultimates to primes... (Thus) it is evident that the progression of the creation of the universe has been from its Prime, which is the Lord encompassed with the Sun, to ultimates, which are earths; and from these through uses to its Prime...

316. In the forms of uses of the animal kingdom there is a like image of creation, in that from seed... there is formed a body, which is its ultimate; and that when this grows up, it produces new seeds... From this parallelism it is evident, that as there is a likeness of creation in the forms of plants, so also there is in the forms of animals, in that there is a progression from primes to ultimates, and from ultimates to primes.

—<sup>2</sup>. A like image of creation comes forth in each thing which is in man; for there is a like progression of love through wisdom into uses; thence a like one of the will through the understanding into acts; and a like one of charity through faith into works. The will and the understanding, and also charity and faith, are the primes from which; the acts and works are the ultimates; and from these through the delights of uses a return is made to their primes...

—<sup>3</sup>. A like progression from primes to ultimates, and from ultimates to primes, is exhibited in the forms most purely organic of the affections and thoughts with man: in his brains there are those star-like forms called the ciceritious substances; from these go forth fibres through the medullary substance by the neck into the body, which pass on to ultimates there, and from the ultimates return to their primes: the return of the fibres to their primes is made through the blood-vessels.

—<sup>4</sup>. There is a like progression (from primes to ultimates) of all the affections and thoughts, which are changes and variations of the state of these forms and substances; for the fibres which go forth from these forms or substances are comparatively like the atmospheres from the spiritual Sun, which are the containments of heat and light; and the acts from the body are like the things which are produced from earths through the atmospheres...

345. That the spiritual ultimate separated from its Higher operates (these evil uses). Gen.art.

— If a man becomes only natural, he loves those things only which are of the body and the world... from (which) it is evident that the spiritual ultimate, which is called the Spiritual Natural, can be separated from its higher things; and that it is separated with the men from whom is Hell. The spiritual ultimate cannot be of itself separated from its higher things, either with beasts, or in earths, and look towards Hell; but only with men. From these things it follows that the spiritual ultimate, separated from its Higher, such as it is with those who are in Hell, operates these evil uses upon the Earth. III.

346<sup>2</sup>. All animals, greater and less, derive their origin from the Spiritual in the ultimate degree... man alone from all the degrees...

P. 119<sup>2</sup>. The reason is that the Lord acts into the inmost of man, and from the inmost into the consequents even to the ultimates; and in the ultimates is the man simultaneously. So long, therefore, as the ultimates are kept closed by the man himself, there cannot be any purification effected, but only such an operation into the interior things by the Lord as is that of the Lord into Hell...

124<sup>4</sup>. That the Lord acts from inmosts and from ultimates simultaneously. (This) is because thus and no otherwise each and all things are held together in connection; for the intermediates depend successively from inmosts down to ultimates; and in ultimates they are simultaneously together... From this it also is that the Lord... came into the world, and there put on... a Human in ultimates, in order that He could be from primes and at the same time in ultimates; and thus from primes through ultimates rule the universal world...

125. These angelic arcana have been premised in order that it may be comprehended how the Divine Providence... operates, in order to conjoin man with Himself and Himself with man. This cannot be effected in any particular of him singly, but in all things of him simultaneously; and this is effected from the inmost of man and from his ultimates simultaneously: the inmost of man is his life's love; the ultimates are those things which are in the externals of his thought; and the intermediates are those things which are in the internal of his thought... From which it is again evident that the Lord cannot act from inmosts and ultimates simultaneously, except together with the man; for man together with the Lord is in ultimates; and therefore as man acts in the ultimates which are at his determination, because in his freedom, so the Lord acts from his inmosts, and in the successives towards the ultimates. Those things which are in the inmosts of man, and in the successives towards the ultimates, are entirely unknown to the man; and therefore the man does not at all know how and what the Lord is operating there; but, as those things cohere as a one with the ultimates, it is not necessary for man to know more than that he must shun evils as sins, and look to the Lord. Thus, and no otherwise, can his life's love, which from birth is infernal, be removed by the Lord, and a heavenly life's love be implanted in its place.

220°. The natural and temporary things (which man puts off at death) are the outermosts and ultimates into which man first enters, which is done when he is born, to the end that he may afterwards be introduced into interior and higher things; for outermosts and ultimates are containants; and these are in the natural world. Hence it is that no Angel or Spirit has been created immediately, but that all have been first born men, and thus introduced; and hence they have outermosts and ultimates, which are in themselves fixed and stated; and within which and from which the interior things can be held together in connection.

—<sup>3</sup>. Besides, all the interior or higher things are in the outermosts or ultimates simultaneously . . . and therefore all the operation of the Lord is from primes and ultimates simultaneously, thus in fulness. But as the outermosts and ultimates of nature cannot receive spiritual and eternal things . . . therefore man puts them off, and retains only the interior natural things which agree with spiritual and celestial things, and serve them as containants. This is effected by the rejection of the temporary and natural ultimates, which is the death of the body.

276. When the love of the neighbour had been turned into the love of self, man could no longer be born into the light of knowledge and intelligence, but into the thick darkness of ignorance, because into the very ultimate of life, which is called the Corporeal Sensuous; and could be introduced from this by instructions into the interiors of the natural mind, the Spiritual always accompanying. The reason he is born into the ultimate of life, which is called the Corporeal Sensuous, and therefore into the thick darkness of ignorance, will be seen in what follows.

277a°. All reformation is effected in what is full, that is, in primes and ultimates simultaneously; and the ultimates are reformed in the world so as to agree with the primes, and they cannot be reformed afterwards, because the ultimates of life which man bears with him after death, become quiescent, and conspire with his interiors, that is, act as one with them.

—'. 'A stone,' in the Word, = truth in ultimates.

—<sup>2</sup>. For all the precious stones in Heaven derive their origin from the ultimates of the Word; and their transference from the spiritual sense of the ultimates therein. The ultimates of the Word are the truths and goods of the sense of its letter.

672. That 'the four animals,' which are cherubs, = the Word in ultimates . . .

—'. And besides the Lord always operates from inmosts through ultimates, or in what is full. Sig.

678°. From which things it is evident that the ultimate is the complex of all the prior things; whence it follows that all the concupiscences of evil are in simultaneous order within the evil itself which a man perceives in himself; all the evil which a man perceives in himself is in ultimates; and therefore when a man rejects evil from himself, he at the same time rejects its concupiscences; but still not from himself, but from the Lord. A man can indeed reject evil from himself, but not its concupiscences; and therefore when he wants to reject evil, by fighting against it, he must look to the Lord; for the Lord operates from inmosts to ultimates; for He enters through the man's soul, and purifies.

798°. The Divine operation of the Lord to save men is from primes through ultimates; and it is this which is meant by 'Whatever he shall bind or loose on earth, shall be bound or loosed in Heaven:' the ultimates through which the Lord operates are on earth, and in fact with men: on this account, in order that the Lord Himself might be in ultimates as He is in primes, He came into the world, and put on the Human. That all the Lord's Divine operation is from primes through ultimates; thus from Himself into primes, and from Himself into ultimates. Refs.

M. 44°. As they perceived that the novitiates wanted to know whether in Heaven there are the like ultimate deliciousnesses, they said that they are exactly like, but much more blessed, because angelic perception and sensation are much more exquisite than human . . . It is a universal law that primes come forth, subsist, and persist from ultimates: so also is it with this love; and therefore unless there were ultimate deliciousnesses, there would not be any deliciousnesses of conjugal love. (Continued under DELICIOUS.) See also 51, Gen.art.

69°. See DELICIOUS, here. 144. 293°.

256°. The Angels are continually in the delight of conjugal love, and in its ultimates according to the presence of their minds uninterrupted by cares; thus from the determinations of judgment with the husbands.

304°. Thus from the unchaste things in the will (the marriage of the spirit) lets itself headlong down into the body, and defiles the ultimates of its love with an alluring ardour; from which, as in the beginning it was on fire, so its fire suddenly goes out and passes away into the cold of winter; whence defect is accelerated.

305°. From these things it can be seen that conjugal love, from the first beginnings of its heat, must be elevated out of the lowest region of the mind into the higher region, in order that it may become chaste; and that thus from what is chaste it is let down through the middle and the lowest region into the body; and that when this is done, by the descending chasteness this lowest region is purified from its unchaste things; and hence the ultimate of that love also becomes chaste.

311°. That all order proceeds from primes to ultimates; and that the ultimates become the primes of some following order; moreover, that all things of the middle order are the ultimates of the prior, and the primes of the following order; and that thus ends continually proceed through causes into effects, may be sufficiently confirmed and illustrated before the reason from things Known and visible in the world.

313. That the ultimate state is such as is the successive order from which it is formed and comes forth, is a canon . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That all those things which precede in minds form series, and that the series are collected together, one beside another, and one after another, and that these simultaneously compose the ultimate, is as yet unknown in the world; but as it is a Truth from Heaven, it is here adduced; for by means of it there is laid open what influx operates, and the nature of the ultimate, in which the above-mentioned series, successively formed, coexist.

355<sup>4</sup>. As the ultimate operation of the soul in the body with two consorts is into the ultimates of love there, and these depend upon the state of the soul, it is evident whence they have this perpetual (faculty).

389. In relation to spiritual things there is no predication of what is extended . . . hence it is that whatever proceeds from the Lord is in an instant from primes in ultimates.

441<sup>5</sup>. After the delights of scortatory love have been removed . . . the spirit enters chaste into the body, and infils their bosoms with the deliciousnesses of its bliss, and from the bosoms infils also the ultimates of that love in the body; hence the spirit afterwards acts in full communion with these, and these do so with the spirit.

Ad. 3/4445. In Heaven all the Angels ardently await the Last Day; for they think of nothing else.

D. 2712. From this it is evident that the last times are at hand. 280r. 3412. (3523, Des. They are when the equilibrium is perishing.)

2751. I have spoken with Spirits about the corporeal or material things of man, that they are the ultimates of order; that order extends itself from inmosts to ultimates; and that the ultimates are in man's natural mind, which is formed from the senses of the body, whence comes the memory of objects, which are material ideas; thus that order is not complete except in ultimates, which are the outermost vessels of all the interior things in succession which are insinuated by the Lord.

2917. To the ultimate of order, which is the body.

3022. With man is the ultimate of order . . .

4605. The direction of the Lord is in primes and in ultimates; thence the mediates flow in their order. That ultimates are directed equally with primes, may be evident from . . . what has been said about fortune.

4839<sup>6</sup>. When they were told that the last-postremi-should be first, they concluded that they would sit in the last place while they were exercising command.

4847. Through the Divine Human of the Lord order has been restored down to the ultimate of life, which is the Sensuous; for the Divine successive order had perished in the ultimates, thus the Divine in the ultimate . . .

5151. For the inhabitants of this Earth are in ultimates . . .

5508. For all the interiors of man cease in their ultimates in the body, and this progressively from head to sole; nay, each degree of succession of each cupidity has its own ultimate determined in the body . . .

5552. Man, or the human race, is the ultimate, and is that in which Heaven ceases; because man has Heaven in himself, and corresponds to it: his Sensuous which is exhibited in the world is the ultimate itself, and therefore it is also the foundation upon which Heaven rests, as a house does upon its foundation; for there is a connection of all things from primes to ultimates; and the Sensuous of man is relatively fixed . . . Hence it is evident that while man lives in the world he acquires for himself a fixed plane, and that this therefore cannot be changed; whence it is that a man remains to eternity such as he has become in the world. He has this plane with him, but it is completely quiescent; but still his interiors cease in it . . .

5553. In order, therefore, that the Divine might rule all things . . . through primes and ultimates simultaneously, the Lord came into the world . . . and rose again with the Human even to the ultimates . . . for thus He could subjugate the Hells, and thus he could afterwards rule the Heavens and the earth, and no otherwise; for man had then completely receded in ultimates from the Heavens, so that the foundation then began to perish.

5615. It has been observed . . . that as the ultimates are directed by the Lord from the prior things, so also, conversely, are the prior things directed from the ultimates; and the Lord is the First and the Last, or in the prime and in the ultimate, in order that all things of Heaven might be thus directed; and therefore He became a Man, in order that He might be in ultimates also from Himself, and not from other men: hence He directs all things from the First and the Last, ultimates by means of prior things in Heaven, and prior things through Heaven from ultimates: hence the connection.

5616<sup>7</sup>. Natural Truths are in the place of a foundation: hence the thought is full of such ideas; and when a man is reading the Word he is in them. The plane and ultimate is with an intelligent man, whether he is thinking about such things, whether he is thinking about other things, or whether he is asleep; for still it is with him . . . A number of men can together serve as a plane for one Angel. The Lord so disposes that what is absent in one may be in another . . .

[D.] 5814<sup>e</sup>. They can serve as ultimates in the Lord's Kingdom, which correspond to the shoes of the feet . . .

66. For hairs are ultimates; for they grow from the ultimates with man; and in them the primes cease.

—<sup>3</sup>. His Divine in ultimates was His Human, which He made Divine even to the flesh and bones, which are the ultimates.

—<sup>6</sup>. Since he who is deprived of ultimates, is also deprived of the prior things.

69. 'His feet like fine brass . . . '=the ultimate of Divine order which is the Natural, full of Divine love.

—. For the Divine is in its fulness when in its ultimate . . .

81. 'I am the First and the Last' (Rev. i. 18) = who rules all things from primes through ultimates, and thus all things of Heaven. 113.

175<sup>2</sup>. The sense of the letter . . . serves as a basis . . . For all things which are in nature are ultimates of Divine order; and the Divine does not subsist in the middle, but flows down even to its ultimates, and thus subsists: hence it is that the Word is such in the letter . . .

278. The appearance in ultimates as to power and effect of Divine truth . . . Sig.

—. It is said in ultimates, because this appearance was before John when he was in the spirit, and he saw all things in ultimates. Ex.

328<sup>4</sup>. For the Divine operates from primes through ultimates; thus from Himself through those things which are from Himself in ultimates, which are in His Human.

395<sup>4</sup>. That by the mantle of Elijah the waters of Jordan were divided . . . signified the power of Divine truth in ultimates; for the waters of Jordan signified the first truths by which entrance is made into the Church, and these first truths are those which are in the ultimates of the Word.

405<sup>24</sup>. For whatever the Lord did in the world was representative, and whatever He spoke was significative: the reason He was in representatives and significatives . . . was that He might be in the ultimates of Heaven and of the Church, and at the same time in their primes; and might thus rule and dispose ultimates from primes; and all the intermediates from primes through ultimates: representatives and significatives are in ultimates.

417<sup>8</sup>. In the ultimates (of the abodes of Spirits and Angels) are those who are not in any wisdom and intelligence.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'Moah' = those who are in the ultimates of the Word, of the Church, and of worship; and, in the opposite sense, those who adulterate them by turning them to themselves . . .

422<sup>15</sup>. For before the Lord's Advent, the Divine proceeded from His Divine which is called 'the Father,' but this did not reach to ultimates after the Church had been devastated.

440<sup>6</sup>. The reason Divine power is through truth from good in the Natural, is that the Natural is the ultimate, into which the interior things, which are things spiritual and celestial, inflow, and where they are simultaneously and subsist: they are therefore in fulness there, in which and from which is all Divine operation. Hence it is that Divine power is in the sense of the letter of the Word, because it is natural. . . From these things it may be evident whence it is that Ephraim is called 'the strength of the head of Jehovah.'

449<sup>2</sup>. Benjamin was born the last, because the Natural consisting of truth conjoined with good is the ultimate of the Church with man: for there are with man three degrees of life . . . and the ultimate degree is that in which are those who are in the Ultimate or First Heaven . . .

475<sup>17</sup>. All the Lord's miracles . . . were Divine; and the Divine always operates in ultimates from primes, and thus in what is full: ultimates are such things as appear in the world before the eyes . . .

—<sup>21</sup>. For Heaven is conjoined with man when man is in ultimates, that is, in such things as are in the world as to his natural man, and in such things as are in Heaven as to his spiritual man . . .

513<sup>19</sup>. That the Lord glorified His Human even to its ultimate, which is called the Natural and Sensuous . . . By 'the hands and feet' are signified the ultimates of man; in like manner by 'flesh and bones.' 581<sup>12</sup>.

543<sup>2</sup>. By the ultimate Sensuous of man is not meant the Sensuous of sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch; for these are proper to the body; but the ultimate of thought and affection, which is first opened with infants; and which is such that they do not think anything, and are not affected with any objects than those which make one with the above-named senses; for infants learn to think through the senses, and to be affected with objects according to those things which have pleased the senses; and therefore the first Internal which is opened with them is the Sensuous which is called the ultimate Sensuous of man, and also the corporeal Sensuous. (Continued under SENSUOUS.)

559<sup>8</sup>. The reason sensuous scientifics . . . are so highly persuasive, is that they are the ultimates of the understanding; for the understanding ceases in them as in its ultimates . . .

581<sup>12</sup>. The ultimate Sensuous, which the Lord glorified . . . is signified by that 'brazen serpent . . .'

611. The last state of the Church, and the revelation of Divine truth then. Sig.

630<sup>5</sup>. To eat in that court the sanctified things . . . (signified that) all the appropriation of holy things is effected through ultimates . . .

654<sup>19</sup>. For the representatives were the ultimates of Heaven and the Church; and all the prior things, which are rational, spiritual, and celestial, enter into the ultimates and are in them; and therefore the Lord through those representatives was in ultimates; and as in ultimates there is all strength, therefore from primes through ultimates He subjugated all the Hells, and reduced into order all things in the Heavens: hence it was that the whole life of the Lord in the world was representative . . .

666<sup>4</sup>. For the ultimate of the life of man is in his Natural: this ultimate is as a basis to his interior and higher things; for these cease in the ultimate, and there subsist; and therefore unless there is life in the ultimate, the life is not full, thus neither is it perfect: and moreover the interior or higher things all coexist in the ultimate, as in their Simultaneous; hence such as is the ultimate, such are the interior or higher things; for these accommodate themselves to the ultimate, because it receives them.

684<sup>26</sup>. The Lord is called 'Jehovah' from the Divine in primes; and 'the Mighty One of Jacob' from the Divine in ultimates, in which Divine power is in its fullness.

717. Divine truths in the ultimate of order, which are the truths of the sense of the letter of the Word . . . adulterated and profaned. Sig. and Ex.

726<sup>5</sup>. That all power is simultaneously in ultimates; and that thence the Lord has infinite power from primes through ultimates. Ex. It shall first be told what is meant by ultimates. Primes are the things which are in the Lord, and which proximately proceed from Him; ultimates are those which are most remote from Him, which are in nature, and are the ultimates there. These are called ultimates, because spiritual things, which are prior, cease in them, and subsist and rest upon them as upon their bases; and therefore they are immovable. These are hence called the ultimates of Divine order. The reason why in ultimates there is all power, is that the prior things are simultaneously in them; for they coexist there in an order which is called simultaneous order; for there is a connection of all things from the Lord Himself through those things which are of Heaven and which are of the world down to these ultimates; and as in ultimates the prior things which successively proceed are simultaneously together, it follows that in ultimates from primes there is power itself: but the Divine power is power through the Divine proceeding, which is called Divine truth.

—<sup>6</sup>. It is from this that the human race is as it were the base of a column, or as it were the foundation to a palace, for the Heavens; consequently that the Heavens in order subsist upon those things which are of the Church with men in the world, thus upon Divine truths in ultimates, which are Divine truths such as are of the Word in the sense of its letter. The nature of the strength in these cannot be described in a few words. Into these ultimates with man the Lord inflows from Himself, thus from primes, and rules, and holds together in order and in connection all things which are in the Spiritual World.

—<sup>7</sup>. As, then, Divine power itself resides in these ultimates, the Lord Himself came into the world, and became a Man, in order that He might be at the same time in ultimates as He is in primes, to the end that through ultimates from primes He might be able to reduce all things into order, which had become disordered; namely, all things in the Hells, and also in the Heavens. This was the reason of the Lord's Advent; for just before the Lord's Advent there was not any Divine truth in ultimates with men in the world . . . and hence there was not any basis for the Heavens; and therefore unless the Lord had come into the world, and had thus assumed an ultimate, the Heavens which were from the inhabitants of this Earth would have been translated elsewhere, and all the human race on this Earth would have perished in eternal death. But now the Lord is in His fullness, and thus in His omnipotence, on earth as in the Heavens, because He is in ultimates and in primes. Thus the Lord can save all who are in truths Divine from the Word, and in a life according to them; for with these He can be present and dwell in the ultimate truths from the Word, because the ultimate truths also are His, and are Himself because from Him, according to His words in John: 'He who hath My precepts, and doeth them, he it is who loveth Me, and My Father loveth him, and We will come to him, and will make abode with him' (xiv.21,23).

—<sup>8</sup>. The natural man is the receptacle of ultimates.

806<sup>3</sup>. These things could not have been presented in effect unless the Lord had assumed the Human: the reason is that the Lord performs such effects (as the Last Judgment, etc.) from primes through ultimates; for to act from primes through ultimates is to act from what is full: the very strength of the Divine power consists in ultimates; thus that of the Lord in His Human, because this is in the ultimate. This was one reason why the Lord came into the world. The other reason was that He might glorify His Human . . . for thus and no otherwise can the Hells be kept subjugated to eternity; for thus He acts to eternity from primes through ultimates, and in fullness; for thus His Divine operation reaches down to the ultimates in the world; whereas otherwise it would reach only to the primes in Heaven, and mediately through them and through the sequents, to ultimates, which are men; and therefore if these latter were to recede, as took place just before the Lord's Advent, the Divine operation with men would cease, and thus there would not be for them any means of salvation: the Divine operation of the Lord through the Human assumed in the world, is called His immediate influx down to ultimates.

822<sup>4</sup>. See WORK, here. 839.

928. 'The seven last plagues' (Rev.xv.1)=evils and falsities manifested in the whole complex, which have completely devastated the Church as to all its goods and truths. . . 'Last'—as to all the goods and truths; for then is the last and what is consummated.

[E.] 1086<sup>5</sup>. Now as all the higher things store themselves in the lowest ones in simultaneous order, it follows that in the ultimates of the Word, which are of the sense of its letter, are all things of Divine truth and of Divine good even from their primes; and as all things of Divine truth and of Divine good are simultaneously in their ultimate, which is the sense of the letter of the Word, it is evident that there is the power of Divine truth, nay, the omnipotence of the Lord, in saving man; for when the Lord operates, He does not operate from primes through mediates into ultimates; but from primes through ultimates, and thus into mediates: hence it is that in the Word the Lord is called 'the First and the Last:' and hence it is that the Lord assumed the Human, which in the world was Divine truth, or the Word; and that He glorified it even to ultimates, which are the bones and the flesh, to the end that He should be able to operate from primes through ultimates from Himself; and not, as before, from man. This power in ultimates was represented by the hair with the Nazarites, as with Samson; for the hair corresponds to the ultimates of Divine truth.

1087<sup>2</sup>. As in the ultimate sense of the Word, which is called the sense of the letter, are all the interior things simultaneously . . . which are in the Words of the three Heavens . . . it may be evident from this that Divine truth in the sense of the letter of our Word is in its fulness. It is said in its fulness, because it contains in itself all the prior things even from the prime . . . the ultimate is what includes them . . . As the Word in ultimates is such, it follows that it is not the Word until it is in its ultimate, thus until it is in the sense of the letter: if it were not in this, the Word would be like a temple in the air, and not upon the earth; or like a man in flesh, and not at the same time in bones.

—<sup>3</sup>. As Divine truth in its ultimate is in its fulness, and also in its power—for when it is in it, it is simultaneously in all things—therefore the Lord never operates except from primes through ultimates, consequently in what is full; for He does not reform and regenerate man except by means of truths in ultimates, which are natural: it is from this that such as a man is in the world, such he remains to eternity . . . it is also from this that Heaven and Hell are from the human race, and that Angels have not been created immediately; for man in the world is in his fulness; and therefore he can be conceived and born there, and afterwards be imbued with knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom, and become an Angel.

—<sup>4</sup>. As the Lord operates all things from primes through ultimates, and in ultimates He is in His power and in His fulness, it therefore pleased the Lord to take on the Human, and become Divine truth, that is, the Word; and thus from Himself to reduce into order all things of Heaven and all things of Hell, that is, perform the Last Judgment: this the Lord could achieve from the Divine in Himself, which was in primes, through His Human, which was in ultimates; and not, as formerly, from His presence or abode in the men of the Church; for these latter had completely removed themselves from the truths and goods of the Word, in which before there had been the habitation of the Lord with men. This was the primary reason for the Advent of the Lord into the world . . . Ath. 112. 129. 181.

1088<sup>2</sup>. Divine truth is that which is called the Holy; but it is not holy until it is in its ultimate: its ultimate is the Word in the sense of the letter . . . The reason is that this sense contains and includes all the holy things of Heaven and the Church . . .

1112<sup>3</sup>. The Divine Human (before He assumed the Human in the world) was not Divine down to ultimates: the ultimates are what are called 'the flesh and bones;' for these also were made Divine by the Lord when He was in the world. —<sup>4</sup>.

1207<sup>4</sup>. That nature has been created in order that the Spiritual may be terminated in it, follows from what has been said: that those things which are in the Spiritual World, are causes; and that those things which are in the natural world, are effects; and effects are termini. Universally there must be an ultimate where there is a prime; and as in the ultimate there coexist all the intermediates from the prime, the work of creation is perfect in ultimates. For the sake of this end the sun of the world has been created; and through the sun, nature; and at last—ultimo—the terraqueous globe, in order that there may be ultimate matters there, in which everything spiritual may cease, and in which creation may subsist . . . and for the end that all things may return thence to the Prime from which they are, which is effected through man.

—<sup>5</sup>. That intermediates coexist in ultimates, is evident from the axiom, that there is nothing in the effect which is not in the cause: and thus from the continuity of causes and effects from the prime down to the ultimate.

1210<sup>6</sup>. But as there is nothing which has not its ultimate, where it ceases and subsists, so also the Spiritual; this ultimate of it is in the Earth, in its lands and waters; and from this ultimate the Spiritual produces plants of all kinds . . .

1212<sup>3</sup>. For the Spiritual a quo, in mediates is alive; but in ultimates is not alive: in ultimates the Spiritual retains no more of what is alive than suffices to produce a likeness of what is alive: almost as in the human body, in the ultimates of which—which are produced from the Spiritual—there are cartilages, bones, teeth, and nails; in which what is alive, which is from the soul, is terminated.

1219<sup>5</sup>. The idea of state (which the Angels have), and the derivative idea of the appearance of space and time, is not given except in the ultimates of creation there, and from them. The ultimates of creation there are the earths upon which the Angels dwell: there appear spaces and times; and not in the spiritual things themselves from which the ultimates have been created; and not even in the affections themselves of the Angels, unless the thought from them reaches through to ultimates.

Ath. 49. Because all Divine operation reaches through the whole of order, from primes to ultimates, and there operates; for in ultimates all things are together: on which account it has been shown that in ultimates there is strength, not from themselves, but from those things which are in the ultimates from the primes. Hence it is that there is strength in the sense of the letter of the Word. It is from this reason that the Lord has so often said that the Father in Him is He who does the works; and also, elsewhere, that He Himself does the works.

—<sup>e</sup>. The ultimate (at the time of the Flood) was the Divine in the remnant of the human race . . .

10<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the ultimate of the Word corresponds to the ultimates of man: the ultimate of the Word is the sense of the letter, and the ultimate of man is the hair of the head and of the beard.

D. Love iv. For the Divine which proceeds from the Lord is Divine from primes down to ultimates; the ultimates are those things which are also called bony, which are the flesh and bone: that these also were made Divine by the Lord, He taught His disciples,—(that He has flesh and bone, which a Spirit has not (Luke xxiv. 39); and still He entered through closed doors; and became invisible; which manifestly testifies that also the ultimates of men in Him had been made Divine; and that thence there is a correspondence with the ultimates of man.

xix<sup>e</sup>. Thus the will of man is living endeavour in man, and acts in ultimates by the media of the fibres and nerves . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. For there cannot be any endeavour with man, or will, unless it is also in ultimates; and as it is in ultimates, it is in interior act; but this act is not perceived by anyone . . . because it comes forth in his spirit.

D. Wis. viii<sup>3</sup>. The reason (an angelic) mind cannot be formed except in man, is that all Divine influx is from primes into ultimates; and, through the connection with ultimates, into mediates; and thus does the Lord connect all things of creation, wherefore also He is called 'the First and the Last.' This also was the reason why He came into the world, and put on a human body, and also glorified Himself therein, in order that from primes and at the same time from ultimates He might rule the universal Heaven and the universal world. It is the same with every Divine operation: and that it is so is from the fact, that all things coexist in ultimates; for all things which are in successive order are there in simultaneous order; and therefore all things which are in the latter order are in continual connection with all things which are in the former order; from which it is evident that the Divine in the ultimate is in its fullness . . . Hence it is evident that all creation has been effected in ultimates; and that all Divine operation passes through to ultimates, and there creates and operates.

— That an angelic mind is formed in man, is evident from . . . [the fact] that it is from a law of Divine order, that all things should return from ultimates to the prime from which they are . . . —<sup>5</sup>, Ex.

xii. That by His Divine love and by His Divine wisdom the Lord animates all things in Heaven and all things in the world down to their ultimates; some that they may live, and some that they may be and come forth. Gen. art.

2<sup>2</sup>. The Sun of the Spiritual World regards ultimates from primes; and the sun of the natural world regards ultimates from the mediate.

5<sup>3</sup>. A natural origin has been added in order that they may be at the same time material and fixed, for the sake of the end of the procreation of the human race, which is not possible except in ultimates, where there is what is full.

— The Sun of Heaven, in which is the Lord, is the common centre of the universe; and all things of it are circumferences and circumferences even to the ultimate one; and He rules these circumferences from Himself alone as one continuous thing; but the middle ones from the ultimate ones . . .

Can. God vii. 3. These progressions of ends go from primes to ultimates; and return from ultimates to primes; and they go and return by periods, which are called the circles of things.

9. Thus there is a linked connection of all things in the universe, from primes to ultimates, and from ultimates to primes.

Redemp. viii. 10. All the operation of God takes place from primes through ultimates, thus from His Divine through His Human. Hence it is that God is the First and the Last.

11. That in the ultimates of God all Divine things are simultaneously together; thus in our Lord Jesus Christ are all things of His Father.

See under JUDGE.

A. 900. 'Three' and 'seven' are most sacred, because they are both predicated of the Last Judgment, which will come on the third or the seventh day. It is the Last Judgment with everyone when the Lord comes, both in general and in particular; namely, there was a Last Judgment when the Lord came into the world; there will be a Last Judgment when He will come in glory; there is a Last Judgment when He comes to every man whatever in particular; and there is a Last Judgment for everyone when he dies. This Last Judgment ment is the third and the seventh day, which is holy to those who have lived well, but not holy to those who have lived evilly . . .

[A.] 931<sup>2</sup>. As to those who believe that the end of the earth will be the same as the Last Judgment treated of in the Word . . . in this they are mistaken. For there is a Last Judgment of every Church when it has been devastated, or when there is no longer any faith in it. The Last Judgment of the Most Ancient Church was when it perished, as in its last posterity immediately before the Flood. It was the Last Judgment of the Jewish Church when the Lord came into the world. There will also be a Last Judgment when the Lord will come in glory; not that the earth and the world will then perish, but that the Church perishes. But then a New Church is always resuscitated by the Lord . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Moreover there is a Last Judgment with every man when he dies; for then, according to the things which he has done in the body, he is judged either to death or to life. That nothing else is meant by 'the consummation of the age,' 'the end of days,' or 'the Last Judgment,' and consequently not the destruction of the world, is clearly evident from the Lord's words in Luke: 'In that night there shall be two in one bed, the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field, the one shall be taken, and the other left' (xvii. 34-36); where the last time is called 'night,' because there is no faith, that is, charity; and it is said that they 'shall be left,' by which is clearly indicated that the world will not then perish.

1850. According to the internal sense, by the 'Last Judgment' is meant the last time of the Church; by 'the heaven and earth which will perish' is meant the Church as to internal and external worship, which becomes no Church when there is no charity.

—<sup>2</sup>. It was the Last Judgment of the Most Ancient Church when all charity and faith ceased, which took place immediately before the Flood: the Flood itself . . . was the Last Judgment of that Church; then perished heaven and earth, that is, the Church; and a new heaven and a new earth were created, that is, a new Church, which was called the Ancient Church. This Church also had its last time, namely, when all charity became cold, and all faith was darkened, which was about the time of Eber. This time was the Last Judgment of that Church, which was the heaven and earth which perished.

—<sup>3</sup>. The new heaven and the new earth was the Hebrew Church. This also had its last time, or Last Judgment, when it became idolatrous; and therefore a new Church was raised up, and this with the descendants of Jacob, which was called the Jewish Church, which was no other Church than a Church representative of charity and faith . . . Of this so-called Church it was the last time, or Last Judgment, when the Lord came into the world; for then the representatives ceased; namely, the sacrifices and like rites, in order to the cessation of which they were cast out of the Land of Canaan.

—<sup>4</sup>. After this, a new heaven and a new earth were created, namely, a new Church, which is to be called the Primitive Church . . . and which at first was in charity and faith. Concerning the destruction of this Church, prediction is made by the Lord in the Evangelists, and by John in the Revelation, which destruction is what is called 'the Last Judgment;' not that now heaven and earth will perish, but that a New Church will be raised up in a certain region—terrarum orbe, this one remaining in its external worship, as the Jews do in theirs, in whose worship it is sufficiently known that there is nothing of charity and faith, that is, nothing of the Church.

—<sup>5</sup>. These things in general concerning the Last Judgment. In particular, it is the Last Judgment of everyone immediately when he dies; for he then passes into the other life, in which, when he comes into the life which he had in the body, he is judged either to death or to life. There is also a Last Judgment in singular. With the man who is being judged to death, each and all things condemn him; for there is nothing, however minute, in his thought and will, which is not like his Last Judgment, and which does not draw him to death. With the man who is being judged to life, in like manner, each and all things of thought and will with him have an image of his Last Judgment, and bear him to life . . . These are the things which are signified by 'the Last Judgment.'

2117. On the Last Judgment. Gen. art.

— . What the Last Judgment is, few at this day know; they suppose that it will come with the destruction of the world . . . and that then for the first time the dead will rise again, and will be presented before the Judgment; and then the evil will be cast into Hell, and the good will ascend into Heaven. These conjectures are from the propheticals of the Word, where mention is made of a new heaven and a new earth, and also of the New Jerusalem . . .

2118. By 'the Last Judgment' is meant the last time of the Church; and also the last of everyone's life. As concerns the last time of the Church, it was the Last Judgment of the Most Ancient Church . . . when their posterity perished, the destruction of whom is described by the Flood. It was the Last Judgment of the Ancient Church . . . when almost all who were of that Church became idolaters, and were dispersed. It was the Last Judgment of the Representative Church . . . when the ten tribes were carried away into captivity and were dispersed among the nations; and then the Jews, after the Lord's Advent, were driven out of the Land of Canaan, and were dispersed into the universal world. It is the Last Judgment of this Church, which is called Christian, which is meant in . . . the Revelation by 'the new heaven and the new earth.' 4333.

Spirits, but successively separates himself from them, and this until he comes to Spirits of like life to that which he had in the world. It then appears to him as if he were in the life of his body; in itself also it is a continuation of the life. From this life his Judgment begins. They who have led an evil life, in process of time descend into Hell; they who have led a good life, are by degrees elevated by the Lord into Heaven. Such is the Last Judgment of each one. 4527<sup>2</sup>. 4663. 4807.

2120. The things the Lord spoke concerning the last times . . . = the state of the Church, and its quality at the time of its Last Judgment. Ex.

2121. That the Last Judgment is at hand, cannot be so evident on earth and within the Church, as it is in the other life . . . The World of Spirits is at this day full of evil Genii and evil Spirits . . . and so also is the interior sphere of that World, where those are who have been interiorly evil, as to the intentions and ends. This in like manner is at this day so filled up, that I have marvelled that there could ever be so great a multitude; for they are not all cast down into the Hells in a moment, because it is according to the laws of order that every such person should return into his own life which he had in the body, and thence by degrees be carried down into Hell . . . Hence those Worlds of Spirits are filled up with . . . such . . . and by these the Souls who come from the world are frightfully infested; and besides, the Spirits who are with man . . . are excited more than before to inject malignant things into man, so much so that the Angels . . . can scarcely avert them, but are compelled to inflow into man more remotely. From this it may be manifestly evident in the other life that the last time is at hand. 2122. 2123. 2126.

2127. In the other life there sometimes appears a kind of Last Judgment before the evil, when their Societies are being dissociated; and before the good, when they are being intrmitted into Heaven. 2128, Des. 2129, Des. 2130, Des.

2441. 'The sun went forth upon the earth' (Gen. xix. 23) = the last time, which is called the Last Judgment. Ex.

3353. Hence it is evident that the Last Judgment is nothing else than the end of the Church with one nation, and its beginning with another; which end and which beginning come forth when there is no longer any acknowledgment of the Lord, or, what is the same, when there is no faith. There is no acknowledgment or no faith when there is no charity . . . That then is the end of the Church, and its translation to others, is perfectly evident from all those things which the Lord Himself has taught and predicted in the Evangelists concerning that last day, or concerning the consummation of the age. Ill. and Ex.

As 'morning' = the state of the enlightenment and salvation of the good, and the state of thick darkness and destruction of the evil, therefore also 'morning' = the time of the Last Judgment, when those who are in good are to be saved, and those who are in evil will perish; consequently it = the end of a former Church, and the beginning of a new Church, which are signified in the Word by 'the Last Judgment.' J. Title. On the Last Judgment, and on Babylon Destroyed: thus that all things which have been foretold in the Apocalypse, are at this day fulfilled. From things heard and seen.

1. That the destruction of the world is not meant by the day of the Last Judgment. Gen.art.

— They who have not known the spiritual sense of the Word, have understood nothing else than that at the day of the Last Judgment all things which appear in the world before the eyes will be destroyed; for it is said that the heaven with the earth will then perish, and that God will create a new heaven and a new earth . . . But it is so said in the sense of the letter of the Word, because the sense of the letter of the Word is natural, and is in the ultimate of Divine order, where each and all things contain a spiritual sense in them . . . But let them now know that the heaven which is visible before the eyes will not perish, nor the habitable earth, but that both will remain; and that by 'a new heaven and a new earth' is meant a New Church, both in the Heavens and on earth . . .

6. They who have adopted (the above-mentioned) faith concerning the Last Judgment . . . believe . . . that the generations and procreations of the human race will afterwards cease . . . But as the destruction of the world is not meant by the day of the Last Judgment . . . it follows that the human race will remain, and that the procreations will not cease. Fully ex.

28. That the Last Judgment will be where all are together, thus in the Spiritual World, and not on earth. Gen.art.

— It is believed concerning the Last Judgment, that the Lord will then appear in the clouds of heaven with the Angels in glory, and that He will raise up all who have lived since the beginning of the creation . . .

and will clothe the souls with their bodies, and . . . will judge those who have acted well to . . . Heaven, and those who have acted evilly, to . . . Hell. This faith is in the Churches from the sense of the letter of the Word, and could not be taken away so long as it was unknown that there is a spiritual sense in each thing which is said in the Word . . .

[J. 28]². (Thus) by these words is meant that the Lord, when it is the end of the Church, will open the spiritual sense of the Word, and thus the Divine truth, such as it is in itself; and thus that this is the sign that the Last Judgment is at hand.

29. That the Last Judgment will come forth in the Spiritual World, and not in the natural world or on earth, is evident from the two articles which preceed, and also from those which follow . . . In the articles which follow, it will be shown that the Last Judgment has been already accomplished.

33. That the Last Judgment comes forth when it is the end of the Church; and that it is the end of the Church when there is no faith because there is no charity. Gen.art.

— . There are many reasons why the Last Judgment comes forth when it is the end of the Church. The primary one is that then there begins to perish the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell, and together with the equilibrium the very freedom of man; and when the freedom of man perishes, he can no longer be saved . . .

34°. As at the end of the Church evil increases over good, all are then judged by the Lord, and the evil are separated from the good, and all things are reduced into order, and a New Heaven is established, and also a New Church on earth, and thus the equilibrium is restored. This, then, is what is called the Last Judgment.

45. That the Last Judgment has been accomplished. Gen.art.

— . It has been shown above that the Last Judgment does not come forth on earth, but in the Spiritual World, where all are together from the beginning of the creation; and this being the case it cannot come to the Knowledge of any man when the Last Judgment has been accomplished; for everyone is expecting it on earth . . . Therefore . . . it has been given me to see with my eyes that the Last Judgment has now been accomplished, and that the evil have been cast into the Hells, and the good elevated into Heaven, and thus that all things have been reduced into order, and thence the spiritual equilibrium has been restored . . .

—². In what way the Last Judgment has been accomplished, it has been given me to see from beginning to end, and also in what way Babylon has been destroyed, and also in what way those who are meant by 'the dragon' have been cast into the abyss; and also in what way a New Heaven has been formed, and a New Church established in the Heavens, which is meant by 'the New Jerusalem.' . . . This Last Judgment commenced at the beginning of the preceding year, 1757, and was fully accomplished by the end of that year.

46. But it is to be known that the Last Judgment has been effected upon those who had lived from the Lord's time to this day; but not upon those who had lived before. For in this Earth there had been a Last Judgment twice before; one, which is described in the Word by the Flood; and the other by the Lord Himself when He was in the world; and which is also meant by the Lord's words: 'Now is the Judgment of this world, now is the prince of this world cast out of doors' (John xii.3). Further ill.

—³. The reason there has been in this Earth a Last Judgment twice before, is that every Judgment comes forth at the end of the Church . . . and in this Earth there have been two Churches, the first before the Flood, and the second after the Flood . . . The Last Judgment of the (former Church) is described by the Flood . . . Ex.

—³. The second Church, which was after the Flood . . . extended through much of the Asiatic world, and was continued with the descendants of Jacob. Its end was when the Lord came into the world; and by Him a Last Judgment was then effected upon all from the first establishment of that Church, and at the same time upon those left from the first Church . . .

—°. The third Church on this Earth is the Christian one; upon this, and at the same time upon all who from the Lord's time had been in the first Heaven, there has been effected a Last Judgment, which is now treated of.

47. In what way this Last Judgment has been effected cannot be described in special in this little Work, because the things are many, but they will be described in the Explication upon the Apocalypse. For the Judgment has been accomplished not only upon all who have been of the Christian Church, but also upon all who are called Mohammedans, and also upon all the gentiles in this world; and it has been effected in this order: first, upon those who had been of the Papal religion; then upon the Mohammedans; afterwards upon the gentiles; and lastly upon the Reformed. Concerning the Judgment upon those who had been of the Papal religion, see the following article concerning Babylon destroyed; concerning the Judgment upon the Reformed, see the article on the former Heaven which has passed away; but concerning the Judgment upon the Mohammedans, and upon the gentiles, some things shall be said in this article.

48. The arrangement of all the nations and peoples upon whom the Judgment has been effected in the Spiritual World was seen to be as follows. In the middle those appeared collected who are called the Reformed; and there also distinct, according to their countries. The Germans were there towards the north; the Swedes were there towards the west; the Danes in the east; the Dutch towards the east and south; the English in the middle. All round this Middle, where all the Reformed were, there appeared collected those who were of the Papal religion, the greatest part in the western quarter, some in the southern. Beyond these were the Mohammedans, also distinct according to their countries, all then appeared in the south-west. Beyond these were congregated the gentiles in a vast number, who thus constituted the compass itself. Outside of these there appeared as it were a sea, which was the boundary.

49. (These words)=that the Lord will separate those who are in truths and at the same time in good, from those who are in truths and not in good ; (for these are signified by 'the sheep and the goats'). Upon no others has the Judgment been effected ; for the evil who were in no truths were already in the Hells ; for thither are cast all the evil after death, thus before the Judgment, who at heart deny the Divine, and reject from faith the truths of the Church. Of those who had been in truths and not in good had been the former Heaven which passed away ; and of those who are in truths and at the same time in good has been formed a New Heaven.

50. As to the Judgment upon the Mohammedans and gentiles, it was effected as follows. The Mohammedans were brought from their places, where they had been congregated . . . by a way round the Christians ; from the west, through the north, to the east, even to the confines of the south ; and on the way the evil were separated from the good : the evil were cast into marshes and lakes ; many were also dispersed into a certain desert which was beyond ; but the good were led through the east to a land of great space near the south, and dwelling-places were there given them . . .

51. The Judgment upon the gentiles was effected in almost a like manner, but . . . they were brought only part of the way, into the west, where the evil were separated from the good ; and the evil were there cast into two great gulfs . . . but the good were brought above the Middle where the Christians were, towards the land in the eastern quarter where the Mohammedans were, and were allotted dwelling-places behind them ; and further, to a great extension, into the southern quarter . . .

—5. The Judgment upon so great a multitude was effected in a few days ; for everyone, when let into his own love and his own faith, is at once designated, and is carried to his like.

59. Why (the Babylonians) were tolerated to the day of the Last Judgment. Gen.art.

—4. Hence it is that there were tolerated all who had been such from the time of the commencing Christian Church up to the day of Judgment . . .

—5. But it is to be known that only those were preserved who suffered themselves to be kept in bonds by laws both civil and spiritual, since these could be in Society together. But those were not preserved who could not be kept in bonds by these laws : these were cast into Hell long before the day of the Last Judgment ; for the Societies are continually purified and defended from such.

—6. In like manner . . . those who are interiorly good . . . are by turns sent, before the Judgment, to the places of instruction . . . and are taken up thence into Heaven . . .

61. After visitation, destruction took place ; for visitation always precedes. Visitation is the exploration of their quality, and also the separation of the good from the evil ; and the good are taken away thence, and the evil are left behind. These things having been done, prodigious earthquakes took place, from which they observed that the Last Judgment was at hand, and trembling seized on them all. Then those who dwelt in the Southern Quarter, especially those in the great city there, were seen running hither and thither ; some that they might betake themselves to flight ; some that they might hide themselves in the crypts ; some in the cellars and pits where their treasures were ; and some carried out thence whatever came to hand. But after the earthquakes, there burst forth an ebullition from below, which overturned all things in the city and in the circumjacent tract. After the ebullition, there came a vehement wind from the east, which laid bare, shook, and overthrew all things to their foundations ; and then all who were there were led forth out of every place, and out of every retreat, and they were cast into a sea, the waters of which were black. Those who were cast into it amounted to many myriads. Afterwards, from that whole tract there went up a smoke, like that after a conflagration ; and finally a dense dust, which was carried off by the east wind to the sea, and strewn over it ; for their treasures had been turned into dust, and all those things which they had called holy, because possessed by them. . . Lastly, there was seen as it were a blackness flying over that whole tract, which, when looked at, appeared like a dragon ; a sign that the whole of that great city and the whole of that tract had become a desert.

—5. But those who were in the Council . . . were not cast into the black sea, but into a gulf which opened itself lengthwise, and deep down, beneath and around them. Thus was the Last Judgment accomplished upon the Babylonians in the southern quarter.

—6. But the Last Judgment upon those who were in front in the Western Quarter, and upon those who were in the Northern Quarter, where also there was a great city, was thus effected. After prodigious earthquakes, which convulsed all things down to the bottom . . . an east wind went forth from the south, through the west, into the north, and laid bare all that region ; first that region which was in front in the western quarter, where those who had lived in the dark ages dwelt underground ; and afterwards the great city, which was extended from that quarter all through the north to the east ; and, when these had been laid bare, all things appeared. But as there were no such great treasures there, there was not seen any boiling up, and fire and brimstone consuming the treasures, but only an overturn and destruction, and then an exhalation of all things into smoke ; for the east wind advanced, in going and returning, and overthrew and destroyed, and also took away. The monks, together with the common people, were led forth to the number of many myriads, and were partly cast into the black sea, on that side of it which looks to the west ; partly into the great southern gulf, mentioned above ; partly into the western gulf ; and partly into the Hells of the gentiles . . . A smoke was also seen ascending thence, and advancing as far as the sea, and flying over it, and spreading a black crust over it ; for that part of the sea into which they had been cast, was encrusted with the dust and smoke into which their dwelling-places and riches were reduced ; and therefore that sea no longer appeared to the sight, but in its place as it were a mere blackness, beneath which is their Hell.

—8. The Last Judgment upon those who dwelt upon the mountains in the Eastern Quarter . . . was thus accomplished. Those mountains were seen to subside into the deep, and all those who were upon them were swallowed up. And he whom they had placed upon one of the mountains there, and whom they proclaimed to be God, was seen to become black, and then fiery, and together with them was cast down headlong into Hell. For the monks of the various orders who were upon those mountains, had said that he was God, and that they were Christ; and, wherever they went, they carried with them the execrable persuasion that they were Christ.

[J. 61]<sup>P</sup>. Lastly, there was effected the Judgment upon those who dwelt more remotely in the Western Quarter, and upon mountains there, who are meant by 'the woman sitting on the scarlet beast, which had seven heads which were seven mountains.' Their mountains were also seen; some of them opened in the middle, where a huge gulf was made which was drawn round into a spiral, and those who were upon them were cast into it. Some of the mountains were torn up from their foundations, and were completely inverted, so that what had been the highest there became the lowest. Those who were thence in the plains were inundated as with a flood, and covered over; but those who were with them from the other Quarters were cast into the gulfs.

— But the things here told are only a few of all which I have seen; more will be given in the Explication upon the Apocalypse. These things were effected and completed in the beginning of the year 1757.

—<sup>30</sup>. As to the gulfs into which they were all cast, except those who were cast into the black sea, they are many. Four have been disclosed to me. Ennm. The gulfs and the sea are their Hells . . .

64. As the Last Judgment has now been accomplished, and by it all things have been reduced by the Lord into order, and all who were interiorly good have been taken up into Heaven, and all who were interiorly evil have been cast down into Hell, it is henceforth no longer allowed as it had been before that they should consociate below Heaven and above Hell; nor that (the Babylonians) should have anything in common with others; but as soon as they come thither . . . they are completely separated, and, after some time passed in the World of Spirits, they are carried into their places . . .

66. See FORMER HEAVEN, here. 67. 69. 70. 71.

67<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that a Last Judgment has been effected twice before upon the inhabitants of this Earth, and now for a third time.

69. The First Heaven was composed of all those upon whom the Last Judgment has been effected; for it has not been effected upon those who were in Hell, nor upon those who were in Heaven, nor upon those who were in the World of Spirits . . . and not upon any man still living; but solely upon those who had made for themselves a resemblance of Heaven . . .

72. How the First Heaven passed away, has been described before, where it treated of the Last Judgment upon the Mohammedans, and upon the gentiles, and upon the Papists . . . It remains for something to be said about the Last Judgment upon the Reformed . . . for, as above said, the Judgment has not been effected upon any others than those of whom was the First Heaven. After these latter had been visited, and had been let into their interiors, they were distributed and divided into classes according to their evils and the derivative falsities, and according to their falsities and the derivative evils; and they were cast into Hells corresponding to their loves. Their Hells were on every side around the Middle; for the Reformed were in the Middle . . . Those who were not cast into Hells, were cast out into deserts; but some were sent down into the plains in the southern and northern quarters, in order that they might form Societies, and be instructed and prepared for Heaven. These are they who were preserved. But the way in which all these things were accomplished, cannot be here described in special, for the Judgment upon these lasted longer, and was effected successively, by turns; and as there were then seen and heard many things worthy of mention, I will present them in their order in the Explication upon the Apocalypse.

73. On the state of the world and of the Church after (the Last Judgment). Gen.art.

— It will be quite like what it has been heretofore; for that great change which has been effected in the Spiritual World does not induce any change on the natural world as to the external form; and therefore henceforth there will equally be civil things as before; there will be peaces, treaties, and wars, as before; and all other things which belong to societies in general and in special. . . But as concerns the state of the Church, this it is which hereafter will not be the same; it will indeed be similar as to the external appearance, but it will be dissimilar as to the internal appearance. As to the external appearance there will be divided Churches as before; their doctrines will be taught as before; in like manner religious things with the gentiles; but henceforth the man of the Church will be in a freer state of thinking about the things of faith, thus about the spiritual things which are of Heaven; because spiritual freedom has been restored; for all things have now been reduced into order in the Heavens and in the Hells; and thence inflows all thought concerning Divine things, and against Divine things . . . But this change of state is not observed by a man in himself, because he does not reflect upon it, nor does he know anything about spiritual freedom, nor about influx . . .

74. I have spoken various things with the Angels concerning the state of the Church hereafter; who have said that things to come they know not, because to know things to come is of the Lord alone; but that they do know that that slavery and captivity in which the man of the Church has been heretofore has been taken away; and that now from restored freedom he is better able to perceive interior truths, if he wants to perceive them; and thus to become interior, if he wants so to become: but that they have small hope of the men of the Christian Church; but much hope of some nation remote from the Christian world, and removed from the infesters thence; which nation is such that it can receive spiritual light, and become a celestial spiritual man; and they have said that at this day interior Divine truths are being revealed among that nation, and are also being received in spiritual faith, that is, in life and in heart, and that they adore the Lord.

C. J. 1. That the Last Judgment has been accomplished. Gen.art.

2. The reason the Last Judgment continues to be treated of, is especially that it may be known what was the state of the world and of the Church before the Last Judgment, and what the state of the world and of the Church has become after it; and also in what way the Last Judgment has been accomplished upon the Reformed.

3. (The general opinion concerning the day of the Last Judgment in the Christian world stated.)

—e. (It may thus be seen) that the Last Judgment will not be in the natural world, but in the Spiritual World. 5<sup>e</sup>.

5<sup>e</sup>. And that when the Last Judgment takes place, it must be revealed for the sake of faith in the Word.

8. On the state of the world and of the Church before the Last Judgment, and after it. Gen.art.

10. As these had lived in externals as Christians, they were conjoined with the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven . . . On account of this conjunction they could not but be tolerated; for to separate them before the Last Judgment would have been to inflict injury on those who were in the Ultimate Heaven. Sig.

11. That before the Last Judgment was effected upon them, much of the communication between Heaven and the world, thus between the Lord and the Church, was intercepted. Gen.art.

12. That hence it is that after the Last Judgment had been accomplished, and not before, revelations were made for the New Church.

—<sup>3</sup>. That the state of the world and of the Church before the Last Judgment was like evening and night, but after it like morning and day. Gen.art.

14. On the Last Judgment upon the Reformed. Gen.art.

16. Upon whom from the Reformed the Last Judgment was effected. Gen.art.

— The Last Judgment was effected upon no others from the Reformed than upon those who in the world had professed God, had read the Word, had heard preachings, had attended the sacrament of the Supper, and had not neglected the solemn rites of the worship of the Church; and yet had accounted as allowable, adulteries, various kinds of theft, lies, revenges, hatreds, and the like. These, although they had professed God, made sins against Him of no account. They had read the Word, and still had made of no account the precepts of life therein; they had heard preachings, and had attended nothing to them; they had gone to the sacrament of the Supper, and still had not abandoned the evils of their former life; and they had not neglected the solemn rites of worship, and still had not at all amended their life. Thus they had lived in externals as if from religion, and yet in internals they had had no religion. These are they who are meant by 'the dragon' in the Apocalypse . . . The same are meant also by 'the he-goats' in Matt.xxv.

17. Upon all these from the Reformed was the Last Judgment effected; but not upon those who had not believed in God, who had despised the Word, and had at heart rejected the holy things of the Church; for all these, when they came from the natural world into the Spiritual World, had been cast into Hell.

19. While they remained (in their imaginary Heavens) the interiors of their minds were closed up, and the exteriors were opened; so that their evils, by which they made one with the Hells, did not appear. But when the Last Judgment was at hand, their interiors were uncovered, and then they appeared before all in their real quality; and as they then acted as one with the Hells, they could no longer simulate a Christian life, but from delight rushed into evils and disgraceful acts of every kind, and were turned into devils, and also appeared as they do; some black, some fiery, and some livid like corpses . . .

22. From these things it may be evident upon which of the Reformed it was that the Judgment was effected; that it was not upon those who were in the Middle; but upon those who were around it . . .

23. On the signs and visitations before the Last Judgment. Gen.art.

— There was seen above those who had made themselves seeming Heavens, as it were a cloud, which appeared from the presence of the Lord in the angelic Heavens which were above them, especially from His presence in the Ultimate Heaven, lest, on account of the conjunction, any of them should at the same time be taken away, and should perish. The higher Heavens were also brought down nearer to them, by means of which the interiors of those upon whom the Judgment was about to come were uncovered; on the uncovering of which they no longer appeared like moral Christians, as before, but like demons. They were uproarious and quarreling together about God, the Lord, the Word, faith, and the Church; and as the concupiscences to evils were also then let out into freedom, they rejected all these things with contempt and ridicule, and rushed into disgraceful acts of every kind. Thus was the state of these heaven-dwellers changed. Then at the same time vanished all their splendid things, which they had made for themselves by arts unknown in the world: their palaces were turned into vile cottages; their gardens into pools; their temples into ruins; and the very hills upon which they dwelt, into rough sharp stones, and into other like things which corresponded to their flagitious minds and cupidities. . . These were the signs of the coming Judgment.

24. As the uncovering of their interiors increased, so the order among those who dwelt there was changed and inverted; those who had most prevailed in reasonings against the holy things of the Church, burst into the middle, and assumed the dominion; and the rest, who had less prevailed in reasonings, withdrew to the sides, and acknowledged those who were in the middle as their Angel guardians. Thus did they bind themselves together into external forms-facies-of Hell.

25. Round about these changes of their state, there took place various concussions of the dwellings and lands with them, which were followed by earthquakes, great according to their turning away; and here and there also the earth yawned open towards the Hells which were beneath them, and thus there was opened communication with those Hells; exhalations were then seen rising up as of smokes mingled with sparks of fire. These also were signs which preceded; and which are also meant by the Lord's words concerning the consummation of the age and of the Last Judgment then . . . 'Nation shall be stirred up against nation: there shall be great earthquakes in divers places: signs also from Heaven, terrible and great. And there shall be distress of nations, the sea and the salt water roaring.'

[C.J.] 26. Visitations also were made by the Angels . . . The Angels exhorted them to desist, and denounced destruction upon them if they did not. At the same time they sought out whether there were any good ones intermingled among them, whom they separated. But the crowd, excited by their leaders, reviled the Angels, and rushed upon them in order to drag them into some public place, and treat them in an abominable manner. It was done there as in Sodom. Most of them were from faith separated from charity; and there were also some who had professed charity, and still had lived flagitiously.

27. How the universal Judgment was effected. Gen. art.

— After the visitations and signs premonitory of the coming Judgment could not turn aside their minds from criminal acts, nor from seditious machinations against those who acknowledged the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, who held the Word to be holy, and led a life of charity, the Last Judgment came upon them. It was thus effected.

28. The Lord was seen in a bright cloud with the Angels, and there was heard from it as it were the sound of a trumpet, which was a sign representative of the protection of the Angels of Heaven by the Lord, and of the gathering of the good from every side. For the Lord does not bring destruction upon anyone, but only protects His own, and draws them away from communication with the evil; and when they have been drawn away, the evil come into their own concupiscences, and from them rush into nefarious things of every kind. Then all who were about to perish were seen together like a great dragon, with its tail extended in a curve, and elevated towards Heaven, bending itself about on high in various directions, as though it would destroy Heaven and drag it down; but the endeavour was vain, for the tail was cast down, and the dragon which also then appeared elevated, sank down. (This representation Ex.)

29. I then saw some of the rocks upon which they had been, subsiding to the lowest depths; some translated afar; some opened in the middle, and those who were upon them cast down through the openings; and some inundated as with a flood. And I saw many Spirits collected into companies, as into bundles, according to the genera and species of evil, and cast hither and thither into gulfs, marshes, lakes, and deserts, which were so many Hells. The rest, who were not upon the rocks, but scattered here and there, fled away affrighted to the Papists, Mohammedans, and gentiles, and professed their religions, which they could do without any disturbance of mind, because with these there had been no religion; but still, lest they should seduce these also, they were driven away, and thrust down to their companions in the Hells. This was their destruction as described universally: the particulars which I have seen are more than can be here described.

30. On the salvation of the sheep. After the Last Judgment had been accomplished, there was joy in Heaven, and also light in the World of Spirits, such as there had not been before . . . because those infernal Societies had been interposed like clouds . . . A like light also arose to men in the world, from which they had new enlightenment.

31. I then saw angelic Spirits, in great numbers, rising up from the lower parts, and elevated into Heaven; who were the sheep, there reserved, and guarded by the Lord for ages back . . .

53. In the days of the Last Judgment, I saw many thousands (of the Dutch) cast out of the cities in the Spiritual World, and out of the villages, and the surrounding lands. (Their character des.) I saw them cast into a fiery gulf stretching beneath the eastern tract, and into a dark cavern stretching beneath the southern tract. This casting out was seen on the 9th of January, 1757. There remained those with whom there was religion . . .

57. After the Last Judgment, the state (of the Papists there) was thus changed, in that they were not allowed to congregate in companies, as before . . .

59. When the great northern city of the Papists was destroyed, on the day of the Last Judgment, I saw (that Pope) carried out of it on a couch, and taken to a place of safety.

L. 3<sup>d</sup>. That the Lord came into the world in order to effect a Last Judgment, and thereby subjugate the then dominant Hells, which was effected through combats, or through temptations admitted into his Human from the mother . . .

5. By 'the day cruel' 'terrible,' etc., is meant the Advent of the Lord to Judgment.

14th. As a Last Judgment was effected by the Lord when He was in the world, through combats with the Hells, and through their subjugation, it therefore treats in many places of the Judgment which He should effect. Ill.

61st. The reason this (doctrine of the Lord) has not been seen before from the Word, is that if it had been seen before, it would still not have been received; for the Last Judgment had not as yet been accomplished, and before it the power of Hell prevailed over the power of Heaven; and man is in the midst between Heaven and Hell; and therefore if it had been seen before . . . Hell would have snatched it out of their hearts, and would besides have profaned it. This state of the power of Hell has been completely broken by the Last Judgment, which has now been accomplished. After it, thus now, every man who wants to be enlightened and to be wise, can be. 65. P. 263<sup>d</sup>.

62. Thus after the Last Judgment had been effected, it is said . . .

F. 64. The Last Judgment was effected upon no others than those who were moral in externals, but in internals were not spiritual, or but little spiritual. Those who had been evil in externals as well as in internals had been cast into Hell long before the Last Judgment; and those who had been spiritual in externals and at the same time in internals had been elevated into Heaven long before the Last Judgment. For the Judgment was not effected upon those who were in Heaven, nor upon those who were in Hell, but upon those who were in the middle between Heaven and Hell, and who had made for themselves seeming Heavens there.

—<sup>2</sup>. At that time those (of the Reformed) who had been in faith separated from charity, not only in doctrine, but also in life, were cast into Hell; and those who had been in the same faith as to doctrine only, but still had been in charity as to life, were elevated into Heaven: from which it was evident that no others are meant by the Lord by the he-goats and the sheep, in Matt. xxv., where He is speaking of the Last Judgment.

P. 264<sup>4</sup>. That neither were genuine truths . . . revealed by the Lord until after the Last Judgment had been accomplished . . . Ex. It had been foretold by the Lord in the Apocalypse that after the Last Judgment had been accomplished, genuine truths were to be disclosed, a new Church to be established, and the spiritual sense of the Word disclosed. That the Last Judgment has been accomplished, has been shown in the Work on the Last Judgment . . .

274<sup>6</sup>. I have not yet heard anyone say that (specific deceased persons) have as yet no lot, but will have at the time of the Judgment.

R. Pref.<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that since the Last Judgment, which was accomplished in the year 1757, in the Spiritual World . . . there has been formed a New Heaven from Christians . . . 791<sup>2</sup>.

2. In the Apocalypse it treats from beginning to end of the last state of the Church in the Heavens and on earth, and of the Last Judgment then . . . E. 5.

186. That they will be protected and preserved in the day of the Last Judgment. Sig.

187. Because by the words which immediately precede is meant the Last Judgment; and the Last Judgment is also called 'the Advent of the Lord,' as in Matt. xxiv. 3. . . 'The consummation of the age' = the last time of the Church, when is the Last Judgment.

—<sup>4</sup>. For after the Last Judgment the Church is instaurated by the Lord. That Church in the present case is the New Jerusalem . . .

225, Pref. It treats (in Rev. iv.) of the ordination and preparation of all things in Heaven for the Judgment, which would be from the Word and according to it . . .

225. Manifestation concerning the ordination of the Heavens by the Lord for the Last Judgment, which would be according to His Divine truths in the Word. Sig.

227. Revelations concerning things to come before the Last Judgment, and concerning it, and after it. Sig.

229. The Judgment in a representative form. Sig.

—<sup>6</sup>. It is said that 'a throne' = the Judgment in a representative form, because those things which John saw were visions which represented . . .

233. 'Around the throne were four and twenty thrones, and upon the thrones I saw four and twenty elders sitting' = the ordination of all things in Heaven for the Last Judgment. Ex.

— . That when the Last Judgment should come . . . it would be effected that the Word shall judge everyone, the Lord regulating, so that all things shall be done according to justice. Sec 239.

256, Pref. That the Lord in the Divine Human will effect the Judgment from the Word and according to it, because He Himself is the Word; and that this is acknowledged by all in the three Heavens. (Tr. in Rev. v.)

256. Because it treats of the exploration of all in the Heavens and on earth upon whom the Last Judgment will be, and of their separation.

273. '(The Lamb) came and took the book out of the right hand of Him who sat upon the throne' = that the Lord as to His Divine Human is the Word, and that this is from His Divine in Him, and that on this account He will effect the Judgment from His Divine Human.

—<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord will effect the Judgment from His Divine Human, because He is the Word, is evident from these passages. Ill.

274. 'And when He had taken the book' = when the Lord commenced to effect the Judgment, and thereby to reduce into order all things in the Heavens and upon earth.

295, Pref. It treats (in Rev. vi.) of the exploration of those upon whom the Last Judgment will come; and exploration was made as to the quality of the understanding of the Word as it had been with them, and thence what had been the quality of the state of their life . . . Concerning the state of those who on account of the evil had been guarded by the Lord in the Lower Earth, that at the time of the Last Judgment they were to be delivered. Concerning the state of those who were in evils and the derivative falsities, what it would be on the day of the Last Judgment.

295. 'I saw when the Lamb had opened the first of the seals' = the exploration by the Lord of all upon whom the Last Judgment will come, as to the understanding of the Word, and as to the consequent state of their life. 302. 309. 317.

324. 'When He had opened the fifth seal' = the exploration by the Lord of the state life of those who will of be saved at the day of the Last Judgment, and who meanwhile are reserved.

325<sup>2</sup>. For all are guarded by the Lord, lest they should be injured by the evil, who have led any life of charity; and, after the Last Judgment, when the evil have been removed, they are taken out of the places where they are guarded, and are elevated into Heaven. Since the Last Judgment, I have often seen them sent out of the Lower Earth, and translated into Heaven.

—<sup>4</sup>. This is the reason why they are guarded by the Lord; and, when the evil have been cast out into Hell, which is after the Last Judgment, they are brought forth from the places where they are guarded.

327. (Their grief) that the Last Judgment is deferred. Sig.

329. That the Last Judgment would still be deferred a little until there should have been collected from every side those who in like manner had been hated, reviled, and rejected by the evil on account of the acknowledgment of the Divine Human of the Lord, and a life according to the truths of His Word. Sig.

[R.] 330. 'I saw when He had opened the sixth seal' = the exploration by the Lord of the state of life of those who were interiorly evil, upon whom the Judgment will come.

— Two arcana are to be revealed: First. That the Last Judgment has not been effected upon any others than those who in the external form had appeared like Christians, and with the mouth had professed the things which are of the Church; but in the internal form, or at heart, had been against them; and because they were such, therefore as to the exteriors they had been conjoined with the Ultimate Heaven, and as to the interiors with Hell. Second. That so long as they were conjoined with the Ultimate Heaven, so long the interiors of their will and love were closed, in consequence of which they did not appear evil before others. But when they had been separated from the Ultimate Heaven, then their interiors were disclosed, which were in complete opposition to their exteriors, from which they had simulated and counterfeited that they were Angels of light, and that the places where they dwelt were Heavens. These Heavens so-called were those which passed away at the time of the Last Judgment.

340. 'For the great day of His anger is come, and who is able to stand?' = that they have become such of themselves through separation from the good and faithful, on account of the Last Judgment, which otherwise they could not endure. By 'the great day of the anger of the Lamb' is signified the day of the Last Judgment; and by 'who is able to stand?' is signified not to be able to endure it for the torment; for when the Last Judgment is at hand, the Lord approaches with Heaven; and of those who are below, in the World of Spirits, no others can endure the advent of the Lord than those who are interiorly good . . .

342. 'I saw four Angels standing on the four corners of the earth' = the universal Heaven now in the endeavour to effect the Last Judgment upon those who were in the World of Spirits.

— There now follow many things concerning the state of the Spiritual World immediately before the Last Judgment, which no one can know except through revelation from the Lord; and as it has been given me to see how the Last Judgment has been accomplished, and also the changes which preceded, and the ordinations which have followed it, I can thence trace back the things which are signified by all the things in this chapter and in those which follow.

—<sup>2</sup>. For the Last Judgment was effected upon those who were in the World of Spirits, and not upon anyone in Heaven, nor upon anyone in Hell. 866<sup>a</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. For the Lord, when the Judgment was at hand, caused the Heavens to approach over the World of Spirits; and by means of the approach of the Heavens there was effected such a change of the state of the interiors which are of the mind with those who were beneath, that they saw nothing but terrors before their eyes.

343. It is to be known that the Last Judgment comes forth when the evil are so greatly multiplied below the Heavens in the World of Spirits that the Angels in the Heavens cannot subsist in the state of their love and of their wisdom; for there is then no support and foundation for them; and as this comes forth from the multiplication of the evil below, therefore, in order that He may preserve their state, the Lord inflows with His Divine more and more strongly; and this is done until they cannot be preserved by any influx unless the evil below are separated from the good; and this is effected by the subsidence and approach of the Heavens, and a consequently stronger influx, until the evil cannot endure it; and then the evil flee away, and cast themselves into Hell. Sig.

478. That after the Last Judgment upon those who have devastated the Church, the Lord's Kingdom will come. Sig.

525. 'The time of judging has come' = . . . the Last Judgment upon those with whom there is not any spiritual life.

554. That by the Last Judgment those have been removed who had set themselves in opposition against the doctrine of the New Jerusalem. Sig.

626<sup>e</sup>. For the Advent of the Lord involves two things: the Last Judgment, and after it the New Church. The Last Judgment is treated of in Rev. xix. xx. . .

655<sup>e</sup>. Like things to these happened in many places at the day of the Last Judgment. Fully des. and sig.

676<sup>e</sup>. For the Last Judgment is not effected upon them until they have been devastated. Des.

709. That thus it has been manifested by the Lord that all things of the Church have been devastated, and that now the Last Judgment is at hand. Sig.

761<sup>r</sup>. When evils and falsities are multiplied beyond the degrees of opposition . . . the Heavens are infested; and unless the Lord then protects the Heavens, which is done by a stronger influx from Himself, violence is inflicted on the Heavens, and when this arrives at its height, He then effects the Last Judgment, and so they are delivered. Sig.

765. That on this account, at the time of the Last Judgment, the penalties of the evils which they have done will return upon them, which are . . . Sig.

804<sup>2</sup>. This also is the reason why it was not until after the Last Judgment that there was revealed the spiritual sense of the Word, and that the Lord alone is the God of Heaven and earth; for by the Last Judgment the Babylonians have been removed, and also the Reformed who had confessed faith alone; the falsities of whom had been like dusky clouds interposed between the Lord and men upon earth; and had also been like colds, which took away spiritual heat, which is the love of good and truth.

865. 'I saw a throne white and great, and One sitting upon it, from whose face fled the Heaven and the earth' (Rev. xx. 11) = the universal Judgment effected by the Lord upon all the former Heavens . . . which Heavens together with their earth were completely dissipated . . .

— . Something is to be premised concerning the universal Judgment which is here treated of. From the time when the Lord was in the world, when He Himself in Person effected a Last Judgment, it had been permitted that those who were in civil and moral good, although in no spiritual good . . . should stay in the World of Spirits longer than the rest . . . and at last it was conceded to them to make for themselves constant dwelling-places there, and also by the abuse of correspondences, and by phantasies, to form for themselves seeming Heavens; which, moreover, they had formed in great abundance. But when they had been multiplied in such abundance as to intercept spiritual light and spiritual heat between the higher Heavens and men on earth, then the Lord effected the Last Judgment, and dissipated those imaginary Heavens; which was effected in this way,—the externals by which they simulated Christians were taken away; and the internals, in which they were devils, were opened; and then they were seen such as they were in themselves; and those who were seen to be devils were cast into Hell, everyone according to the evils of his life. This was done in the year 1757.

876. Pref. It treats (in Rev.xxi.) concerning the state of Heaven and of the Church after the Last Judgment: that after this, through the New Heaven a New Church will come forth on earth which will worship the Lord alone.

877. 'Because the former Heaven and the former earth had passed away'=Heavens not from the Lord . . . all of which were dissipated at the day of the Last Judgment.

878. 'And the sea was no longer'=that the External of the Heaven collected from Christians from the first establishment of the Church, after there had been taken out thence and saved those who were written in the Lord's book of life, was in like manner dissipated. . . But the Internal of the Heaven from Christians was not fully formed by the Lord until some time before the Last Judgment, and also after it; as may be evident from Rev.xiv. and xv., where it treats of it; and from Rev. xx. 4,5. The reason it was not formed before. Ex.

884<sup>2</sup>. As there are fellowships there as in the natural world, it could not be otherwise before the Last Judgment than that those who in externals were civil and moral, but in internals evil, should be together and should converse with those who in like manner were civil and moral in externals, but in internals good; and as in the evil there is a continual cupidity of seducing, therefore the good who were with them in fellowship were infested in various ways. But those who were grieved by the infestations from them, and who came into fear of damnation, and of evils and falsities from Hell, and of grievous temptation, were taken out of their fellowship by the Lord, and were sent into a certain Earth beneath that one, where also there are societies, and were there guarded; and this until all the evil had been separated from the good, which was effected by means of the Last Judgment; and then those who had been guarded in the Lower Earth were elevated by the Lord into Heaven.

948. The state of all in general before the Last Judgment: that from those who were in evils goods were taken away, and from those who were in falsities truths were taken away; and, on the other hand, that from those who were in goods evils were taken away, and from those who were in truths falsities were taken away. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. For before this had been done, the Last Judgment could not be effected; because so long as the evil retained goods and truths, they were conjoined as to externals with the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven; and yet they were to be separated; and this is what is foretold by the Lord in Matt.xiii.24-30; and 38-40.

T. 95. The acts of redemption, by which the Lord made Himself justice, were that He accomplished the Last Judgment, which was effected in the Spiritual World, and then separated the evil from the good, and the goats from the sheep, and expelled from Heaven those who made one with the beasts of the dragon, and of the worthy built a New Heaven, and of the unworthy a Hell, and successively reduced all things into order in both.

115. The Lord is also at this day effecting a redemption, which He commenced in the year 1757, together with the Last Judgment, which was then effected.

123<sup>2</sup>. The ordination of the Heavens and of the Hells has continued from the day of the Last Judgment until the present time, and still continues . . .

772<sup>2</sup>. That the Last Judgment was effected in the Spiritual World, in the year 1757 . . . I testify, because I saw it with my eyes, in full wakefulness.

796<sup>3</sup>. This was (Luther's) state of life up to the Last Judgment, which was effected in the Spiritual World, in the year 1757; but a year after that, he was translated from his first house to another, and at the same time into a different state.

4925-4928. On Heaven, and on the Last Judgment. There appeared many upon mountains and rocks, who were evil . . . But it was often seen that in various ways the evil there were separated from the good, and were cast down from the mountains and rocks. (4926) There was one rock upon which there was a rather large city, where were those who are in faith alone . . . These revelled in the lust of exercising command, and therefore they stood at the sides of the rock, and infested those who were beneath. . . As all exhortation was in vain, that rock began to subside; and at last it subsided into the deep, with that city and its inhabitants. It was said that the same thing takes place elsewhere, where they do not live the life of faith; the better ones there, however, had departed previously. . . Such are they who are meant by 'the he-goats' . . . When the rock subsides, there is then only a city there which contains an assemblage of evil Spirits, who, when they were men, had been in faith separated from charity; [for] before this happens, the good are removed thence. . . Thus there afterwards appears a chasm there. There remain houses which are of wood; which, in such a city [contain those who] live at the circumference; for these are in the good of charity and of faith. (4927) They subside very deeply, according to the quantity and quality of their evil. This I saw done with two cities upon the rocks. When the whole of the rocks subside, and become valleys, it is good, and signifies those who are suffering themselves to be regenerated. (4928) From these rocks, being lofty, they look far away, to a great distance; and all who are between the rocks, in the valleys, which are cultivated, and where are Spirits who are being informed and led to good, are harassed in many ways by those on the rocks . . . and wherever they flee, they pursue them with their eyes, and harass them . . . Therefore many of their cities there subsided, but those who were in the good of charity and of faith were saved. This is meant in Matt.xxv., by the sheep on the right, and the he-goats on the left.

[D.] 4930-4932. Continuation concerning Heaven and the Last Judgment. There are cities there, great and many, and men betake themselves thither because they . . . are able to live in some good, from fear for their life, of the law, of honour, and of gain. So long as they are in such things, they live morally; but when they are taken out of them, they then live according to their interiors . . . Such cities appear upon rocks and upon mountains; upon the rocks are those who are in principles from the doctrine of the Church; upon the mountains are those who are in loves . . . Into such cities, there at first betake themselves such as are in faith, and have led a moral life in the world; but by degrees the wicked betake themselves thither, by means of simulated affections of truth and good, and by means of various arts; and then the inhabitants of that city begin to be infested—for in the other life thoughts and affections are communicated—and, when this occurs, visitation takes place; Angels are sent thither . . . and when they observe that the state of faith or the state of love has been perverted by those wicked ones, then the good are separated from the evil, like the sheep from the he-goats; and the good go out, and the evil remain; and then that city subsides down into the deep, and thus the evil are let down into Hell. I saw this done with some of them. (4931) How great the wickedness is of those who come thither, can scarcely be described . . . It is chiefly carried on by means of the abuse of correspondences . . . In some cases they present themselves naked, and thus appear above, as innocents; and under the guise of innocence perpetrate criminal things. Some learn the spiritual language, whereby they conjoin themselves with some of the Angels, and thus perpetrate criminal things; but they have not a spiritual language such as those have who are in Heaven, but an artificial one; and they do not speak by it in spiritual ideas, but in natural ideas, which is utterly forbidden. Some devise for themselves another language, and thus consociate themselves so that others do not perceive what they are saying to each other. Others act differently, in thousands and thousands of ways. In a word, the wickedness there is unspeakable. (4932) Four good Spirits were sent into the cities in order to choose for themselves an abode; but wherever they came, they found evil and infamous Spirits. In two, when they had entered a house and chamber, some came in from the city, and asked them to go out to scortate, to which they wanted to impel them, and almost to offer violence . . . thus it was done almost as in Sodom. The reason scortations and adulteries so prevail in these cities, is that in the world such things had been regarded as of no moment; and also because they place everything of the Church in doctrine; not caring whether it is false or true; and falsifications of doctrine are scortations; and adulterations of good are adulteries.

4944, 4945. On Heaven and the Last Judgment. Again have I seen great cities destroyed; one subsided; the other was translated. The one which subsided (did so) quickly, very deep down; it subsided in the middle, and the sides sloped down and followed; and, when they were in the deep, the sides were drawn together above, and thus it was covered over above; but before this, the better ones were called out, and had gone out. (4945) The other city did not subside, but was translated to another place, which was done to a considerable distance, the translation advancing in a circuit, and it appeared as if a cloud were being translated; and, when it arrived at the end, it also subsided so, [but] elsewhere. Before it was translated, all who were therein were driven into a certain species of stupor; for there was a general change of state.

4953-4988. Concerning the Catholic religion, and Babel. The leading clergy and prelates who are of this religion, who had persuaded themselves . . . that they have the keys of . . . Heaven, and that thus they have the Power to remit sins . . . appeared at the right, on both sides of where the Lord appears as a Sun; into which place they had been carried up by the opinion that they are the nearest to the Lord; and thus [have] from Him the Power to dominate over those things which are below. . . (4955) . . . There appears a sphere as it were of the Lord around them; and they want to be adored almost as the Lord. They were indignant when I merely looked at them; and, being angry, they deliberated together; and were then driven away from the mountain through a posterior way; and, as they were evil, they were cast into Hell. So was it done several times. (4956) Meanwhile, they excited many crews among those who are below, whom they want to rule; especially among those who are at the back; whom they inspire with the erroneous faith that the things which they say are from the Lord . . . These are the worst ones; for by their persuasion they allure to themselves simple good Spirits . . . and they can scarcely be driven away; but still they are being very grievously punished, and at last are being relegated to the Hells. (4957) They also have a great city upon a mountain at the right, where they have a Consistory; yet they say that the Pope is not there, because they are in the other life, and that there the Lord is the Pope. (4958) I saw that many of them were descending through the posterior way, and were conducting themselves holily in externals . . . and that they were exciting the white monks with the books, who were praying for them . . . and the Jesuits also were then conspiring with them. . . (4960) There appear around that mountain, from one end to the other, men or Spirits who look downwards, and thereby rule all things which are around. They who are thus posted in a series, who amount to hundreds, are called look-outs; and every one of them has his own function. (4961) He who stood first in that series, is from those who take away understanding from men by inducing ignorance of all things which are in the Word . . . (4962) These also send forth Spirits to those who are below . . . who sit behind them, and as it were infuse themselves into their heads . . . and rule their thoughts, and thus their will . . . There have been many such with me . . . (4963) He who appears in the second place is a look-out from those who disjoin the Lord from the Church, putting themselves in His place; and who thus, which is the same thing, are separating good and truth. Such, by means of others, send below to the hacks of those who are seated there, and cause marriage to be separated . . . (4964) The functions of the rest follow in order, as they stand there. The great city is upon a mountain, is of wide extent, and [contains] a vast multitude; and in the middle of it there is a rather lofty height, which is called the Mount of Assembly, on the side more remote from the Lord as a Sun; it is on the side of the north. The height of this Mountain is the same as that of the Sun . . . precisely according to that which is mentioned in the Prophet concerning Lucifer, who is Babel [Is. xiv. 13, 14]. (4965) Below the Mount of Assembly, and also above it, there also appear watch-towers, in which are those who look everywhere around; and also rule; like those who are around at the sides. (4966) There was seen a certain one above a certain tower, who was holding a drawn sword, which flashed; and then those below who saw it began to lie down quite blind, and as it were dead, with terror . . . (4967) Above the Mount of Assembly there appeared a tower; and those who stood in it were seen to wave as it were a sleeve, thus a white linen cloth, which had this effect: that it excited below execrable adulteries . . . (4968) It was seen that those who were in the first place were descending from the Mount of Assembly. It was a vast multitude; but it was said that this was but a little [of them]. Afterwards there were also descending those who were in the second place; concerning whom above. (4969) There appears a communication between this right-hand mountain, and a mountain to the left of the Sun; which communication appears in front of the Sun; so that they were almost obscuring the Sun; thus those who were taking away love. In that communicatory place there appeared a vast multitude. There also appeared a tower on the opposite [side], at the back, which corresponded to those who are on the Mount of Assembly; and they in like manner were waving a sleeve there, when they wanted to excite execrable adulteries. . . (4973) The whole mountain was surrounded with benches in a . . . fivefold order . . . and they were all filled with Spirits . . . who had eyes all round about, and ruled all things. My eye was drawn round the mountain . . . and it was shown that the tracts, as far as the eye could reach, were under their domination, everywhere round about. . . (4975) Because this was the case, that mountain, with the mountains round about, where there was a like religion, subsided from its height down to the plane of the horizon, where they afterwards wandered; nor could they any longer . . . exercise dominion over the lands round about . . . (4977) When the mountains had subsided, the Mount of Assembly, where there was a great abundance of Spirits, was translated around to the left, to a considerable distance; and there it subsided; and those who were there were for the most part cast into Hell . . . (4978) Before this subsidence took place, they began to appear, not at the right and left of the Sun . . . but remote therefrom . . . because the Lord had removed Himself from them; and they had then said to each other that their destruction was at hand; because if they were not near the Lord they could not exercise dominion in His place . . . (4979) There afterwards appeared, at the left side of the Sun . . . a certain tower, where many were labouring; and they wanted to build that tower, and elevate it into Heaven . . . It also was built up to an immense height . . . There were below some of those who had previously been upon the mountain, who were then holding a council, and who were deliberating about a doctrine which was to be the rule for the peoples. It was this doctrine which was represented by the tower . . . (4980) Meanwhile, the communication between me and them was closed, so that I did not know what they were doing; but after that doctrine had been hatched . . . the communication was opened, and it was read. It was to this purport: 1. That they were to worship and adore the Pontiff as the vicar of Christ. 2. That they had the keys of Peter . . . 3. That they were to worship Mary as the goddess of Heaven. 4. Also the saints beneath her . . . 5. That the Pope has supreme Power over emperors and kings. 6. That emperors and kings have no business with the things of the Church. 7. That those who did not acknowledge these things were condemned . . . (4982) When these had been read, they received for answer that those doctrinals had been hatched from the deepest Hell; and then there appeared ascending thence a diabolical crew, very black and direful, who approached, and with their teeth tore away from them the written doctrinals, and bore them away with them into the deepest Hell. (4983) Those who were around were amazed; but they acquiesced when they were told that nothing had been thought therein concerning the salvation of the human race by means of the truths and goods of faith; but in everything there was as the end a diabolical command over the Heavens and over the earths, thus also over the Lord. . . (4987) . . . Direful are the arts in which (the Babylonians) are skilled for bringing men into damnation; they could avert the Lord's influx from those who in faith acknowledge the Lord . . . turning the mind and its thought to themselves . . . (4988) Some of those who had been on the mountain deliberated together that they would receive the Heavenly Doctrine, which is treated of before the chapters of Exodus; and they entered upon execrable plans as to how they should adulterate it . . . so that it might be completely extinguished. But their execrable plans were disclosed, and they were punished by being made utterly insane and stupid . . . There were many such . . . They were persons of three kinds: 1. Those who think of nothing else than exercising command, and using holy things as means of exercising command, who also are Babel. 2. Those who have persuaded themselves that there is no God; but that man has all things in himself; so that everyone is the builder of his own fortune; and that religion is for the sake of the common people, in order that they may be kept in a bond. 3. There were such as had completely conjoined themselves with the Hells.

[D.] 5004-5006. Continuation concerning Babel. When the mountains, together with the cities there, fell down, there still remained mountains further away there; and those who were there, from phantasy, made in front of them as it were the Sun, where the Lord is; but it did not shine. . . Those who were on the mountains there sometimes removed themselves from the other side of that phantastic Sun, and came forth; and, as before, plotted their criminal things in the lower places there; and then they removed themselves back again behind that Sun, and were not seen . . . It was then disclosed that it was a man who was in the love of dominion above the others there (it was the Archbishop Jacobus Benzeliuſ), who had professed the Catholic religion because it was granted him to have dominion. He was then taken out thence, and was cast . . . into damned dust, because he had dared to commit such a crime . . . He [also] had given the commands to do those criminal things [in the lower places] . . . (5006) At last he rose up, and said from that lower place to which he had gone that he was the Lord, now on earth; and afterwards, that he was God. The Catholic crowd all round adored him . . . and, wherever he went, they fell down on their knees, especially those who were on the surrounding mountains . . . and at last the Jesuits also descended, and encompassed him in crowds, with acclamations . . . But at last he was recognized. The Sirens and others had encompassed him with a deceptive lumen, causing a still greater persuasion.

5034-5058. Concerning the Swedish cities; and concerning the Last Judgment; and concerning the Swedish nation. The Swedish nation also dwell in cities . . . in order that they may be thus kept in some interior fear . . . The Swedish cities, as is also the case elsewhere, are many; yet one is near another, so that they can come from one into another within a minute. They are distinguished by something of distance, or something of a wall; and the cities are consociated according to the diversities of genius . . . of the people. . . For the most part, one nation is consociated into one such consociated city . . . (5035) As regards the Swedish cities, there is Stockholm the capital; towards the east was Fahlun; towards the north, Borås; and so on; yet all in one city. Those who dwell in the provinces remote from the cities, have their houses there, but still they dwell in the cities (on account of the robbers). But the cities above-mentioned are inhabited by the evil. (5036) But the good are consociated in another city, which is like Gothenburg . . . (5037) As regards the Swedish nation in general, it is among the wicked nations: goods are adulterated with them, and also truths. (Continued under SWEDEN.) (5038) . . . There appeared one above, with a knife and scissors . . . When those who were in that great city looked at them, then the evil rejoiced, and loved them, and called them clever, skilful, and sagacious; by which was signified that those who adulterate goods and truths . . . are loved . . . But those who were better did not rejoice . . . (5039) When that knife and scissors were shown . . . then the better ones were separated from the evil by Angels . . . and the better ones went out of the city; and then that great city, so consociated, subsided; its middle subsided deeply, and [then] the rest of the great city subsided almost as when water descends vortically through an orifice. When they had subsided, the houses were at first overthrown; but they then began to build the city anew there; but then in a different order, concerning which elsewhere. The order is, that the worst are in the middle; and those not so evil are in the circumferences . . . (5041) The better ones also are consociating themselves into cities, outside of the great one . . . (5042) Further, a part of the great city subsided still more deeply; and the Fahlun part more deeply; for the reason that the evil are more interior than the rest; but in modern times they have become worse than they were formerly, which has been effected by their governor, Anders Swab. (His methods des.) Hence these people, inasmuch as sincerity had been hereditarily in them from ancient times, from which they had also been interiorly wise; and inasmuch as they have destroyed these things in themselves, they are now among the worst nations in Sweden; and therefore these subsided more deeply than others. (5043) In a word, the Swedish nation is worse than the others in Europe, except the Italian and the Russian nations; for they think interiorly. (Continued under SWEDEN.) (5045) But as it is now the last time of the Church, and thus the Last Judgment, Hells are being prepared for such, into which they are being immediately sent down when they come into the other life; so that they are not being allowed to wander about so, and destroy; for unless this [is done] no one from that nation can be saved. (5046) In this nation above others there is the love of exercising dominion . . . and, as they have interior thoughts, in the other life they, above others, devise wicked arts . . . Such from them were collected by worse ones being sent in among them . . . I saw a great crowd, thus collected, cast into a Hell which was at a distance in front, in the plane of the left foot. A chasm was opened there, and through that they were thrust down. When it was opened, it appeared as if a diabolical crew there flew forth on high; the appearance was like a column of such on high; and a gulf appeared like water descending vortically through a chasm; and they who were thrust down thither, as it were sank down through that chasm; but still there were ways by which that crowd was descending. They were afterwards heard in that chasm; and it was perceived that there was a wide space there, and that many myriads could be cast in there. (5052) I also saw that there were thrust down by the Angels into Hell, from a certain mountain, more than hundreds of thousands, because they had been found to be evil: the good had been brought out previously . . . (5053) I saw a mountain afar off, which was cleft in the middle along its breadth; and those who were there were subsiding deeply, in a vast multitude; and when this had been done, a multitude emerged upwards, and ascended both ways to the sides, to more lofty places there; who were those who had been in the pit, and had been prepared for Heaven. (5054) In most of the mountains, there is a mountain above a mountain; and those on the higher mountain are in interiors; and the lower ones there are ruled by them. As, for example, when those who are on the higher mountain are speaking evilly concerning the doctrine of the Church; then those who are beneath persecute the good, especially virgins and the wives of others. . . Therefore it is provided by the Lord that those who are on the higher mountain should be in good and the derivative truths; for the life of the lower ones depends on them. (5055) I saw a higher mountain, or those who were there; and that they were raising up ensigns in the midst, in order to excite those who were on the surrounding mountains to do evil to those who had been sent by the Lord; and when they were exhorted to take away the ensign, they would not, because they were excited by a diabolical crew outside of them, and perhaps among them . . . and it was found that the head of that mountain, together with the city there, was being shaken hither and thither, and that there was an earthquake . . . (5056) The middle of the higher mountain is also higher . . . When visitation comes, which takes place when the Lord sends Angels thither to explore the quality of those who are there . . . then those who are on the mountain, and in the city there, are separated. If the mountain consists of the good, the good are in the middle, and the worse ones are at the sides. But if the mountain consists of the evil, the evil then come into the middle; and, when this happens, those who are in the middle subside. This was done with the mountain here treated of, which was at the west, towards the north. It is important that those who are on the higher mountain should be in good, in life and in doctrine; for upon this depends the doctrine and life of the lower ones; and also upon this depend the Hells which are beneath them. (5057) Many cities upon the mountains subsided in the middle; and in the subsidence there appeared as it were a vortical gyration such as there is in volumes of water which are falling through a chasm. It was said that it is a sign that they cannot be saved. . . The Societies in the other life constitute cities; and . . . in the cities where the good are, the best are in the middle . . . and sometimes an opening is made there to the Hells which are beneath them. (5058) . . . Every such Society, every city, consequently every mountain, has a correspondence with some part of the human body . . .

5060-5074. Continuation concerning the cities and Societies in the other life; and concerning the Last Judgment: concerning the Mohammedans. In passing over, I spoke with those who were upon two mountains, where there were Mohammedans . . . In their first mountain, they said that they live well . . . (5061) They spoke with me from the other mountain . . . As they are of a different genius, Christians cannot come to them . . . They are guarded below . . . Those from their own nation who come to them, ascend by a secret way. I spoke with them about a plurality of wives . . . They entered well into reasons. (5062) The Janizaries who were there . . . said that they were still Christians at heart; but part of them were intermediate. (5064) When (these) were infested by the others, their city subsided—but only with a silent and direct descent—almost to the level of the surrounding earth; and thus they were taken out from the infestation, because they were not seen. Round about, there was as it were a mountain wall, which enabled them to ascend and descend at pleasure. . . (5066) Those who most infest the good in the other life, are those who have placed the whole of religion and of salvation in faith alone; and who have confirmed themselves in it; and have not lived according to the Lord's precepts . . . Of these there is a vast number . . . Such occupy mountains and rocks, and continually infest those who are below, and make one with the diabolical crew. Such, also, are being cast down from their mountains and rocks, and are being scattered around. (5067) There are, also, many who have cared nothing for the doctrine of the Church, but solely for the Word in the letter, which they bend to whatever opinion they want to bend it, and to favour any evils whatever . . . (5068) The evil are collected, and are separated from the good in various ways. This is chiefly done by means of evil Spirits, who excite them on every side; and then those who place delight in consenting, and in doing as they want, are those who are evil; and those who do not place delight in such things, are among the good. The quantity and quality of what is good are also perceived by the Angels in the Heavens, from the Lord; and it also appears in the lower sphere by the directions of the face and body. Those who turn their eye directly to the evil Spirit, consent fully; those who turn it to the left or to the right, consent more or less; those who turn themselves away, consent the least. Those also who incline the body, and oppose the shoulders, however they are excited, are good. The quality of the good or evil also appears from the folding of the body. Those who hide themselves in vaults, in chambers, in dark places, all appear, and are presented before them. (5069) I saw, also, that when they had been thus separated to the number of many thousands, a certain Spirit came with a banner, and crossed over the mountains and rocks, waving the banner as he passed through; and that then they all appeared as if enfolded in the banner; which, however, was an appearance; for they had become delirious, and could no longer find their houses. Their houses appeared to have been destroyed . . . no otherwise than as is said concerning the inhabitants of Sodom : that they were struck with blindness . . . and this was done for an hour . . . But still they did not even then desist : they remained steadfast as before . . . There followed another Spirit with a banner, who also waved it a second time ; and also a third ; and still they did not desist ; and therefore those who were such were then cast down from the rocks and mountains. (5069) There is a gulf at the left, in a long tract, into which are sent those who cannot be otherwise mastered on account of their contumacy and obstinacy. Those who have been sent into that gulf remain there. Round about, at the sides there, there are persons from various nations ; everyone of which nations is separated from the others ; and those who [had been] in cities there, dwell in cities. There is also Stockholm there ; and other cities as well. There also appear those who are [still] in the world. (5070) There are five kinds of Spirits who ascend upon the rocks, and upon the mountains ; and who are being cast down from them. 1. There is the kind who believe that faith alone saves, and care nothing for the life of faith . . . These are such as act as one with infernal Spirits, and who persecute the good . . . which has been shown by their wishing to dissolve marriages, and to commit whoredom. To (do these two things) is their delight. The reason is that marriages relate to the marriages of good and truth . . . They burn like he-goats with the lust of scortating ; for scortation falls into those who are such. 2. There are those who are in charity as to the confession of the mouth ; but not as to reception in the heart ; for they do not live a life of charity. These are persecutors of faith ; and these also dissolve marriages, and scortate. 3. There are those who are in a holy external, and in no internal . . . 4. All these, in general, are in the sense of the letter of the Word, and not in any doctrine from the Word. They know something from the Word, and apply it to whatever they want [to apply it to] : they explain it in favour of all the cupidities in which they are ; and thus make themselves guiltless. Most of them do not care for the doctrine of the Church . . . There are some who care, as the leading clergy ; but still they do not care for the life. Such are most at this day, who yet are called Christians. 5. There are those who are in a life of piety, and in no life of charity . . . They also study the Word, and the doctrine of the Church ; but only for self ; they also say that everyone ought to sweep his own door . . . they do not want to communicate their meditations to others, either orally, or by writings. In a word, they live for themselves, and not for others. They cause anxiety with others, and aversion as to those things which are of the Church ; because they despise others in comparison with themselves ; and also place merit in those things. They greatly lament when they are being rejected . . . (5073) There is a great gulf at the left side. Into it are being cast those whose interiors had been completely closed, because they had imbued nothing except earthly, corporeal, and worldly things, from the loves of self and of the world. They cannot be led from Heaven ; but only from Hell ; [and] to prevent them from infesting the World of Spirits, they are being cast in there. There walk a vast multitude ; very stupid ; and they are held in check there by a fixed government ; and are shut off as far as possible from influx from the Hells . . . but when externals have been taken away from them, they rush blindly into all crimes. I saw, also, another dispersion of those who are upon the mountains ; they were dispersed in a moment ; and then everyone of them was cast into his own place in the Hells. Thus was the mountain emptied of the evil ; some upright ones remaining.

[D.] 5077-5082. Continuation concerning the Last Judgment. It has been observed that sometimes the worst Spirits betake themselves upon the rocks, and upon the mountains ; and I have wondered why it happened so ; when yet such ought to be shut up in Hell. But the reason is, that in the world they had engaged in the holy things of the Church . . . and had thence formed the opinion that they could come into Heaven. They who are in this idea are admitted upon the rocks and upon the mountains ; for they believe that Heaven is there . . . Therefore do so many among the worst betake themselves thither, and dwell there, until the city is full of such ; when visitation takes place ; and then such a city falls down into Hell ; where they are actually dwelling . . . (5078) When the mountains and rocks have been obsessed by evil Spirits, there also then sometimes comes a wind from the east, which is called in the Word 'the east wind ;' and it dries up all things there ; namely, the gardens, fields, greenswards, and all other things in the fields and plains, and also makes the buildings unsightly ; and their garments are also changed : for that wind comes from the quarter where the Lord is, thus from the Celestial Heaven ; and therefore all evil things are destroyed by it . . . (5079) All who come into the other life have with them the religion which they had in the world . . . Those who are of the Catholic religion who had been their prelates and learned, as the cardinals, bishops, deacons, Jesuits, and many monks, have with them in the other life that in like manner they want to dominate there over the universal world ; and they also excite various crews there, climb the mountains, and send round about guards, and such as infest all others whomsoever they see, if they are not from their religion, and do not adore them. . . The simple obey ; and they command ; for they seek nothing else than that they should have command over the Heavens and over the earths ; and that they may be worshipped as gods. (5080) There are three kinds which it has now been granted to observe. One kind is in the east, in the same quarter where the Lord is as the Sun, upon a mountain there ; and they associate a certain devil . . . whom they place in front of themselves, and say that he is the Lord ; and also, by means of phantasies, they cause a lumen to appear thence, so that he is adored. They who are at the sides, both ways, and behind, ask for and obtain answers from him ; and thus effect evils round about, injuring all who are round about who do not acknowledge them. At the left side are the evil who had said that they have Christ with them ; and they want to be of such great authority that they do not want to be looked at by anyone ; but that they should cast down their eyes, from veneration ; but these were cast down and destroyed. At the other side, are those who had been more learned. There were also some behind, who inflict evils at the command of that devil. I saw Jesuits; I saw others, who entered thither, and made themselves Christ; and also that they were cast down. (5081) There are others far back, in the same quarter: these are such as say that they are Christ; and, wherever they go, they bear with them a sphere of persuasion that they are Christ. They seduce many simple and upright ones; for, from the sphere of their persuasion, they cannot perceive otherwise. These are among the worst; and they do evils in secret: they send such as are behind, and machinate evils in secret. Those there also were sent down into Hell; but still others come in their place . . . (5082) On the other hand, there are others from the same religion . . . who adore the Father, and do not make much of the Son: these are at the front a little to the north, on a lofty mountain; and they see, on a very high mountain, a certain man with a hoary beard, whom they call God the Father; from him they receive commands, even to injure men who are not of the Catholic religion. One from them came to me in a dream by night, at the command of his comrades there, with a mind to injure me in a direful manner, in which they are skilled; but there then went out through my eyes as it were fire from the Lord, by which he, smitten with it, was prostrated backwards; and when I had awaked I spoke with those by whom he had been sent; who said that they were on a high mountain, and that they had received this command from God the Father, who is on that highest mountain; and that he had reiterated that command for them to completely destroy me. When I said to them that it is a devil who appears there, whom they call God the Father, this they denied. It was also shown that it was yawning under that mountain, and that he was cast into Hell: but others succeeded; who also were cast down. They said that they know that they are men who are there; but that God the Father is in them, and speaks through them. He appears to be sitting there on a silver throne; and, when inquiry was made, it was that mountain which is called 'the Mount of Assembly at the sides of the north,' where Lucifer is; according to the things in Is. xiv.; thus that he is Lucifer. That mountain also is at the sides of the north. They were devils, who, from the itch and lust of commanding, rise up, and make themselves God the Father. I read before them the words of Isaiah: the simple of them made acknowledgment; but not the learned of them; as the Jesuits and others, who at heart are atheists. These deliberated this [conclusion], which they also said: that they were doing so in order to persuade the simple that God the Father is there; and that they were admitting such into that mountain, which is 'the Mount of Assembly.' (5082a) A long time after, a like one was placed [there], and was proclaimed as God the Father; and, when exhorted, they would not desist from the acknowledgment [of him]: therefore an infernal and diabolical [fire] burst out from him, and as it were consumed the criminal ones who had placed such a monster there.

5184-5186. There was a plain a little more elevated than a valley. There was a multitude of Spirits there, who were always endeavouring to work evils by cunning. They introduced themselves with others, behind; and also thus obsessed them; they spoke through them, wanting thus to introduce themselves [so as] to lead their thoughts and deeds . . . When a multitude had been congregated thither, and their wickedness had thus been consummated, then came their destruction, or Judgment. That whole plain was turned over, and those who were upon it were overwhelmed with that earth; and then there was opened a plain which was under it; and there [there was] a multitude of other Spirits, who had been in vastation there; who were upright; these succeeded in the place of the former: whence it was evident, that the last devastation, also, or the Last Judgment, is effected by a total overturn. (5185) I saw some other vastations. When these were visited it was found that they could not do otherwise than do harm to the neighbour; and this in various ways. Many mountains and rocks were filled up with such Spirits; and also there where I believed Heaven to be; for so it appeared from the snowy cloud, as it were, upon the summits. But when they had been explored, almost all were cast out thence; so that I believed that thus those mountains were quite destitute of inhabitants; but still, when those had been cast out, others succeeded in their place, to the full number; and I was told, from Heaven, that those who had succeeded in their place had been thrust down from thence by the evil; for the evil ascend on high by means of phantasies; but those who had been there previously, and are good, had then been hidden away there by the Lord, so that they had not been seen by the evil; some of them around them; some under them; and some among them; who, however, were very rarely seen, because they were purer Spirits . . . Hence, then, it is, that the inhabitants of the mountains are upright and good Spirits, and Angels; and that these appear as soon as the evil have been cast down from thence. I saw droves, even to thousands, cast down. Those who have been cast down are borne into valleys; and afterwards to marshes; and some to lakes; and are cast down there; for when they are being cast down their evil is consummated. (5186) From these things it may be evident what is meant by those [good] who are of the first resurrection, and those [evil] who are of the second . . . (See 5203, below.)

5202-5203. Continuation concerning the Last Judgment; and concerning the destruction of Heaven and earth . . . After many particular vastations had been effected, of which above; and those cohorts, which were many, had been cast down from the mountains and rocks; and had been cast into pools, marshes, lakes, and gulfs; whence they can never ascend; there at last came certain ones who set themselves before others, and excited souls against the Lord, and against the Divine truth which is from Him, from whom the whole mass began as it were to be fermented; and it was observed that that crew and tumult spread itself around on all sides, into from ten to twenty mountains and rocks; to those who were above them, and to those who were below; to the roots, and also to the summits, where it was believed that the Heavens were . . . and then some put themselves forward; and the rest adhered to and helped them, solely to destroy those who were in Divine truths from the Lord . . . When, therefore, this was observed, that the contagion was increasing everywhere, then there was a general Advent of the Lord. There appeared as it were a cloudy sphere, which was carried round upon the mountains and rocks, and took away all their inhabitants; not, as before, casting them down; but carrying them away, so that it did not appear whence [it came]; for that Divine sphere passed through into their interiors, which are of the will, or heart; and snatched them away; and they were in a moment translated to lower places, and to the Hells, to which they corresponded; and this to myriads. This was done within the time of an hour. That Divine sphere was carried round and round in a gyre, returning several times; and it thus took away all those who had rebelled. Those not taken away were not seen, because they were hidden; who were those who had not rebelled. The mountains themselves, and the heads of the mountains, receded and subsided; some down to the plain; the cities were thrown down, and there was seen everywhere a solitude. This was the destruction of Heaven and earth, which, in the genuine sense, is meant in the Word by 'the Last Judgment;' in place of which there is expected a New Heaven and a new earth. (5203) Those who were upon the mountains and rocks, were those who are mentioned in the Apocalypse as being of the second resurrection; for the second resurrection is the resurrection of those who are in the Church in the latter times, and who are evil. From the first resurrection [are those] who [had been] in former times; and also [those] who [had been] in worse times, and [had been] good.

[D.] 5207-5222. On the destruction of Babel, and the casting into the lake of sulphur. It has been seen several times before, how the case was with those who were from the Catholic religion, who had been leading clergy . . . namely, certain in the east, where the Lord is as the Sun . . . But those who were there from that religion had made with themselves, by phantasy, a likeness of the Sun . . . They had placed there a certain devil, whom they called Christ; and those around went to him, and returned; and he said to them that he had given them all his Power, and that they may do what they want . . . as yet there were no Jesuits there. Thus had they persuaded the common people, and were keeping them in their former persuasion, lest they should ever come to the Knowledges of truth and good. That phantastic Sun was adored exactly as Christ. This lasted for some time; but when light from Heaven was let in thither . . . that sun was obscured, and became thick darkness; and the devil who was within there appeared in a large tub, which fell down; and again, by phantasies, it was repaired by them, and another devil entered—a certain person known to me in the world, who is now a devil—and so on, several times. But these were destroyed; and were cast into the Hells; and this continually; for many always returned . . . (The narrative as given above, at 5080-5082, is here partially repeated in different words.) (5210) But [concerning] Babylonia itself, and its destruction, I saw the following things. I was introduced, in waking vision, into a certain house like the palace on the Capitoline hill in Rome, where was the seat of a senator there; and I was introduced to him; and I spoke with him. He, with some others, were in the endeavour to form for themselves a doctrine according to which they should live: they accepted some things; but still approved the Catholic monstrosities. . . (5211) But round about were a multitude of such as are called prelates, and also cardinals; and when they perceived that I had spoken with him, and that he seemed to accept some things concerning the Lord, they worked up a rebellion against those who were there. There was a vast multitude which was conspiring; they were extended at my right side, where the southern quarter is. The house was besieged, and they began to break in the windows, and to invade it; saying that he had accepted some things from another religion; and, while the conspiracy was going on, I awoke, and I saw at the entrance as it were his dead body, which they wanted to drag out, but in vain. (5212) Afterwards, the conspiracy, which was a great multitude from such upon the hills to a great extension, was disclosed. When I saw this, I came there in sleep; and then that conspiracy betook itself to me, besieging me around on every side, and also in a long series to the last boundary, wanting thus to completely destroy me; but I then awoke, and was withdrawn from there—illuc—; and then their destruction began. Almost all were destroyed; and were cast into the fourth dark gulf . . . Many thousands were thus destroyed and cast in; and this until the disturbance was quieted. (5213) My sight was then opened as far as one of their boundaries, where sat the chiefs—optimates—who were defending and directing all; there were as many as fifty. They had devised nefarious arts, in order to keep the common people in obedience, and that they might worship them as deities, and that they might not think at all about God, still less about Christ. A multitude came to them, and asked to be intromitted into Heaven; they gave them whatever they could . . . and from their nefarious art they had filled many places with men of various kinds, to whom they sent those who asked to be introduced into Heaven. (These places des.) But these also were cast into the gulfs; partly into the first one; partly into the fourth. (5214) Behind these were seen the cardinals, as many as fifty . . . and I heard them speaking with the former, as to how they deal with the common people; namely, that all those who do not adore them they cast into a certain pit, which is in place of the Inquisition . . . and also, from nefarious art, they labour to deprive them of life itself . . . by tearing out their hearts . . . They leave no Power at all to the Lord. These, because they were such, were cast into the lake of sulphur . . . (5215) . . . No one ever appears who had been a Pope in the world; and, if he does appear, he is carried away in a moment, and is cast into a place which corresponds to his life . . . (5216) Their situation was [that] those who were more remote were ruling the anterior ones; hence the cardinals were further away. These inflowed into the lowest parts of the left foot, because they are more sensuous than all others. The inmost evil ones from that religion inflowed into the testicles, and inflicted a certain pain in their interiors; a sign that they are utterly against the interior things of Heaven. (5217) Those who were carried away into the lakes, were carried away in a moment; for, when the Divine is admitted, they are then in a moment where their loves are . . . (5218) They were told how great a crime they are committing. They completely withhold men from Divine truths, by which is their way to salvation . . . They persuade them to believe what they [say] . . . They withdraw them from the Lord, to worship men in the world, and . . . saints. All these things [are] for the end that they may dominate over souls, from the love of self; and they also labour, by various arts, to possess the earth; for which nefarious ends they use holy means, which are of the Church, which is a profane thing; and therefore they are Babel, and Babylonia, and the beast spoken of in the Apocalypse. (5219. The Societies into which were sent those who asked for Heaven, des.) (5220) The greatest part of those who had claimed for themselves the Divine Power of saving men . . . are cast into the fourth gulf, or chasm, which is towards the north . . . for such are in all blindness, and also in wickedness. I saw a great number cast thither. Their life there is infernal—in hatreds, in revenges, in fiercenesses, in continual scoldings, in intestine enmity. (5221) There are [some] sitting at the right, that is, towards the south, round a table, and deliberating concerning worship, as to how God is to be worshipped if He gives them His Power of dominating on earth in His stead; and how if He does not give it. (Their further deliberations stated.) (5222. See FERMMENT, here.)

5228. Where I before wrote about the devastation, or Last Judgment, and about the casting out from the rocks and mountains, [it was about] those who were from the Christian religion in faith alone, who had thought nothing about the life, but only about doctrine . . .

5229-5239. Continuation concerning the destruction of Babel. In that chamber which is at the right, where . . . they were sitting at a table . . . that referred to the Papal Consistory; for they are not allowed to have a Consistory [such] as there is in the world. But more remotely towards the south were those who had been cardinals, who were ruling those who were in the chamber. The Popes were still further away; but did not dare to show themselves; for whenever they showed themselves, and wanted to command, they were cast down with punishment; and, in fact, into a certain gulf. Those who were in that chamber had their eyes round about, as far as the remote mountains. Communication was given them through the whole tract where is that religion; and they were continually giving them commands as to what they should do . . . These performed them obsequiously, as if it were from the Papal Consistory. Those in that chamber were being changed from day to day, and others succeeded in their place; this was being done by the cardinals behind . . . (5230) The things which now follow are of more importance. For half a day . . . there was as it were a quiet with me; but still I perceived that round about there was a great tumult. There were then being collected all who had been in greater dignity—digniores—than the rest, who [had been] in monasteries and in churches—monks, abbots, priests, prelates—from all sides, to myriads. . . When all had been collected, and separated from others, it then appeared that they were machinating against the Lord; and that they were thinking that He has no Power; and the greatest part of them, that there is no Lord . . . and that they profess Him solely for the reason that they may command. In a word, the greatest part were pure atheists; and yet they had been such as had been set over others, and had vaunted the Lord as most holy. Then they began to persecute those whom the Lord was protecting . . . for Angels had been sent from Heaven, [and] against these they were directing their persecutions. It was then said in a loud voice, which was heard everywhere round about, that they were persecuting the Lord . . . and that they make nothing of Him . . . besides other like things. It was then seen that many departed from them; namely, all those whom they had excited in order that they might stand on their side, and fight against the Lord. These receded, saying that they had not believed them to be such; but that they acknowledge the Lord. There afterwards remained all those who had either depreciated or denied the Lord, and had arrogated all Power to themselves under the Lord's name—there were more than a myriad, all eminent in the world. (5231) Then on my right side . . . a rather large mountain there was split open . . . so that there was made a long chasm; the length was southern, the sides of the chasm being to the east and west; and (it) yawned on the western side to a level directly towards the deep; and the depth was greater the nearer it [approached] the south, so that at last no bottom appeared; and it was dark there; the eastern side was a precipice. That vast opening was seen, and it was horrible. (5232) It was then seen that those who were nearest descended first by that declivity; and that they were driven by force to descend, and that they could not resist. There appeared a very high peak beside that chasm, on which were those who had been in the greatest love of self . . . these were carried down the declivity. At last others also began to be brought there, from the surrounding mountains; and then it appeared that the peaks of the mountains became continuous, and cohered; and then there was carried along it a vast multitude from every mountain round about; from the western, the northern, and the eastern quarters; all went round towards the west, and were brought to that declivity, and were cast down: this lasted some time . . . In a word, from every mountain, such ones—of whom afterwards—were being carried; and were being cast down into that deepest chasm—the more deeply, the more they had been in the love of self, and at the same time in the denial of the Lord . . . Some also wanted to humble themselves, who appeared to let themselves down deeply at the west; but as it was from hypocrisy, they were forced to ascend, and were in like manner cast down. There were myriads (of them). (5233) It is to be known that those who were on the mountains at the south were those who were in the greatest lumen of nature, whereby they confirmed themselves against the Divine . . . At the north were those who had been in an obscure lumen of nature, and yet had thought the like. Those at the east were those who had been in the greatest delight of commanding, and also in natural lumen thence; and they had done the like. Those at the west had been in such [a principle] obscurely. . . They were borne away thence in order, according to their state—first, the southern ones; then the northern ones; then the eastern ones; and lastly the western ones. But those who were in the east were borne through the northern to the western [side]; and thus into that infernal chasm . . . (5234) Afterwards, that southern remote mountain was opened, nearly where that chasm terminated there; and that which was above was rolled down; and then appeared the abode of the cardinals, which was long; and conclaves [appeared] there in a long series, one behind another; they had been long there. In front of those conclaves there was the chamber. Behind the series of those conclaves, such conclaves were also continued still more remotely; it was perceived that the Popes were there, but they did not dare to show themselves. . . Finally, many were withdrawn from thence, and were also cast into that long chasm of the mountains. A like abode appeared at the north, in exactly the same line, but afar, where were like conclaves, and like persons, namely cardinals, but who were not in such erudition, and derivative natural lumen . . . still they corresponded. These also had wanted to make for themselves a chamber there, thus to act a Consistory; but this was forbidden. (5235) At last very many were seen to flow together from various mountains, and to be brought from elsewhere. There was a huge gulf at the west, at the right there, where there appeared a vast luminous fieriness; thither were brought those who were in the last [of the order of the Judgment]; and it was said that they were those who had sought out from the Word confirmations in favour of the papal Power, and in favour of such things as that religion was establishing, thus who were more learned from the Word than others, and yet at heart denied the Divine. This fiery place had not been seen before. (5236) Those from the crowd of that nation who had lived in mutual charity, and had done what is good according to their religion, rejoiced that this had been done; saying that they had been previously kept away by such from thinking about the Lord. . . (5237) That great chasm was immensely enlarged below, so that it was a vast subterranean Hell, in which they were . . . kept in order. . . The disposition into order in Hell was seen in the southern gulf, whither Angels were sent, through whom the Lord disposed into order all who were there. . . (5238) That infernal chasm into which were cast those who had been in a more eminent place is kept closed beneath, but open above; and into it are cast all who had been such from the beginning of the Christian religion, wherever they are found; and into it are cast all such who are coming from the world into the other life; for that Hell is now for the first time opened, or prepared for them; hence it is always kept open above. I have seen them cast down afterwards also. (5239) Some said that they believed the Last Judgment takes place in the world; but this is contrary to the Word where it treats of the Last Judgment (Matt.xxiv.); and it could not be, because the human race is the foundation from which is Heaven; and moreover the Word is there, which is as the basis; and because the foundations are not to be destroyed.

These things happened in the last days of the year 1756.

[D.] 5240-5248. Concerning the form of Heaven, and the situation of the peoples and nations there; and concerning the Mohammedans and the Gentiles there. The Christians are in the middle; still their extension is to all the quarters, according to their states as to the light of truth and love of good. Around this middle are the Mohammedans; these make the next circumference or circuit; and this also to all the quarters round about; the like lands, mountains, rocks, and valleys are there. Outside this circuit are the Gentiles, ordained relatively to the quarters, according to their lumen of truth and love of good. Outside these, there appeared as it were a sea, which was the boundary. It is to be observed, that all these, taken together, were not extended into a plane, but into a globe, like the Earth; and therefore, when I was brought to the Gentiles, after I had passed through the Mohammedans, I was descending by a slope. (5241) I was brought to the Mohammedans towards the east. . . They said that many. . . from the Catholic religion come to them, with a mind to convert them; but that they perceive it to be done for the sake of gain and for the sake of dominion. (The Angels explain the Divine Trinity to them.) (5242) The Mohammedans comprehended this, and said that they want to think about it. . . (5243) As concerns Mohammed, he is not among the Mohammedans, but among the Christians. . . I also heard him speaking there, and saying that he now acknowledges the Lord as the only God. . . (5244) Afterwards, I was brought . . . to the Gentiles who are towards the east; to whom I was borne downwards, following the declivity of the globe. . . They said that they are sorrowful, because the Divine does not appear to them; and that they nevertheless think of the Divine, and worship and speak about Him; and that if there is a Divine, at least one should be sent who would teach them; but that this has long been expected in vain—thus supposing that He has deserted them altogether—and therefore they can see nothing else than that they must perish. But the Angels spoke to them from Heaven, saying that the Divine could not be manifested to them, because they had not wanted to believe that God Man had been born into the world; and that until they believe this not anything can be revealed; for this is the first itself, and the fundamental itself, of all revelations. They said that they do indeed believe that God is a Man; but that they cannot believe that God has been born a Man in the world, because they cannot comprehend this. (The Angels explain to them how it was.) On hearing these things, they said that they had known no otherwise than that He had been like another man, born of a man father. . . but that now they know that the Lord had not been such a man in the world. . .

5249-5257. Continuation concerning the destruction of Babel. After these things had been accomplished, there came continual infestations from the northern quarter verging to the western; there were the monks of the various orders, and others who had congregated thither from the first origin of Babel; and I marvelled how there could have been such a multitude upon one mountain. I was conducted thither, and it was then discovered that there were cities there, one under another; and a great cavern thence towards the lower parts; and that there also was a vast multitude there; and that those who were below had been in a more eminent state, because thus they were in greater safety than those who were above; and that those who were above had thence their more important commands. They dwelt thus. (The relative situation of these four cities, one beneath another; and of the communicating cavern, shown by a drawing.) Those who were there had been there from ancient times, and they are distinct from the moderns of a like nature... (5250) It was said that there were many myriads there; more than hundreds [of myriads]; and that there are monasteries there; and that these had subjected to themselves all there... (5251) Hence it was evident whence so vast a multitude could have place in one mountain, at which I had previously wondered... (5252) Besides, a vast multitude can hide itself in one city by this: that a great part does not appear; for those who are of another genius, or who turn themselves to other quarters there, thus to other falsities and evils, or to other loves, at once become invisible; and only those are visible who are in a like faith and love with them. Hence it is that sometimes inhabitants appear who had not done so before; and that to those who come thither they appear few or many. The houses also disappear with them; and appear when they are seen... (5253) Before I was brought to that mountain, I saw an opening made along the length of that mountain on the anterior side, and many cast thither; as into the opening made in the southern mountain, of which before. (5254) I saw that there was a visitation there lasting some hours, and then a silence... and then those were marked who were there in the monasteries, who had wanted to be lords of Heaven and earth, and to command all souls, and subject them to themselves by means of holy things; these were marked, and were presently cast out thence into the northern gulf; and partly into the southern one; according to the obscurity, or clearness, of their natural lumen. All who were there had been subject to the monks; there were innumerable monasteries there—a most idle crew—who had subjugated others by means of holy things; and many by magic, by phantasies, and the rest by violence; and this more than in the world. When I afterwards directed my eye there, the monasteries then appeared empty. (5255) Those who were sitting in the windings of the cavern, who also were many, and were guarding it; and who carried the commands through, and kept up the communication, and thus kept the common people in compliance, were afterwards cast down; they were commingled with the Gentiles who had worshipped idols, and had thought nothing about God; they were also cast into the lakes and marshes towards the west, of which below. (5256) Afterwards, the rest of the crowd were taken out thence; and, according to their evils and goods, were dispersed; some hither, and some thither. Lastly, those who were in the lowest place and dominated over all... among whom were cardinals—a great part of whom were cast into the gulfs; some into the southern chasm, into which the mountain had been divided, of which above. (5257) At last that place was destroyed from the bottom, so that no mountainous place appeared there; but as it were all smoke; and this into the deep, so that there was no longer any abode there.

5258-5262. On the Mohammedans, and their Last Judgment. I saw that they were brought from the west in a great multitude by a way towards the north, to the east, apparently in a circular way, and on the way those who were evil, who were being separated from the rest, were cast outside that sphere, where there is a space of great extent; there was a desert there, and marshes, lakes, and forests; and into these were cast those who had led an evil life. This space was at the back of that mountain spoken of above, where there were such a multitude of monasteries... At the side of that space, towards the north, there was a huge extended gulf, into which many were cast, concerning whom below. (5259) The rest went on in a circuit further towards the east, and there spread themselves over a wide and extended space more at the back; those were brought thither who had acknowledged God the Father, and the Son as a Prophet; and with the Father also in the Sun. Here, therefore, were the better ones. That wide and extended space was divided into mountains and valleys, upon which they were ordained; and there it is well with them. (5260) Those who are still better, who are such as have enjoyed greater lumen than the rest, were brought to the front, where there is a communication with the Christian Heaven. It is an interstitial space, where, having been instructed, they receive the Lord; and they are carried through towards the south; and have their Heaven there behind the Christians there... (5260a) There are two Mohammeds, who have their place among the Christians; at the left, below. As these began to rebel against the Lord, by claiming Power to themselves, the one who was nearest was cast down from his place into the lowest deep, and there was bound with chains... and this with his courtiers; I saw the earth open itself beneath them, and they were swallowed up. (5261) Afterwards, the other, who in like manner was claiming for himself the Lord's Power, was cast into one of the gulfs. (5262) When this had been done, a mighty tumult arose among the Mohammedans who were at the east behind the Christians; but they were brought away from thence, and part of them were cast into that desert, and the adjoining chasm; the rest were led round, and were either dispersed on the way, or brought to the places where their seat was; some to their Heavens at the east and at the south; many were also brought in a straight way across the plain where the Christians and the Mohammeds had been, towards the west.

chasms on both sides descending into the deep, into which their evil ones were cast, who had worshipped idols, and had thought nothing about God, and at the same time had lived an evil life. (5265) There is also a similar chasm at the north side of the Mohammedan desert, into which were cast their worst ones, and also those of the Catholic religion who had worshipped the idols of the saints, and had thought nothing about the Lord; these were commingled with the Gentiles, and cast in thither. (5266) Those from the Catholic religion who had adored idols, and had not thought about the Lord, were taken out from the northern quarter under the mountains there, and were commingled with the Gentiles, and, together with them, were brought to their places; in like manner as the Gentiles, because their lot is similar. (5267) I afterwards saw the whole northern valley, as far as the mountains there, upturned from the bottom; and all there were dispersed, and were partly commingled with the Gentiles, and others; and then there appeared there also as it were a smokiness.

[D.] 5269-5279. Concerning the destruction of Babel, and concerning the great city there between the north and the west. Between the north and west, behind the Babylonish city spoken of above (5249-5257), there was a mountain which was continued into a country of mountains and plains further away, and also on both sides, towards the north even to the southern quarter, and on the other side to the eastern one, so that on the other side of that mountain, and at the sides, there was a tract great and wide. (5270) Upon that mountain there was a little city, in the midst of which was a Pope; his palace was exactly like the papal palace on the Monte Cavallo, in Rome. But there was a great city within the mountain, than which there is no larger anywhere; it also extended from the northern quarter as far as the east—which it entered, but only a little—and, on the other side, through the western quarter as far as the southern: it was also very broad. There was there a vast multitude of men from various religions, but still the city was of the Catholic religion... but beneath that under-city there was not another city. (5271) This city was very full of monasteries of men—there were many thousands of them—so that it was completely monastic, except to some extent in the middle towards the west, and on the side towards the east; the rest of the city was nothing but monasteries. All the people there were subject to those who were there, as servants are to their lords; and moreover if anyone had anything from the Divine Blessing, they entered thither, and consumed it, until there was nothing left. They had heaped together and hidden away in their monasteries whatever they could, thus living at their inclination, without use for the public; caring for external things and for scarcely anything else; they taught nothing, but only showed a holy external, which was utterly hypocritical, and also profane. I found in that city some I knew. (5272) I was brought thither when the visitation had begun; and then they first carried out an idol of Mary, which was most holy to them, of gold, dressed as usual; and then the Pope was led out into another place towards the north; whither, I do not know; it was perceived that in life in the world he had been blind—perhaps he was saved. (5273) The visitation then entered into that great under-city; there was a great opening in front, and a way thence to both sides, and also in front; but it was first elevated there, and afterwards there was a descent, for the reason that this entrance should not open on that side where the former city was. (5273a) It is first to be known that the dominion of that Pope was over the whole of that wide and large tract spoken of above... where villages and houses were closely [packed], so that his Power was most extended. (5274) When the visitation had entered... then all who were in the monasteries were brought out, even until they were all evacuated; a Divine force impelled them, so that no one could withstand it; but all were brought forth through that exit. Those who were brought out first, were borne to a place in front—of which before—which had been a valley beneath which were many Hells, which were cast out... in a word, all the northern quarter, as far as the mountain[lands]. At that time there was a great marsh there, into which were cast those who were brought out first; of whom there was a vast number. Those who were brought out afterwards, were carried to that southern mountain chasm—into which the mountain had yawned, as said above—and were there driven into the deep. In the last place, there were brought out some who appeared altogether hard-skinned—callosi—; who are such as have nothing of good left, and are in the love of self above others. These were cast [into] a darksome cavern beneath that mountain, at the side of that marshy valley. Thus were all the monasteries evacuated, and they were afterwards destroyed, so that the city was completely devoid of monasteries. (5275) Afterwards, inquiry was made in the city as to where the wicked were; and they were all cast out, in a great multitude; and were cast into the same marsh towards the east; and some into the Hells of the Gentiles. Thus was that city purified; and the people who stayed there, and who live well... were left there. (5276) Afterwards, the visitation arrived upon the mountainous region at the back of the city... and all the wicked were brought out thence, and were cast into the Hells, and also into the gulfs. (5278) It was told the rest in that city that they should receive their governors, judges, and moderators, and also their priests; whom I also saw sent thither. The situation of that city was... (The relative situations of the mountain above, where the little city was; of the entrance into the great city below; of the northern extension thereof; of its insinuation into the east; of its western extension round to the south; of the part of it where there were no monasteries, because they were of another religion; and of the great tract where were the villages and thickly-peopled plains—shown by a drawing.)

5277. I was afterwards brought to the eastern gulf; and I saw that all things there were being ordained and disposed: to every evil were being given its own places; and those were being set over who were to have the care [of them]; and that the crowd which was not so wicked had been taken out and carried elsewhere.

5280-5304. Concerning Babel, or the great Babylonia between the west and the south. There was still a great city extending itself from the west towards the south—towards the south as far as to the chasm there, into which the mountain yawned . . . and towards the boundary from that western side in the corner, where terminated that great subterranean city, of which I have just treated. (5281) As the situation of this city was (such), all those had congregated there who had excelled others in the lumen of nature; and who in the world had been esteemed above others for their cleverness, and for the art of machinating—there especially was the abode of the Jesuits. (5282) Their dominion is round about there for a considerable distance; it is a continuous mountain[land]. But it is to be observed that that city does not appear above the mountain, but they enter through a great cavern, and descend from the midst of the mountain, and then [enter] into that great city. (5283) In like manner those who dwell in that great tract around—neither do these appear above the mountain[land]; but beneath it; and they descend through the cavern to their villages and homes. (5284) The reason is that everywhere there wander about robbers and magicians, and a crowd which can destroy them by magical arts and by phantasies; and therefore they had lowered themselves down beneath the mountain[land]; where also there is light as above; for the mountain[land] does not obstruct the light. (5285) They who dwell in that great city, and they who dwell without it, beneath the mountain[land] in that great tract, are mostly rich men . . . There are innumerable monasteries there; the whole city consists of them, and of the rich among them. (5286) The Jesuits and monks there . . . scrape together riches, and hide them in the deep where they have cells, full of gold, silver, and diamonds and precious stones . . . There are chambers within chambers, dark . . . (5288) They knew how the cities had fared, of which above, and therefore they . . . hid their more precious things in crypts that were still darker . . . (5289) I spoke with them concerning their life in the world—that they care nothing for Heaven, and do not believe in it, but only seduce the rich people in order to have their riches, and to dominate; and therefore, by various arts, they insinuate themselves into all the palaces—aulas—; and that they keep the common people in the darkest ignorance, and thus block up the way to Heaven . . . It was said there, that they continually perform masses, as in the world; and always in a foreign language which is not understood by the people; and that they place all worship in such things . . . (5290) When they perceived that the Last Judgment was at hand, they hid away in the crypts their more precious things, as the diamonds and precious stones; and they carried out the gold; there were many idols of gold. (5291) The relative situation of the surrounding mountain land, where the rich dwell underneath; of the mountain beneath which is the great city; of the cavern by which they descend; of the great city; of its quarters; of the cavern leading into the cellars where their riches are; and the spiral passages by means of which they make the chambers there dark, where the most precious things are—which chambers are finally wound into each other, or reciprocally,—(shown by a drawing.) They descend into that city through the cavern, and they ascend by means of circular stairs . . . and also by sloping [flights of] steps, broad ones; because a multitude is continually going out and entering. (5292) I saw them carrying out their gold, wanting to hide it with others who dwell beneath the mountain[land]. Some received it; some sent it back again, saying that they have no business with such things. All the rich are admitted, from whatever region they may be—they dwell round about beneath the mountain[land] there; and also some rich Jews, for they think about nothing else than riches and command—some, about command for the sake of riches; some, about riches for the sake of command; some, about both. (5293) They had also made a communication for themselves, from the midst there, with the Hells under the earth of the southern part, and used then to defend themselves by magic, and by various nefarious arts; and to destroy others and also to compel others, who would not submit themselves, and who would not give them their riches. In the Hells there, the more a devil was skilled in nefarious arts, the more acceptable he is. (5294) They placed in their interior cells dust from the ground, which they sacredly believed to be truth, and then immediately the ground there began to boil up under the treasures, and thus to be turned up . . . and then there was an earthquake, and many from the neighbouring Hells were injected, whence a panic terror seized them, and all who were in the monasteries rushed out of them, and betook themselves, through the caverns, upon the mountain plain, where there then appeared a vast multitude of Jesuits and monks, who in the world had been more ingenious in studies, arts, intrigues, and machinations. Those who were in the palaces there, who stood at the windows, remained quiet until the monasteries had been evacuated; but when they also were thrown down by the earthquake, they rushed out. (5295) Some also who had been wholly devoted to riches, in heart let themselves down to their treasures, and firmly resolved to die there . . . but at last they were cast out, each one carrying golden idols with him, but they were compelled to cast them away. (5296) Then the mountain above began to be carried away, and the whole city was presented to view, with magnificent monasteries, their temples, and the rest of the palaces, which were then seen; and an ebullition burst forth from the place below where their treasures were; then an east wind . . . came, and took away the whole city, and annihilated it into smoke, and cast it into the western sea . . . (5297) Afterwards, the Hells also which were intermediate between the centre and that city were cast out from the bottom, and they who were there were cast forth into the Hells of the Gentiles, which are in the west . . . (5298) This lasted for some time; and first there was seen as it were a flood which spread over the whole there, and at last it was seen to be divided off by a kind of precipice between the Hells and the tract dominated by that city. (5299) At last the tract dominated by that city, where the rich dwelt beneath the mountain[land], was also cast out; and those who were there burst out; some hither, some thither. (5300) When this had been completed, the whole of that Jesuitical and monkish crowd was led down to the western sea, to the side which looks towards the south: they stood in a long row on the shore, and were cast into that sea . . . (5301) Thus perished that great [city] which is Babylonia, with all its riches, which they had scraped together for ages, believing that these would save them, and that no Judgment would ever come . . . (5303) Finally, something black was seen flying over the place where that city had been; it was a monster of a dragon . . . (5302) In order that an idea may be had of the situation, which has been a little confused, on account of the turning to a quarter opposite to those who are above me (the relative situations of the greatest city, treated of in 5269-5279; of the rich city of Babylonia, now treated of; of the sea; of the tract subject to the rich city; of the tract subject to the greatest city; of the Hells of the northern part, which were made a marsh; and of the Hells of the southern part, the inhabitants of which were cast into the Hells of the Gentiles—[are here] shown by a drawing). (5304) The sphere which exhaled from those who were in that rich city was such that it took away from others all the perception and sensation of good and of delight . . . The reason was that they were in the sphere of the delight of the love of the world and of self . . .

[D.] 5305-5307. Continuation concerning the great city between the west and the north, treated of in 5269-5279. In the western tract subject to that city or Pope, were very many monasteries, most of them under the mountain land—terra. The monks there went out to seek for Souls, and to subjugate them; which was done in the night-time. When it was found that they had such an intention, they were all cast, partly into the northern marsh, partly into a dark cavern, and partly into a certain gulf. This happened with every one in a moment, as with all the rest in that city. (5306) Afterwards, an earthquake arose in that tract, and the rest were terrified by it and rushed out. There was a vast number, who were all cast into their Hells. The reason was also told them—that they most carefully keep the people in darkness . . . and thus prevent them from being taught by the Lord through Angels; and thus they completely take away from them all the means of salvation . . .

5315-5321. Continuation concerning Babel. In the western tract there is a vast number of monasteries for men; but not upon that tract, except a few for the purpose of observation . . . They are beneath the earth, and there are many dwelling-places there, and as it were small cities full of monasteries. The number of the monasteries exceeds the number in the world, from ten to twenty times; for a monastery which for example had 50, now also has just as many. The rest who had lived in previous centuries make for themselves similar monasteries round about there, but beneath the mountain land. The whole western tract is full of such. (5316) The western tract which is subject to the greatest city is full of similar monasteries; namely, of such as had not been so wealthy. But those which were wealthy dwelt in the part from the west to the south, thus in the tract subject to the rich city. (5317) The former multitude has collected since the time of the Reformation; and the latter are those who dwell beneath the mountain land. Those, however, who lived in the dark ages, dwell below, where there is a vast tract for them and their common people. The dwelling-places there range in a circuit of wide extent in all directions, so that that tract is full of them; but beneath those who lived after the times of the Reformation. Those who are from the dark ages dwell beneath them, as has been said, widely extended; for when the latter came, they let themselves down there. Except in the middle, these cannot ascend to those who are above; but this rarely happens, because it is closed up there. (Illustrated by a drawing.) They seek for ways to emerge, but find none. Sometimes some of them appear; some appear like gods, because they want thus to be worshipped; and some like robbers. They are in the greatest darkness, and do not know anything of doctrine. (5318) Almost similarly, beneath the western tract, dwell the rich who lived in the dark ages, and those who lived after them; the latter above, and the former beneath; but the rich only. If they appear above, as sometimes happens by means of thoughts, they are then in various ways cast back by those who dwell above . . . for those above are afraid lest they, rather than themselves, should carry off the gains from the common people. (5319) They have lumen there, but it is dim—it is a fatuous lumen. They are allowed to go and dwell round about, and also to let themselves down still deeper, but not to rise up. When they walk, they always turn their backs to the Lord as a Sun . . . They are wholly idolatrous. They worship idols sacredly, and not the Lord, because they say that they have got all His Power. (5320) They also possess hidden treasures, and set their hearts on them . . . From their phantastic faith . . . the treasures remain there . . . They always say that they are destitute. (5321) With those in the western tract, in the confines between the rich and those not so rich, the interior [parts] were opened on the side of the rich, and the dwelling-places there appeared, both higher and lower . . . Their destruction was at hand; and therefore, being terrified, they rose up . . . and carried forth their gold, silver, diamonds, and precious things . . . They ascended by steps in a circuit or spiral, and the steps appeared full of men.

5322-5336. Concerning the total destruction of Babylonia. Babylonia was the name of those two tracts which were subject to the two cities which were in the two corners. (See the drawing referred to in no. 5303.) These two tracts were properly called Babylonia, because riches abounded there, and those who were there set their hearts on them alone. The other two tracts, namely, from the middle of the western to the far end of the northern, which were subject to the greatest city, were also Babylonia, but not so properly as the two former ones, because in these two tracts there were not such great riches. (5323) After the confine between the southern and western [quarters] had been destroyed . . . a total vastation began to enter that great tract which was Babylonia; in which, as said above, there dwelt a great multitude, one stratum above the other; namely, those who [had lived] before the time of the Reformation, beneath; and those [who had lived] after it, above. (5324) At first [it was effected] by an east wind, which was sent first through the southern tract, and advanced to the western, as far as the boundary which is in the middle of the western tract; and it carried away the mountain land above . . . until there first appeared the under mountain land laid bare ; and then there appeared the nature of that subterranean land ; namely, that it was full of palaces and monasteries. Around the chasm above-mentioned, there appeared nothing except a kind of obscurity ; afterwards, in that southern tract, the rich who were devoid of monasteries, in great numbers ; so that it was as if that whole tract had been built underneath ; and then the tract as far as the western confine ; and thence to the middle boundary in the west, where there were magnificent monasteries in immense numbers. (5325) Then, too, all the accumulations between the palaces and the monasteries were carried away by east and west winds, which went in order, one after another ; and thus that first stratum was laid bare down to the foundations ; and even to their treasures, which were beneath the monasteries. (5326) When this had been done, the rich, who occupied the front tract, were cast down thence into the Hells of the Gentiles . . . and the monks and priors, and all the prelates, when they saw all things laid bare, burst out from their monasteries, and were carried along to the western sea, at its northern part. (5327) Those rich who were in front had done nothing else than eat and drink, and amuse themselves . . . not even thinking about any God. They had a worship, but it was . . . a mere matter of habit . . . All their furniture was of gold and silver, and precious stones. These were they who were cast into the Hells of the Gentiles. . . (5328) After this had been done, then all the palaces and monasteries were turned into smoke, which smoke advanced to the western sea ; and also all the hidden riches, which went away into smoke, and were cast into the sea. After this had been done, a stronger east wind arose, and carried away the other mountain roof in both tracts, and this advanced to the other two tracts, as far as the corner between the north and the east, where it stopped. That wind was seen to pass through the whole, going and returning, and continuing, until all those things had been laid bare down to the bottom ; thus those two strata ; and when these had been laid bare, there appeared everywhere nothing but monasteries, with some of the common people around them for service—there lived the monks like gods, and the common people adored them as their gods. (5330) So great was the thick darkness in the second stratum, that they vaunted themselves as gods, and said that the Lord has no power, and that they had all . . . (5331) All these, the number of whom was vast, were conducted to the northern shore of the western sea, and were cast into the sea ; and all the monasteries crumbled into dust, and [everything that was in them] went away into smoke, and was carried down into that sea. (5332) I afterwards saw a kind of atmosphere fall down from Heaven, which completely devastated all those tracts, so that they became a desert. (5333) There afterwards came merchants, of whom a great number were wont to come chiefly to the southern quarter ; and they sought for the rich who had been there, but did not find anything ; so they went away sad. Some flocked thither to draw out the gold and silver from the bottom, but they sought for it in vain. (5334) Afterwards, there exhaled from that place a smoke as of sulphur, advancing to the western sea. (5335) It was also observed that some who had dwelt rather near the city of the rich, in the southern tract, had as it were a millstone around the left arm, the arm being inserted into the middle of it ; which was a representative that they had confirmed their wicked dogmas from the Word . . . (5336) Thus has Babylonia been completely devastated and destroyed on three sides, the southern, the western, and the northern. This commenced at the end of the year 1756, and in the beginning of the year 1757. Yesterday and to-day these three tracts [were destroyed]. To-day is the sixth day of January, 1757.

5337–5346. Concerning Babylonia at the eastern quarter. There were also very many of the same religion in the east, where mountains are seen ; and there also there were monasteries, and the common people in subjection ; but those were there who had been pious, and upright . . . They had been taken out from those treated of above, and had been translated towards the east, into the mountains there, where they had their own religion. . . (5338) Those who dwelt in the corner between the south and the east, in monasteries, were cast out of them, and passed through the southern plain about the middle as far as the west ; and those who were near them, more to the east, crossed the northern plain about the middle as far as the western tract, which had been devastated ; and thence advanced to the corner between the west and the north, following an angular or interstitial line, as far as those who were in almshouses, and still further very remotely ; and thence they betook themselves towards the western quarter, at the other side of the destroyed tract, and there were allotted their residence. . . (5339) There was still what is hypocritical with them . . . the reason being that they had indeed been in external holiness, and also in interior holiness above others, but yet with a mind to command others . . . and as they were in thick darkness as to Divine things, only worshipping the saints more devoutly than others, therefore they were removed so far away ; and there was then given them the other western tract to dwell in. (5340) After these had been driven away, then there were driven away those who are in the eastern quarter in the middle ; and on both sides of the middle ; and they were led around a little towards the corner or the interstitial line between the east and the north, and were very far removed ; and then they were dispersed into the northern plain, beyond that tract which had been destroyed . . . There was a vast multitude ; and they occupied much of the space around that tract nearly as far as to the angular line between the north and the west . . . They were those who had made themselves a sun by phantasy . . . who have been treated of before. Such as were there were in thick darkness, and believed themselves to be led by the Lord, but that the Lord does nothing except through them . . . (5341) Lastly, the visitation arrived at the corner between the north and the east ; and, on both sides there, through a long tract in the country there, there were monasteries for virgins and [other] women, of whom there was a vast number, in triplicate strata, below and above. All the women in the monasteries were brought out, and those of them who had led an evil life, especially by adulteries and whoredoms, and those who had become profane by an evil life contrary to their religion—these were brought forth in front, into the boundary of the corner ; and on both sides there, at the north and east, for some space, there was made a great and deep chasm, and all such were cast into it. (5342) The rest of the women, who had led a life according to their religiosity, and at the same time had been in some work, and had not been idle, were brought out towards the east . . . so that they might settle there, and form a Society without monasteries; but only a few remained there; they returned, desiring the monasteries. Those women who had lived in idleness, studying nothing else than external piety, were distributed among the followers of their own religion, in order that they might act as servants there, and learn to work . . . (5343) The rest, also women, who were diligent in serving others there, in various ways; for food; for garments . . . and who did this from affection and religion—these were brought outside the tract of the Church, in order that they might form a Society there; in a place safe from infestations by the men; in order that they might there learn the truths of faith; for such ones learn, but not those who have been idle. That Society has been formed in the confines between the south and the west, far away . . . (5344) There afterwards came many travellers—merchants from various nations, and monks who had been travelling and absent then; and when they saw all things there laid waste and deserted, they lamented exceedingly: this lasted for days. (5345) Those who are in the sea, and those who are in the gulfs, dare not raise their heads out of them; for as soon as they do so they are frightfully tortured; for there prevails around a completely different sphere, which is opposite. (5346) Those who were in the west had been in the greatest love of self, and had had command as their end; in the east those who had been in the delight of the love of exercising command; in the north those who had been in dim lumen concerning everything; and in the south, those who had excelled in cleverness.

[D.] 5347–5356. Concerning the Last Judgment of those who are called Protestants . . . Those from the Lutheran religion, the Calvinistic, and from others in the Christian world, except the Papists, were in the middle; but below, upon a hill, and a little round about it, were those who were from a genuine faith, and who were at the same time in the good of life; while above them, on an extensive mountain, and on the mountain land round about, were those who had been external men . . . who had known the Word . . . and had frequented places of worship, but had cared nothing whatever for the life . . . These were on that mountain, in the middle, and on the mountain land around, where there were various cities, and a vast multitude. All these were brought down below the mountain land as far as the boundary of the Catholic religion, and were there brought down into a steep or sloping chasm—dark, wide, and large. Those who were on the southern part of that mountain and mountain land, were brought down into that wide and dark chasm which is at the northern boundary; and in like manner those who were at the eastern quarter there; all in their order; those who were in the eastern quarter into that chasm at the southern nearer towards the east; those who were in the southern, in order towards the west there; but those who were in the western quarter of the mountain, were brought down into a large, steep, and dark chasm which yawned at the boundary of the western tract; and were there cast deeply down. (5348) There were first brought down the southern ones; afterwards the western ones; and finally the eastern ones there. This took place at the same time as when the eastern Papists were brought down beyond the northern tract . . . (5349) Those who were brought down into those chasms at the boundaries were those who had led an evil life . . . (5350) When this had been done, their dwelling-places were laid waste and dispersed. Most were from those outside the cities. (5351) Afterwards, a vast number of those who are called Protestants, and who vaunted faith alone, and yet had no life of faith; both the learned and the unlearned . . . were brought forth in a vast multitude; first, towards the west towards the sea there, and were led to its southern side; and were brought back thence towards the south, on the other side of the vastated Babylonish tract; and as far as the east there; and also still farther, beyond the middle of it. Some having been separated thence were dispersed towards the north, and were seen no more. The rest of them were brought back towards the south; and were carried hither and thither; now this way, now backwards; and were there explored as to whether they had any faith . . . and everywhere it was found that they had no faith, because no life . . . This lasted for the space of an hour . . . (5352) When they were in the southern quarter, there went out, near the gulf there, a multitude who had been hidden there from former times, and who in like manner had said that they believe and thus are saved, and had thought nothing at all about the life: this multitude was commingled with the former. (5353) Again, from that mountain land, and from the cities, there was led forth a multitude who had lived morally; but not from any conscience . . . but solely from fear of the law, of the loss of reputation, of gain, and of honour . . . And as they had not any life of faith, and thus no communication with Heaven, they also were cast out towards the southern and towards the western quarter, and were led somewhat round about, and it was ascertained that they had no religion . . . (5354) Lastly were brought out those who had been skilled in the doctrinal things of the Church; and who had also led a moral life; but not from doctrine; for it was solely on account of the laws . . . and on account of reputation, gain, and honour . . . These, also, were examined as to whether they had anything of conscience, and it was found that they had nothing . . . These also were cast out of the mountain land. (5355) All these—who have been described in three classes—were driven far away, even so that they did not appear; at last [they were] like a cloud, and this was divided and dispersed; and it was said from Heaven that they had all been cast into uninhabited and desert places; and had been completely separated, that they might no longer associate together; and that they are wandering about in that desert like those who have no religion. Those who were of the first class were cast out into separate desert and uninhabited places outside the tract where the Church is, because they have no religion, because no life. Those of the second and third classes were dispersed in desert places more interiorly. Some

[were sent] among the Gentiles of no religion, who lead a ferine life. Their dispersion has been made to all the quarters; to the west, to the south, to the east, and also to the north; whence they can never return, because there all the Knowledge of religion has been taken away from them . . . This is done in desert places, and therefore they lead a miserable life.

5359-5362. Afterwards, there continued the cleansing of the middle space from all the cities—and also from the nearest villages, everywhere—of all those who had lived in the Church devoid of the Church . . . All such were cast out, partly into the northern chasm, partly into the western one, and also into a chasm at the south, besides into the desert places everywhere. (5360) It was observed that in one city, almost a fourth of the number . . . who were of a different genius . . . did not appear, except only when they turned themselves into some likeness of affection . . . To these, a dwelling-place was given beneath the city, and this in various places. I saw in the London there the ground heaped up in the shape of a small hill, and an entrance beneath it. Beneath the hill there . . . there was a vast number of the evil, amounting to many thousands, all of whom were afterwards cast into the Hells; because from them there goes up an exhalation into the inhabitants of the city, which infests them . . . Sometimes, also, some of them go out thence, and appear; but they return. This occurs under the cities, in many places. Thus, also, are the cities always cleansed by the Lord. (5361) Moreover, in the regions outside the cities—and sometimes within the cities—there are very many who, although evil, are not cast down; and who, although good, are not immediately elevated into Heaven: they are those who have come from the world within the last 10 to 20 years, who are of service to men, and through whom as Subjects communication is effected with the Hells and with the Heavens: these are they who are in the World of Spirits; for from the Hells cannot be drawn out those who are there after they have been fully vastated—sometimes some may who have not been fully vastated—for those who have been vastated are kept in Hell, and cannot be drawn out thence, because the moment they put out their heads they are direfully tortured. (See also 5363.) They who are from the world, and are serving as Subjects, are meanwhile being vastated . . . the evil as to all hypocritical truths and goods . . . the good as to actual evils and falsities, and so they are elevated into Heaven. Thus do all things follow on in succession. . . (5362) After that Last Judgment, the Hells were completely changed. Des. (See also 5502.)

5366. I afterwards heard how the case was with the Last Judgment upon the Dutch. Des. It was done on the ninth day of January 1757. Those remained who had had something of conscience.

5372. Those (who are meant by 'the dragon') were collected into one, and sent into an abyss. Their abyss is in the southern quarter . . . They are kept there bound. Hence it is that it is said of the dragon that he was sent into the abyss, and is kept bound there a thousand years.

5373-5375. I also saw a crowd of vast number cast down out of Heaven . . . into the earth at the west towards the north there, and they were dispersed in a desert land; for that crowd cared nothing for doctrine, but remained solely in the sense of the letter of the Word . . . These were those treated of in the Apocalypse, who were cast down from Heaven into the earth by the tail of the dragon (Rev. xii. 4), because they have no Knowledge . . . Hence they wander about everywhere . . . (5374) I saw those who had been such, cast down in many thousands from a Heaven that was in the highest—they were then at the north side there—the casting down appeared whenever an execrable adultery was perceived below. They came into Heaven from piety of life, and because they had thought about God. (5375) I afterwards saw multitudes carried down from the Heavens, to the eastern quarter, in order that they might wander there.

5377-5404. Concerning the destruction of the Old Heaven, or concerning the changes there. There is a still higher expanse above the middle where the Christians are, which has not appeared to me before, neither does it appear to those who are below; it is high above the head round about. Some have said that they do not see it; but still they have seen some ascending as into a cloud, but they vanished at some height. Thither had ascended all from the Christian world who had thought about God, and had led a life of piety, thus whose interiors had been a little opened; but by nothing except a life of piety, and by thought about God. (5378) I heard and saw them carried down from the Heaven there, even to many myriads; first towards the north; then towards the west; and finally towards the south. In a word, there was heard a vast multitude; and it was said that they were those who had lived piously, and had thought about God, but still not about the Lord, except as about a man like themselves . . . in a word, had always directed their thoughts to God the Father, that He might save them for the sake of the Son . . . thus that they had not worshipped the Lord . . . Neither had they been able to think about God under any human form . . . Such pious ones could not be with the Angels in Heaven, and therefore they were carried down . . . (5379) The Angels had also complained that they were interrupted in their thoughts about the Lord, on account of the multitude of such round about . . . for in the other life the thoughts which are of affections are communicated. (5380) They were all carried down to those quarters; into the level earth there; or where there are plains; and where an obscurity appeared successively greater and greater according to the distance; and afar off, forests; and this according to their life, because they could not have love and faith in God except so obscurely . . . (5389) I then also saw that there were brought forth, from the western quarter, and elevated into Heaven, to their place, a multitude, who were those who had been concealed and reserved there from the first time of Christianity, in various places there, and had been guarded by the Lord, lest they should be seduced by the evil, especially by the Papists who were in front there. A multitude of Christians had been hidden there, and had been guarded by the Lord; who are those treated of in Rev. xx.; and of whom it is said that they have been slain; that they have been carried out of the sepulchres, and are of the first resurrection (ver. 4, 5, 6, 12). (5392) Afterwards, I saw brought out of Heaven, men and women who had led a life of piety, and in fact an idle one, who had continually meditated about God, and had been in prayers; but had not known anything else from doctrine except that God remits their sins; not knowing what sins are . . . and who when they had seen with others worldly things, and civil cares, had said that these things ought to be abandoned, and God worshipped; and had therefore condemned others, and had despised them in comparison with themselves, placing all things of salvation in such a life of piety, and not in a life according to the Lord's precepts. They said in Heaven concerning these, that they dwelt at one side there; and that if they meet them, or look thither, they induce a sadness which interrupts their joys, and also dulls the truths of their intelligence and wisdom, and makes them as if they were nothing to the purpose; but that still they had tolerated them, although they wanted them away. (5394) All these were carried down into the northern plain, to prevent them from straitening and driving into sadness those who are in Heaven. They were carried down into the northern quarter because they are in ignorance of such things as lead to Heaven; and it was said that they are allowed to dwell together; but that on no account must they lead an idle life . . . and walk about in a melancholy fashion . . . (5395) The German Protestants appear more towards the north; the Swedes at the north and west, in the middle; the Danes at the west; the Dutch towards the east and south; the English in the middle among them. All appear according to their genius as to religion. (5396) When the Germans, Swedes, and Danes were visited, those were first cast out . . . who had thought about civil and worldly things, and little about the things of religion, except that it exists . . . They said that they did not know the difference between living civilly and morally well, and living well Christianly . . . But these were merely external men; who, if their externals are removed . . . rush into every crime . . . because they are not interiorly ruled by the Lord . . . (5396a) From the Protestants, so called, there appeared a multitude upon a rather high mountain, and also around the mountain, who had been of such a genius in the world that they believed themselves to be Christians and worshippers of God above others . . . because they said they had performed repentance . . . whenever they had frequented the Holy Supper, and had also sometimes prayed on their knees that their sins might be remitted, and had called this repentance; when yet they had neither explored themselves, nor had known what sin is, nor had cared to know . . . and therefore when they had returned from the Holy Supper and from their prayers, they had led a life not at all different from before. They had supposed that not to act contrary to the civil laws, from fear of the penalties, or contrary to the moral laws, from fear of the loss of reputation, gain, and honour, was to live Christianly. (5396b) The evils of thought and will they had not supposed to be sins . . . When external things are taken away, no bonds of conscience . . . bridle or withhold them from rushing into evils and falsities of every kind without any mercy . . . As they had the intention to injure the upright whom the Lord has guarded . . . they were told that they do not fear any God; which they denied; and said that they had indeed known that the Lord guards them, but still they do not regard the Lord otherwise than as a man . . . (5396c) . . . As these were such, that mountain subsided down to the plain; and those who were worse than the rest were detained in a certain height there, and were cast into a Hell near the north . . . (5398) At the western quarter there was a multitude whose speech sounded sincere . . . They were those who had so appeared in the world . . . but inwardly had been devoid of conscience. They consult together as to how they may subjugate the simple . . . They assail others at the back . . . and thus inspire such things as they are thinking . . . These also were cast into a Hell in front there beneath the western tract . . . (5399) Those were explored who had not any charity towards the neighbour; not those who are unmerciful . . . because these are at once seen to be infernal; but those who do not appear so in words and in the external form . . . But when they saw the states (of the Lord's Kingdom) being changed, they at once were with those who were destroying it, and assisted them. They were scattered round about; and when such ones were observed, they were cast into chasms and into deserts on every side . . . (5400) Afterwards, all those were cast out who cared nothing for the truths of the Church . . . of whom there was a vast number; for none of them have thought about religion, but only about external worship from habit from infancy, and for the sake of their reputation, lest they should be called impious . . . All these, also, were such that they wanted to exercise command, and to lead others . . . which was found out by this,—that wherever they saw anyone outside their own tract, they immediately infested him, by subjugating him, and leading him as their slave, and not even suffering him to think from himself; thus did they want to obsess others. All who have hated the truths of faith are such. The Gentiles care for their religious things, and love to know interior things, and to live according to them; but among Christians very few, except merely the priests and elders, of whom . . . the greater part learn them for the sake of the reputation of learning . . . but not to live according to them . . . (5401) At the boundary in the west there appeared women who infested whomsoever they saw . . . I was brought thither, and behold there was a vast number of women who in the world had been harlots, numbering many hundreds of thousands. All these were cast thence into a marshy lake which was remotely at their back in the west, and into Hells there; and their houses were destroyed: they were such as had remained so through their whole life. (5402) Afterwards, other women were seen, who had practised harlotry unknown to others, and who also had been such to the end of their life in the world; these were seen at no space from the former ones, to many thousands and myriads; these in like manner were brought down to the lake at the western part there, and were cast into a dark cavern which yawned there. (5403) There is also a marshy lake in the southern tract, into which are cast those who have been harlots clandestinely; there are there very many of noble rank. Thither are cast those who have been external men . . . Such are numerous . . . Those who are such, and harlots, are cast into the southern lake; the rest also who are such are at the south.

[D.] 5405-5412. Concerning the residual Catholic nation; and a continuation concerning Babel. There was a vast multitude of that nation, who were not in the monasteries, who dwelt at the east, occupying that whole quarter, even to the eastern quarter above the southern, and which extended itself towards the Gentiles there, upon the mountains there, and in the plains, beneath and above. All this multitude was translated from the east by a straight way even into the west, into the other part of the Babylonish tract there; where seats were given them upon hills and plains of much extent. (5406) Much part of that nation was such as had lived in good, although not in truths; they had practised good according to their religiosity . . . These were instructed in the seat to which they were carried . . . (5408) There remain from that nation, as from all others, a sufficient number for the service of the men of that nation; for every nation is served by its own ones; sometimes by others . . . I saw there the city of Rome, at the right between the south and the west, but within the tract of Babylonia, and I saw all the streets there, but not the Monte Cavallo, nor the Church of Peter. The monasteries also remain there; but how long has not been said. (5409) Upon a lofty mountain almost above me there appeared the sign of the cross . . . and it was given to see . . . that some have begun to commence Babel there again . . . They said that they accepted the true doctrine concerning the Lord, concerning love and faith in Him, and concerning charity towards the neighbour; but that to them was entrusted the care that all things should be rightly observed . . . (but) such ones were like the former, in that they aimed at dominion by means of holy things; and moreover they were conjoining themselves with magicians . . . All these, who amounted to a thousand, were cast into the western sea near its northern shore. (5410) There was still seen a monasterial tract in the west, beyond the Babylonish tract towards the corner of the north there . . . Thither transferred themselves those who had no place in the Babylonish tract there; and as they differed in genius from these, that tract was beyond the destroyed Babylonish tract there . . . This tract also was crammed with monasteries. (5411) Afterwards, I saw a vast number brought down from the mountains which were beyond the destroyed western Babylonish tract towards the south, and also from the mountains of the south there, and this by a western way to that monasterial tract of which I have just spoken; and when that vast multitude came thither, there appeared as an inundation there, below, where the monasteries were; and then all who were there went forth out of the monasteries, and the greatest part of them fled away . . . At last that vast multitude was explored as to who among them were in the affection of truth from good . . . That exploration was seen as a sudden bringing down of them from that tract, through the north, and the east, towards the south, and thence towards the middle; and this several times by turns: so appears exploration by changes of state. Those of them who remained in the middle, upon the hills there, and upon the plain, were those who were in the affection of truth for the sake of truth, and who thus [could] be imbued with the truths of faith. The rest were sent to the monasterial tract there, in order that they might remain there, and be taught, where it was granted them to dwell, without monasteries. It was also granted to those from the monasteries who were in the affection of truth for the sake of truth. (5412) They were carried down into the middle because the Protestants were there . . . in order to be instructed there . . . Treasures of gold and silver and of precious stones were left under the earth in that new tract among the monasteries; and these were given to the new inhabitants there, because they were in the affection of truth from good.

5413-5420. Concerning the mountain where the Jesuits are; and concerning miracles by means of the Heavenly Doctrine. There was a certain one near me who infested others with diabolical art; and as such arts come forth by influx from like ones, inquiry was made as to where they were; and it was found that they were upon a certain mountain in the western quarter towards the northern corner; and therefore some were sent thither from Heaven, who made a visitation, and it was found that there were Jesuits there to some thousands, who had congregated there and were dwelling together in a city . . . without monasteries; and that they were acting by sight round about, and were thus exercising dominion over many at a distance . . . (5414) It was found that they had collected and had posted round about that city, magicians more skilful than others, whom they used for guarding themselves: they had given them houses all round: thus was that city encircled. (5415) In the midst of the city was their treasury, which was exceedingly great . . . having been collected during a long time . . . it was under the earth, and in the midst of it was a miraculous lamp, always burning . . . (5416) When these things had been found, then, by the Divine power of the Lord, there were first carried away the execrable guards . . . who were round about; and these were dispersed in every direction and immersed in marshes, being thus cast into Hells. When this was seen by the Jesuits, they apperceived that their destruction was at hand; and therefore they flew to their arts, which appeared like miracles. They caused to appear in the air a resplendent, shining banner, by which they stirred up those in the neighbourhood to their defence . . . Afterwards there appeared a man in the air, in like manner resplendent, and flying, who appeared first like an Angel, and then like a monk. Afterwards, many other things in a series, all in the air; which appeared on every side. One such shining appearance went into a mountain where there were some from that religion who were devout . . . These immediately ran down from the mountain, and stood in a certain place, and prayed for them devoutly and piously. This was done in order that the simple good might also be allured to their defence; for such things inflow and are communicated. . . . (5417) Presently the ever-burning lamp . . . was seized upon, and was lifted up and shown, and was then carried round on every side so that they should see it; inquiry being made whence came such an art, which was magical, in that it burned continually; and it was found that it was in a certain mountain where there were monks who had invented that art . . . (5418) After these things had been found, and visitation had been made as to the quality of each and all who were there . . . then the treasure was rolled about, and was completely commingled with the dust of the earth there, and thus went away into dust; and then the city with all therein subsided into the deep, thus into Hell . . . and there rose up a smoke thence, which was dispersed around. (5419) Afterwards, visitation was made among the monks. Those who by their art could produce that continual burning, were on a mountain also in the western quarter, not so remote from the middle . . . They at first said that they had done it by means of prayers . . . but . . . they had made the light by art, in that they had cast the Heavenly Doctrine into a crucible, and thus into the fire; and when the crucible was sent down it was taken out of the fire, and placed in that lamp: and it was found that they had also made the bright flying signs in like manner by means of that Doctrine, by casting it forth on high, and thinking at the same time of such things as appeared. As these had made use of such an art, which is a magical one most shocking, because done with Divine truths, they also [subsided]; the earth opened beneath their feet, and they were swallowed up, having been cast into Hell. (5420) Afterwards, inquiry was made in various places, and it was found that by means of that Doctrine they had made bright appearances in the air, in chambers . . . The reason the Doctrine shone, was from the Divine truths therein . . .

[D.] 5421. On the Jews. The Jews dwelt within the Middle to the left, in the plane beneath the sole of the foot; and there they had their many synagogues, and assembled there, and had their worship . . . But they have all been dispersed; the synagogues have been destroyed; and now they wander round about without any worship anywhere. They appear solitary. Beneath that plane there are also Jews, who as yet have not been dispersed. That they should be dispersed was foretold by the Lord in Matt. xxiv. The reason they were within the Middle, was that they had the Word; for such are within it.

5422-5429. Continuation concerning the dragon. Those were dragons who had been in no doctrine, but solely in the sense of the letter of the Word, which they had applied to whatever they wished . . . and who thus had committed adultery with the Word . . . Such are also sensuous men . . . They vacillate among all heresies; they can be Jews, Socinians, Papists . . . (5423) Those who were such had been congregated at the left, beneath the heel of the feet; and others in the southern [quarter] towards the west; and also in the eastern towards the southern; and were for the most part presbyters. When seen representatively, they appeared like black dragons with a long tail. (5424) In the Heavens on every side there had been collected those who had indeed lived well morally, and had also frequented churches and the Holy Supper, and had then been in devotion, but yet had not cared at all to know the doctrinal things of the Church . . . in a word, who had not been in any affection of truth for the sake of truth, but merely for the sake of external sanctity . . . (Such) are indeed admitted, but live separated . . . round about there; and when they turn themselves to the Angels, they take away the happiness which they have from wisdom, and dull their minds, and make the light dim . . . Such have been admitted into Heaven in vast multitudes for many ages; although in Heaven they had not Heaven . . . (5425) All such communicated with those below who had been dragons, of whom before; for all who are in Heaven communicate with those who are below; thus they have connection, and make one. . . Hence it was, that when the lower ones were removed, those who were above were also dragged away. (5426) The [lower] dragons, from influx from the higher ones, conspired against the Heavenly Doctrine, which they wanted to utterly destroy. That sedition was detected, and then the dragons, who were many, were cast towards the very remote south-eastern corner, until they scarcely appeared. Consequently, it was then seen that a vast multitude of such who were in Heaven fell down from the Heavens on every side for the whole distance; and the fallen multitude appeared like a starry mass, as it were a Milky Way; which is described by the dragon dragging down the third part of the stars . . . (5427) Their casting down was first seen towards the eastern quarter . . . then towards the northern, and at the same time also a little towards the western; and the latter was into the level of the earth there. In their place there ascended those who had been in the affection of truth for the sake of truth; and had been reserved by the Lord to this time . . . (5428) When the dragons looked towards those who were in the Heavenly Doctrine, they fell into direful torments . . . Michael, in the Apocalypse, is those who are in the Heavenly Doctrine . . .

5452-5456. Concerning the Russian nation. The Russian nation dwells at the south-eastern corner, completely in the corner, beneath the earth there. They are in greater obscurity than the rest. I was conveyed thither, and I first saw an unclean place, where there were many who deliberated about the things of their own kingdom, and in fact about liberty such as there is elsewhere; but they did not appear . . . I afterwards heard them saying that they were afraid of the Czar, and that the Czar is everywhere. (5453) I was afterwards brought to others from that nation who were better; these laboured continually . . . I afterwards heard that they do not care for religion . . . in a word, they are completely empty . . . (5455) Inwardly they are more wicked than all others, and operate very strongly by phantasies . . . (5456) Those from them who were better, were, to a great multitude, conveyed thence towards the north, beyond the desert Babylonish tract there; and were sent into a plain, at a great distance towards the north, which tract is terminated there in forests, where are those who are as it were wild animals. They enter into vaults in various places there, and scarcely appear upon the plain. Their tract there is in the northern part, towards the eastern corner there.

5457-5460. Concerning the profane from various religions, especially from the Roman Catholic one. There were collected into one the profane of both sexes, and first those who were from the Catholic religion; and all those who had believed the holy things of their own religion, and had profaned them. Examps. (5458)

All such, collected into one, were cast into a very deep and darksome pit which was opened in the midst of the Middle, and were hidden there . . . (5459) Afterwards, in the middle of the western part, almost within the Babylonish tract there, the earth was seen to be drawn down from the earth there for some quadrangular space . . . and then there appeared there as it were liquefied flesh, dissolved by putrefaction; and thither were all those cast who had lived well exteriorly, had frequented preachings and the Holy Supper . . . and yet had inwardly worked after murders and adulteries, and had stored up hatred against the neighbour, and revenges and ferocities without mercy; and had never performed any other repentance except that they had prayed that their sins might be remitted; and still had not thought about those hatreds, revenges, and ferocities; but had persevered in them . . . Such, because they had believed, and still had so lived, have been cast into that profane lake . . . and this to a vast multitude. Afterwards that lake was covered over with dust brought thither from its southern shore . . .

5461-5469. Babylon afterwards . . . (5465) I was looking to the east, in a certain desert place which terminated in a forest, where they were wandering. These reduced some into their proprium . . . in order that they might be over them; for they were without rulers; and therefore the one infested the other direfully . . . I was conveyed thither, and it was found that such were there as had no fear of God, nor respect for man . . . The majority of them were from the common people, who yet had inwardly thought cunningly and wickedly in the world. They were then visited; and when it was found that they were such, those were taken away from them who had led them thither by their phantastic and magical art, and there was opened, in the middle tract, a great cavern, which stretched into the deep; and thither were cast all who were there; and all those in the forests were also sought out, and were also cast thither. There were, moreover, many who appeared at the end of the forest upon a higher place, who had been those who had known something about God; these, who still were like the rest, were also cast into the same cavern. . . Those who were in that tract knew how to hide themselves in certain subterranean vaults, and also those who were in the forests; but they were drawn out of them. (5466) There were, moreover, still more cunning ones who could more skilfully drive Spirits into their propriums, and lead them. These dwelt under the earth in a long row, quite in the extension of the corner between the west and the south. (The extension of the corner explained by a diagram.) They dwelt along this extension; on the western side, men; on the southern side, women who had been harlots; towards the Middle those who had known something about the Divine . . . Where the women dwelt there appeared as it were a sulphureous brightness . . . but where the men dwelt it was darksome. I was brought to a certain place there, and it was seen that they were dwelling in their chambers like harlots . . . (5467) After visitation had been made [to ascertain] of what quality they were, and it had been found that (they were such), then followed the Judgment, in that all such were cast into Hell, from which they would never go out any more. The women were cast into a place burning with sulphur and fire . . . this lake was situated crosswise at the end of the corner . . . it was a great number who were cast thither. But the men who dwelt along that corner [line] were cast to the western side into such an abyss which opened in front of that lake, which abyss was darksome, and stretched deeply beneath the sulphureous lake. In front of this again, there opened a like abyss, which also stretched beneath the other; and into this were cast those who had known about the Divine, and who had frequented churches . . . (5468. Illustrated by a diagram.) (5469) But as evil Spirits who care nothing for the Divine can do nothing by any art or phantasy, unless they have in society with them Spirits who know the Divine, thus who know some truths of faith, inquiry was made where such were as were bearing them aid, and they were found above on a certain mountain above the Middle towards the west. There was there a vast number of such, of both sexes, who had been in like wickedness, and had stolen men by various arts, phantastical and magical, (men are said to be stolen when they are led into their proprium, and are thus led away wherever the stealers please, 5466); and had led them into a cavern in the western tract, not far from the Middle, where also a brightness appeared, and there treated them cruelly in various ways. When this had been found out, then all those women, to a great number, who were in the cavern, was cast into the sulphureous lake, and the men into the front abyss; all the women had been adulteresses in the world, and the men adulterers, and in various ways they had allured to adulteries. These, however much they have frequented churches and have approached the Holy Supper, still are such that they care neither for God nor men; and in the other life they give themselves to such arts, in which they place the delight of their life. These who were in the mountain were from various nations, some from the Swedish. (5469a) After some time, a great part of them were transferred from those Hells into other Hells very remotely in the west. The women have been seen by others, who were horrified, so monstrous, cadaverous, and unclean were they. They have been seen by the last pope; and it was said that he had not seen anything more horrible; and some also among them who had been nuns, in a house, of whom nothing such had been suspected: he spoke to them.

5470-5480. Concerning the four corners; and concerning those who are there; and concerning their Last Judgment; then concerning the dragonists; and concerning the abysses into which they have been cast. (5471) All things in the other life must be considered in relation to such a site (as is shown in the diagram here given). There is the Middle, where those are who are truly Christian; and in its midst is the New Jerusalem, four-square. The corners are to be considered according to the extensions into the quadrangle . . . These lines are called the extensions of the corner. (5472) Those who were situated near the extension of the corner . . . between the west and the south . . . have been written of just above. (5473) As to those who were near the extension of the corner between the west and the south . . . there were there those who had cared nothing for the doctrine of the Church, but had applied the sense of the letter of the Word to whatever they wanted . . . thus who had not lived well, and had thus committed adultery with the Word. At the south side, according to its extension, were such women; and on the side towards the east were such men . . . Visitation came to them, and after it the men were cast into a long chasm stretching towards Hell there . . . Into that long chasm on the south side . . . were cast such women. The leaders who had been such, and had lived evilly, were cast into that chasm more remote from the others . . . and there appeared there below as it were a coal fire, and the smoke thence was like the dust of powdered black coal. In the cavern of the women there appeared below a hideous coaly brightness. After these had been cast thither, a vast number of like ones were then cast down into the same chasms, and thither they were cast from various mountains in the east, and also from mountains in the south, and likewise some from the middle: all according to the degree of the adulteration. There was a vast number. (5474) Afterwards, there was shown a plain which was lower than the earth, in which were various dim subterranean places at the sides, very broad . . . crosswise to the corner . . . Thither were brought all those, of whatever rank, both priests and others, who had had no doctrine, thus no fixed faith . . . from the fact that they had studied the Word solely as to the sense of its letter . . . These, who were there, had not lived so very evilly, but morally well in externals; and some not so well; and, having been distinguished, they obtain a situation there according to their life. Thither had they been successively collected from the first ages, and now many are brought thither. It is a rather large and roomy space. Those who are there are not so badly off; but the states of their life are varied and uncertain. They do not dwell in stated houses, but now in these, now in others . . . thus sometimes in darksome caverns, because they had had not a fixed but a wandering faith. (5475) It is to be known that these two chasms . . . and also that great plain . . . are the things which in the Apocalypse are called 'the abyss' into which the dragon was cast; thus there are the abysses of the dragon (Rev.xx.3). In that great plain are those who have spiritually committed whoredom with the Word; in the two front [chasms] are those who have committed adultery with it. (5476) Near the corner between the east and the north, according to its extension . . . dwelt those who had counterfeited before men that they were sincere, pious, and possessed of every virtue, and also that they were endowed with faith; and who had thus in various ways seduced men . . . There were on the northern side such women, who operated strongly by phantasies; and on the eastern side were the men; all in chambers there; under the earth in a long series. Those (of both sexes) who were worse than the rest, were shut up more interiorly. (5477) They were visited, and were found to be such, on both sides; and then they were all cast down thence, and in fact into a certain mountain at the end of the corner, in the midst of which a cavern opened, stretching into the deep: thither were cast such women to a great number; and into a darksome cavern beyond the mountain, in a certain level at the east side of that mountain, a little further away . . . were cast such men. (5478) Finally, [infernals] were also cast thither from the Hells beneath the Middle, even to a multitude . . . the men were cast into the chasm, and the women into the cavern in the midst of the mountain. (5479) At the corner between the west and the north, near its extension . . . dwelt those who in the world had known nothing, and were thence in blindness as to spiritual and moral things, of an utterly dull, heavy nature—and some as it were idiots—because in the world they had wanted to know nothing about the doctrine of the Church, nor about the Word . . . There, also, are two chasms; the front one for the men, and the hinder one for the women; and thither are sent, by turns, those who are as it were idiots; many of whom are such as have been called wise or clever in the world; but who have nevertheless denied the Divine, have cherished hatreds and revenges in their hearts, have been adulterers, and the like, whatever they have been in moral life. They who are such, lest they should injure others by the gift of natural cleverness, are sent thither, and there become silly . . . In that chasm the light was altogether coaly. (5480) Afterwards, it was seen that out of the Lower Earth in the western tract towards the southern, there were rising up a great number who were there, and who were carried into the mountains which are in the east, into the place of those who had been cast down thence, treated of above. For, when the evil are being cast into Hell, then the good succeed in their place, most of whom had been concealed and reserved by the Lord in the Lower Earth; and had thus been taken away from the contagion of the evil, and had been there initiated into spiritual life. It was said that they were such as in their childhood had learned the doctrinal things of the Church for the sake of the reputation of their learning; but afterwards, having been led by the Lord, they had by those things imbued the Christian life, and in proportion to this had put off the pride of learning. (The positions of all these places are shown on the diagram.)

[D.] 5486–5491. Concerning the Sirens, and their Last Judgment. (5487) The Siren women dwelt together upon a mountain in the southern quarter towards the western, where they . . . infested all round about, even those who were very remote from them . . . on which account they were visited, and were found to be such, and therefore they were conveyed by force from that mountain remotely towards the western line, and very remotely above it, until they scarcely appeared, to the western part beyond the line there, to the last boundary of Christendom . . . and there they were cast into a lake (the position of which is shown on the diagram, and also that of the Sirenic mountain). (5488) After those women who had been on the mountain had been cast thither, they were brought out from their Hell, which was in the southern quarter near the Middle, where there was a vast multitude of them; they had been sent and conveyed thither for many years; the number and the multitude was vast, and was seen to fill up the whole intermediate space, large as it was; they amounted to some myriads. An exit opened for them in the southern tract, and they were conveyed to the same place and all cast in thither. (5489) Afterwards, those who had concealed themselves in the mountain were sought for. The search was made by men of like wickedness. They were seen to enter a cavern which was in the middle of the mountain; they went down this, and it was seen that they excavated a space there around the mountain at its other side for a considerable space, which led around, and at last [went] from cavern to cavern. Thither had fled the worst of those women, who had also committed murders, and had studied magical things, and who had profaned holy things. These were cast down there through a cavern in the middle of the mountain, and were cast into a place there towards the southern side. (5490) After this had been done, it was seen that as it were dust was spread over the whole place, so that it was covered up, in order that no one should ever rise out thence, and it could scarcely be known where they were. (5491) Afterwards, such men were cast into a place there which is in the southern part. (Shown on the diagram.) They were led away from subterranean [places] in the western tract; first, those who were beneath the earth there near to the southern line: these were conveyed over a mountain to their place, and were cast into a part of it nearer towards the corner line. Afterwards, from underground, there rose up, in the western [tract], almost in the middle, worse ones, who in like manner as the Sirens, could enter into the affections of others, by profane things equally as by holy ones. These also were conveyed above the line towards the Sirenic mountain, but at the western side of it, to the same lake, into the midst thereof. And, finally, there rose up from underground, in the west, nearer to the northern line, those who had been the worst of all, those who had committed murders, those who had committed thefts, those who had committed adulteries, those who had been atheists, and yet appeared like Angels of light, making a display of holiness; and also who in secret had practised magical arts which they had learned from the diabolical crew, concerning which, however, nothing had been divulged in the world. These also were conveyed above the corner line, but at the eastern side of the mountain, to that lake, and were cast in thither towards its further corner: thus were they hidden so that they should never appear. Thus was that execrable crew cast into Hell, and its number also was great.

5501-5505. Continuation concerning Babel. After some days, an ordination was effected round about that Babylonish tract, and to the whole quarter, so that a girdle, or circumference, was made, at a distance from the middle, a little beyond the Babylonish tracts; all from the Catholic nation. (5502) First there were transferred the Hells from those nations which are at the south and at the east; the magical Hells at the south, and the phantastic ones at the east; and those who were there were cast in a vast number into the western sea, and into the western gulf towards the north; which was done in this way:—all who were in the magical Hells at the south were taken out thence, and were cast into the western sea at its southern part, and along its entire shore, to a great extension towards the west—for that sea is stretched out in length to the west; its length is not great—and afterwards, their magical things were reduced to dust, and were dispersed and strewn upon the sea, which dust appeared like chaff. Afterwards, there were taken out those who were in the phantastic Hells at the east, also at a distance almost the same from the middle, and those who were there were conveyed by the way of the north to the west; and part of them were cast into the western gulf there, towards the north; and part into the western sea, at the shore looking to the north; also in a long series, and in a vast number. (5503) There were afterwards taken out, in a vast multitude, Spirits from the west who were beneath the earth there, and who had been kept in concealment by the Lord, and thus had been preserved from the contagion of the rest, who were idolatrous. They were taken out of various places there, and were conveyed to the south, to the east, and to the north; in fact, into the places where the evil had been before, so that dwelling-places were given them, as the lands of the nations were given to the sons of Israel in Canaan; and this, also, round about, making a circumference. Those who were conveyed to the south were those who had led a moral life from Knowledges concerning [such] things, so that they had lived well morally, and not spiritually, because they had not had Knowledges concerning the truths of faith . . . Those conveyed to the east . . . were those who said that they love God, but still were devoid of Knowledges as to how He is to be loved . . . Those who were conveyed to the north, were those who said that they love the neighbour . . . and this also from lack of Knowledges . . . they were a vast number . . . In the western quarter, and at almost a like distance from the middle, were placed those who had worship from the ancient religion, and who had done as their parents had done, not falling away from their religion on account of the lack of Knowledges. These had lain concealed near the western sea at the side looking to the north. All these, and those above mentioned, were from the Catholic nation, and were the simple good. (5504) Afterwards, to all of these, there were sent a great number from the middle—namely, from those who are called the Reformed and the Protestants, who are in the Knowledges of the Church—to the end that they might instruct them, and thus prepare them for Heaven; for most of them were in the affection of truth, and it was now provided that they should receive their joys. (5505) (Those who were thus sent to them) had been preserved in the middle for a long time, as a seminary. (They were sent) from various heights there; and therefore the places in the middle had been many times cleansed from the evil . . . for a long time . . .

5510. Vastations and purifications are going on continually; but the Last Judgment only at the end of the Church.

5515-5518. Concerning the New Heaven and the new earth; concerning the Last Judgment. (5516) I was now brought to the Africans . . . they dwell in the west remotely from the middle, towards the corner of the north there . . . (5517) and I then heard a vast number who had been sent from the middle, or from the seminary, to the nations which were afar. (Swedenborg gives the Africans instruction.)

5525. Concerning the Last Judgment; concerning Christians. Afterwards, they were separated . . . all according to their life; not according to the external life, but the internal . . . Those who had lived as Christians according to the doctrine of their own Church, were separated from those who had lived as Christians according to the Word, from which they had drawn many things which suited them, without doctrine: and those also were separated who had indeed believed according to the doctrine of the Church, but still had lived according to the Word in respect to life: those who had only believed, and had not lived, were cast out; partly into deserts, and partly into Hells.

[D.] 5532-5535. Concerning the Former Heaven, and the Last Judgment. Visitation was made on priests in various places in the Christendom of Protestants, and those were separated who may be called dragonists, from those who had not been; and the dragonists were found to many thousands, and were cast out by cohorts into various Hells, chiefly into the west, nearer to, and further from, the middle; and when they had been cast out, there was perceived from them a sphere of filthy adulteries within the various forbidden degrees. (5533) They were those, who, when they become priests, do indeed read the Word and know it, but still care no more for it than that they may preach from it . . . (5534) The quality of these may be evident from the crowd which has followed them, the number of which was vast; which crowd also has been cast out of the mountains, hills, and rocks in the middle; where were those who had the Word, and could be illustrated, and receive spiritual life; all the former were those who had lived only a natural life; and, so far as they were in societies, a civil one; and also thence an apparently moral one: they had frequented churches, etc.; but as they had had no interior bonds—for when they had thought and willed evil they had also done it—they had never thought, This is a sin . . . but had only abstained from doing it on account of external bonds, which are . . . All these had had no conscience, thus no spiritual life, but only a natural and civil one . . . That they are such, can be Known . . . only by the Lord . . . (5535) All such, to a vast number, have been cast out of the Christian world, now, from the middle; most towards the west, into desert places there, where they are wandering, and are dwelling together in their huts, under magistrates who hold them in bonds by means of penalties and various fears. They have been cast out of the Christian world because they are not Christians.

5538, 5539. Afterwards, all the adulterers were cast out, who were all those who perceive delight in adulteries, and of whom there was a vast number . . . the adulterers are not cast out into desert places, like those who had been spiritually adulterers, but into Hells; the reason of which is that such as perceive delight in adulteries have no communication at all with Heaven . . . (5539) In Christendom at this day adultery is general . . . they confirm themselves in various ways that adulteries are innocent; from which also it is evident of what quality Christendom is, and that it is the last time of it. The causes are, that they do not make the doctrine of the Church of life; and so they do not care for the life; and so are adulterers spiritually.

5540-5542. Continuation. I was in a state of sadness, but did not know the cause. I then heard that a vast number were being sent down from Heaven towards the lower parts . . . They were those who had rejoiced in having the Heavenly Doctrine, saying that they want to receive it, because they believe all things which are in it; and many had perceived that they were truths. But as soon as they had heard that that Doctrine was not only a doctrine of faith . . . but that it was of life . . . they became sad; and all had rejected it, not wanting it. Hence came the sadness to me; and hence they had been sent down into the lower parts, towards the north, where there was little communication with Heaven; but still where there was some communication. (5541) Those who had been sent down asked me what was to be done; whether all things in it; and [said] that they cannot possibly do that. It was given to say to them that it is not grievous and difficult, since all it wants is, that we live sincerely, both in our calling, and outside of our calling, with everyone, and in every matter; because if [we live] otherwise it is a sin, that is, is against God, and against the neighbour. They said that they want this . . . but having been examined [it was found that] they did not want it, since they want to use fraud, cunning, and deceit against others for the sake of self, and also to injure them in many ways, which things they do not account as evils; and therefore they were sent away . . . (5542) Among these, also, are those who are in false doctrine from the sense of the letter of the Word alone; these care nothing for truths themselves, however [plainly] they stand forth in the Word; and however [much] they are preached to them in the other life; provided they have confirmed themselves in the former things. But those of them who have lived in good . . . eagerly desire truths, genuine ones . . . There were seen, to a vast number, those who had been such, from the Lutherans, and others; and as they do not want to receive anything of genuine truth, they have been cast down out of Heaven, and have been sent across into the earth towards the east at the north there; and those of them who had lived evilly, into the Hells there.

5543, 5544. Concerning the Last Judgment, and the New Jerusalem. I saw a vast multitude sent down out of the Heavens, towards the east, and there allotted a place in front; those who were evil were cast round about into deserts and into Hells; those who were good obtained abodes to dwell in. I afterwards heard a vast multitude who were sent down out of Heaven to all the rest of the quarters round about; to the western, the southern, and the northern, with whom it was done in like manner; and those who were good were allotted abodes there, and dwelling-places. This lasted many hours, through the whole night. (5544) This was not a visitation; for that had often preceded, but was a disposition into order; for in the middle it is the best; at the circumferences are the good according to degrees; [namely] towards the east are those who are in clearness of good; those are at the west who are in obscurity of good; those are at the south who are in the clearness of truth; those are at the north who are in the obscurity of truth.

5598, 5599. Continuation concerning Babylonia. As there are a great number from such as are called Babel or Babylonia, who have not yet been vastated, but roam free in the World of Spirits, and this even to some hundreds of thousands, who are successively vastated, as new ones arrive from the Earth, it is therefore conceded to them to do as at first; and in fact, in the same quarters and places. Similar things, therefore, recur continually; but still they are continually destroyed thereafter, and are cast into the Hells. Des. But, since the Last Judgment, this takes place by some alternations. . . . (5599) The former places where their dwelling-places had been are quite deserted. . . .

5529-5637. Concerning Babylonia and the very cunning there, and the seven mountains. (5630) I was brought, along with some Englishmen, to Italians who had been very cunning, and were such inwardly, and who had blazed with such wicked things in their life. (See ITALY, at D.5629.) When I came to a distance, I at once perceived contempt for those who were coming, and a greatness for themselves, as though they possessed Heaven and earth. We approached nearer, and then I spoke to them, asking them first something about the Lord. They said that they have all His power. . . . (5631) These dwell on a mountain in the west, far off, behind a forest, where were the most wicked; and there they were hiding themselves. It was said that around them there appears a fieriness as of a conflagration, from the loves of self and of the world; because such a conflagration lies hidden in them, from the fact that they believe themselves to possess Heaven and the souls of men, and also aim at possessing the universal earth. (5632) When they saw us, they said among themselves that we were low men, and not of any eminence. . . . (5633) They said that they have the Inquisition, and that they send thither all who do not want to receive their religious decrees; but that when they seek them, they see that they have been let out, and do not know how they get away; and that the Inquisitor says that he wants to abdicate that function, because it avails nothing. It was shown, besides, how cruelly they treat those who do not want to profess their religious things, and to acknowledge them as gods. . . . suspendunt illos sub costis unciis. (5634) It was afterwards made manifest how such are sent to Hell. At a bridge behind that mountain, more to the western ones, there is a desert into which they are cast. . . . and this successively, as they themselves confessed. They said that those who descend from the mountain, where there is a narrow marshy space, when they come above it. . . . become very stupid; they appear like corpses, and do not know that they are men; they wander there to a great multitude; and there is a long opening there which stretches under the earth; they who are the worst enter into it; and the more deeply they enter, the more stupid they become; they lie like corpses. . . . This wide passage stretches in a curve to a second bridge, and the further they come the more stupid they are, and the more cadaverous. The reason is, that the interiors are closed up of all those who have been deceitful, and have blazed with revenge up to the end of life, and who have perceived their delight in it. . . . It was said that so long as they are such, they lie like corpses, almost dead; and that those with whom that love is diminished, afterwards have something of life; but that they still dwell in that desert. (5635) I also saw many descending from that mountain into the desert. At first they began to be as it were insane, and thus lost their cleverness in wickedness; and afterwards they were let down; and it was said that those who go across that marshy place never return. . . . Those were let down above that marshy place who were stubborn at heart; and did not want to desist from their execrable cruelty. . . . (5636) At last, those who were on this mountain were visited, and perished in almost the same way. The whole mountain subsided in the middle, and they were cast completely into the deep, and the waters were brought from the western sea, which poured over them. . . . They afterwards struggled to emerge. . . . but there then appeared a sulphureous smoke with fieriness, from the love of self and of exercising command, which was seen on all sides, and which was a sign that they had been still more immersed in the cupidities of that filthy love. (5637) The crowd who were around, who were of the same genius, but who were not exercising command, because they were lower, were carried away behind the mountain at the southern side, and were cast into the gulfs according to their evils.

5648-5658. Continuation concerning Babylonia, and the seven mountains. There are many mountains there, which are there and thence [range] towards the north, up to twenty; but all these are called in the Apocalypse the seven mountains upon which the beast dwells. . . . and the most who are there are from the Italian nation. On the one previously told about dwell the Romans, because these are in the love of exercising command more than all others, and do not so much care for Knowledges. Behind them dwell the rest of the Italians who are such, . . . as those who are from Tuscany, Genoa, Venice, Milan, and Transmontana; these dwell upon the middle mountains there. On the furthest ones towards the north were those from Naples, and still further those from Sicily; for the worst dwell towards the north there, who were those from Sicily; who were in the acumen of falsity and in falsities more than all others; and not so much in the love of exercising command, like the Romans. (5649) It is also to be known that many from the Reformed religion had betaken themselves thither, and had professed the Catholic religion, but only those who had been in a life of evil; who, when they had in vain betaken themselves to piety and to prayers, had [then] betaken themselves into their faith which they had had interiorly in the world, and had accepted all things of religion which others wanted [them to accept], because in their hearts they make nothing of religion; and from this source there is a very great crowd there from other nations, who all are their domestics; moreover, that external Catholic religion is for such. (5650) When visitation had been made with those who were on the three mountains nearest the Romans; and it had been found that all things there were diabolical; and that they had even arrived at the insanity that they had not only rejected the Divine, but had also wanted themselves to be acknowledged as gods, and which also had been done. . . . These, when they had become such. . . . then the Last Judgment came upon them; from two mountains there all were taken away in a moment, having so been led into their interiors, and were thus in a moment cast into the gulfs; some into the higher western one; some into the lower western one; some—a few—into the sea there; and some into the higher southern gulf. But the mountain which was in the middle, subsided in the middle; and those who were there were cast down deeply into Hell; and a black smoke rose up. (5651) Afterwards, visitation was made upon those mountains which were more towards the north, where were those who were from lower Italy; and it was found that when they had been left to their interiors, they had completely betaken themselves to idolatrous worship, and had made for themselves idols of various kinds . . . and had begun to worship them, saying that the ancients in this Earth had done so, and the Gentiles also, with whom it is well; and by means of various worships they had found out . . . the idols which had succeeded best, and that which had succeeded they had preferred. Thus the promiscuous crowd was worshipping idols . . . birds, fishes, serpents, images of the moon and of the sun, and so on. They had passed by the saints whom they had worshipped in the world, having found that they did not help them at all. Such a worship is innate in them, from the worship of images on earth. When, therefore, it was found that they were complete idolaters, worse than the idolaters on earth, in that they had denied the Divine, and had believed that such things helped them because [they do so] by correspondences, then came the Last Judgment upon those mountains; some were first assailed by an earthquake, which appeared like huge waves of the sea; and then the cities there were violently shaken, and the palaces there, and they fell down; and then the mountain land was turned over, and so rolled over them; and thus they were completely taken away from the face of the earth. Concerning the Inquisition of these . . . (5656) they were wont to treat all whom they met in this way:—They are able by their art to bring to themselves anyone whom they see, and to present him present with them, however he resists; and then they reveal his evils . . . and thus accuse and condemn him. If, then, they are not [thus] driven to receive their worship . . . they cast them into dusky caverns around their mountain; but still they are taken out by the Lord. (5652) The mountains which are nearer the north, where were the Neapolitans, and finally those from Sicily, who were the furthest away—these also were visited; and it was found that they had completely rejected their religion, and had deliberately seized upon contrary things, which they called false things, and which also were false things; thus that whatever was false, and what was contrary to faith, to the Word, and to the Divine, this they had seized upon and had worshipped . . . They had divided their mountain lands into two parts; in one part were the worshippers of falsity, and in the other were those who were in external holiness; saying that it is of advantage to worship the devil on the one side, and the Divine on the other, and so that thus they were safe both ways. Where their treasures were, they had placed those who were in external holiness, and the altars, and those who were constantly in the office; and thus they were preserving their treasures, for this is effected by means of such a perpetual faith; otherwise the treasures . . . with the evil vanish of themselves . . . (5653) (Those) who are at the other side, where are their saints, as they are called, because they are in holy external worship . . . do all things according to the pleasure of their commanders at the other side, who have the diabolical worship; thus does the one side favour the other, the holy things the profane ones; and so there is profanation there. Besides, by means of the holy things of the one side they have communication with those who are at the first threshold of Heaven, who dwell above them—there is a mountain land which rises up thence towards the Middle, where dwell all those who are simple good or upright—and with these they had acquired for themselves a good deal of communication; and in proportion as they had communication with these they have power. They speak to them, and perform mutual offices for one another; and sometimes they live together; but those who had been wicked, and had favoured them in evil doing, had been cast down from that wide mountain land; and so the power has been in part taken away from them. They who are on these mountains surpass others in malignity, especially those who are on the furthest mountains near the north; these are in such perspicacity and interior sharp-sightedness, that they were able to clearly discern the thoughts of others, and to recite all things; this is effected from the communication with those who are at the first threshold of Heaven; in a word, they are very perspicacious, especially those from Sicily . . . I told them that they place wisdom in wickedness . . . At these things they were speechless, and at last said that they do not know of there being any other wisdom than such as they have; and that the wisdom of others is only simplicity, in which they by no means wish to be. (5654) The reason the most wicked are near the northern quarter . . . is that, when they have been devastated, they become the most stupid of all . . . (5655) It has also been disclosed that they are worshippers of the devil: they have books containing the doctrine of their worship. (These books des.) They were asked why they do this, when they have whatever is necessary . . . They said that it is in order to be able to exercise dominion over all the others round about, and to possess all those things as to souls and bodies; and that they do not obtain this from the Divine . . . (5658) Then, the upright Spirits from whom they had their acuteness having been removed, they became insane, and rushed from the southern part of the mountain, where the worshippers of the devil were . . . into Hell . . . where there were black caverns into which they entered . . . and their city fell down into a heap. Those who were at the other side, where the external sanctities were . . . were also nearly all cast out thence into the northern gulf, where the stupid are . . . (See 5847, 5863, 4.)

advanced so far as almost to have profaned goods . . . As they were on high, and thus inflowed into the lower parts, and only into doctrinal things, they were therefore cast down thence, lest they should profane good with others.

5663a-5669a. On the Mohammedans, and on Mohammed; the Last Judgment. The Mohammedans dwell in the western part outside the Christian world, on many mountains there, to a great number. The better of them have been transported thence into the eastern part; namely, those of them who in the world had acknowledged the Lord as the Greatest Prophet, and had called Him the Son of God, and had believed Him to have been sent by the Father to instruct the human race, thus that He is wiser than all others: such, who at the same time have lived well according to their religion . . . have been transported towards the east; concerning which translation I have treated before (5258-5262) . . . (5664a) At the other side there remained . . . hundreds of thousands, in the confines where Christendom is terminated. There they worshipped that Mohammed (who had been cast down) as God, neither had they thought about the Lord, and but little about the God of the universe . . . They first made for themselves another Mohammed, among themselves; but when this did not succeed, they elected a certain one on a lofty mountain above Christendom, with whom they deliberated, and whom they obeyed as they had the first Mohammed. But that crowd . . . were not content with this, but also began . . . to introduce themselves into the Christian world; and, in various ways, and with various arts, they began to claim Power for themselves. They inflowed with some, and injured the Christians; and they also sent a very clever one to me, who put himself in possession of the province of my left ear, and for some time concealed himself, and thus he strengthens them from thence, so that at last they can scarcely be resisted. (5665a) But when this was disclosed, an inquiry was made, and it was found to be from those Mohammedans who are in the confines in the western part; and their quality was inquired into, and why they had done this, since they had not before introduced themselves into Christendom; and then it was found that that crowd was such that they worshipped Mohammed as a kind of god, and that they thought nothing about the Lord according to their religion; and inquiry was made as to what sort of an idea they had about God the Father, [and it was found] that they had no other idea than as of the created universe, and that the idea was devoid of the human idea, such as there is with all the rest; thus that they had no idea about God the Father. They said that from their religion they could think about the Lord, if they want, and could approach Him rather than Mohammed; but they said that they cannot do this, because in the world they had rejected this thought on account of Christians, who were enemies to them. It was then found that they are a wandering nation, and that they do not want to do anything, nor betake themselves to anything of work; as those do who are on the mountains there; and who have governments, and forms of governments. (5666a) As that crowd was such as to worship Mohammed so much (the real Mohammed was shown them).

He appeared gross in blackness, such as are corporeal men who have but little life . . . and are almost fools. He spoke to them, and said that he is such, and that he is among the corporeal there; and afterwards departed into his place. (5667a) There was afterwards brought forth the other Mohammed who was in bonds, and whom they were seeking for; and it was disclosed . . . that in the world he had been a native of Saxony, and had afterwards become a ship-captain, and had been captured by the Algerines . . . and had taken up the Mohammedan religion there . . . and had thus been imbued with both the Christian and Mohammedan religions . . . and had occupied that place in the Christian world . . . and when he had persuaded those who were in the confines that he was Mohammed . . . he had commanded them for quite a considerable time; acknowledging the Lord from the Christian religion, whence he could be led by the Lord . . . And there was also the other Mohammed, who was a Christian from Greece, who had a place behind him . . . and had been acknowledged by some . . . who had thought about a number of Mohammeds . . . (5668a) As to those who are on the mountains there, when they first come into the other life, they do indeed think about Mohammed; but they afterwards desert him, and think about God the Father, the Creator of the universe; and about the Lord, that He is the Greatest Prophet, the wisest of men, and the Son of God. Exploration was made as to what sort of an idea they had about the One God the Creator of the universe, and it was found that it is as something human. (5669a) Some of the Mohammedans, when they had heard many things about the Lord, wanted to accede to that Church; but it was said to them that they should remain in their own religion, provided they think about the Lord from their doctrine from the Koran . . . because they cannot acknowledge His Divine at heart, but only some of them with the mouth, and from the Intellectual; because from infancy they had imbued themselves with the faith of such things; and spiritual good has been formed from such things as had been of their faith in the world, which cannot be so suddenly extinguished by what is new of faith . . .

5696-5699. Concerning the Last Judgment. At length there were disclosed from the Christian world all those who were indeed in light as to spiritual things, but not in any charity as to the Voluntary . . . In the beginning such are accepted, and are delighted with Knowledges for the sake of no other uses than delectation. In the other life, moreover, such a delectation is augmented . . . but the Voluntary is then lulled, and does not appear. Such . . . appear on mountains here and there; and some of them on lofty mountains; partly within the middle, and partly in the western part. These conjoin themselves there, and consociate together and this widely by means of thoughts . . . They do not trust in the Divine, except intellectually, when it is well with them . . . Such also care nothing how the case is with the neighbour; they see, but render no aid. They present themselves harmless, or Angels . . . They bind themselves with the evil everywhere, and defend them . . . Such are they who interpose themselves between the Lord and the evil in the other life; nay, between the Lord and man . . . so that the Divine operation cannot have its way in lower things . . . (5697) Such were on a mountain in the middle; and such were on a rather high mountain in the western quarter towards the north; and round about everywhere on the mountains at the sides of the mountains round about. On the high mountain they did not appear; they could make themselves invisible; and they had conjoined themselves with all the others round about; and they all believed that they were in Heaven, because . . . they were in intellectual light, without celestial heat: hence they are the most dangerous of all, because they conceal themselves, and act in a hidden way with the evil: against the good they dare not act, until they see that they are beginning to turn aside; then they are present, and have more force . . . than the evil, because they are bound together with the simple good. (5698) When these had been found to be such, they were cast down from the mountains . . . and this as to myriads: those who were on the high mountain were cast down beneath their own mountain; the mountain opened itself and swallowed them, and they fell or were thrust down deeply, and were sent into great darkness; the darkness inflowed and took possession of them; darkness is falsities, which is in place of light with them. The rest were also cast into their own Hells, according to the quality of their will. (5699) After these had been cast down, the evil round about, who were openly attempting evils under their auspices, or by means of conjunction with them, then no longer had forces for resistance; and therefore they were then cast down into various Hells; some in the levels, some in the mountains. This took place on the 30th of March, 1757.

[D.] 5711-5721. Concerning the Last Judgment, and concerning the cities in the other life. The interior sight was opened to me, and I looked into that street of Stockholm called the Stora Nygatan . . . and I was afterwards brought into that street, and there were Angels with me who said that in the houses round about there there was not anyone alive, but all were dead, that is, spiritually; so that they were horrified, and did not want to go any further. When they are dead in the houses there, there appear no windows in the houses, but apertures, within which there is darkness; but when they are alive, windows appear, and men within them. I was afterwards brought to the Lilla Nygatan; there, it was said that some few were alive . . . They said that all the houses were full, but that those who are not alive do not appear to the Angels; but when Spirits, especially evil ones, are walking in the streets there, then windows appear, and men there, in light; for the evil see in their own light, and they also see those who are in the like light . . . (5712) I was afterwards brought to London, which is above, and I was conveyed there from the hinder part at the Minories almost as far as the Exchange; and it was said that they are not alive there, nor were they at the other side there; in Cheapside some were, and also on that side of St. Paul's Cathedral. I was conducted no further . . . (5713) It was said, further, that on the east side of London in the other life there is a little City, where the upright and good men dwell; but who appear vile to those who are in the city towards the west; and that it is not permitted for those who are in the city to enter into the City; they are prevented by guards; and moreover they cannot endure the sphere of their life . . . thus they are safe. They are at the east there, because the east is the good of love and of charity. It was further perceived that the great city is preserved so long as there is such a City there at the east; but that there is no such City at Stockholm. I was conducted also through that little City of London, and some there spoke to us. (5714) It was further said that outside every city there are nothing but robbers, in great numbers; the fields are full of them; and that no one dare go outside a city, because he then falls into the hands of the robbers . . . I was also conducted outside a city, and there was a crowd of robbers, who at once knew of what quality I was, and how they could assail me, and destroy me; for such things are their study . . . These robbers dare not enter into the cities; when they do enter, they are not admitted into any house, but they remain in the streets; and when they appear they are ordered to go out, which they also do; for when they remain in the streets they have not any power, because the law still reigns in the cities, and consequent security, as in the cities of the world. But if they are admitted into the houses, those who are there perish; but no robber is admitted into any house unless the house is such that those who are there can no longer stay; for as soon as they enter, and see the men in the house, they at once know their quality, and they bind themselves with their minds; and as soon as they are bound together they have communication with them, even when they are outside the cities; and thus they are infested until that house is devastated. (5715) It was further said that when a city is such that there are no longer any good there, it is then destroyed; and that this is their Last Judgment; and it was said that such cities are destroyed in a short time; and that the inhabitants therein are dispersed, and all are driven out to their own places. (5716) The reason there are such cities there, and like houses, is from men in the world who are in the cities and houses there; and that such there are in the other life such as they are in the world, in like houses; and because the correspondence is close and material according to the ideas of the thoughts of the men in the world. But now, in this last time of the Church, a different arrangement is being made, and a different correspondence; thus not so immediate and proximate a one; but more remote by means of correspondences. (5718) Part of the London city at the west was, moreover, being destroyed. (5719) It was said concerning those who were in the houses in the cities, who were not good, that they do not attend at all to heavenly things; they turn themselves away from them; and that they do nothing else than talk together about worldly and corporeal things; and eat and drink; and hear what is going on round about; as in the world with such; in a word, that the delights of the world and of the body are their life; and not at all the delights of Heaven. At first they had frequented the churches, but now the churches no longer even appear for them. (5721) It was further said concerning those in Stockholm, that they care for nothing except to hear what is being done within the city and outside the city . . . but nothing whatever concerning doctrinal things . . . They were binding themselves with those who were merely natural and material, although they knew that they were devils; they do this while walking in the streets, and out of doors; and they laugh at all things, so that there is nothing which is of the Church and of Heaven. Almost all are of this mind—that they want to lead others, and to exercise command; that is seated in them. I saw the vastation of a part of Stockholm: the left side of the street Nygatan was being completely destroyed, so that there were no longer any houses there, but only a waste; and also a part of the Södermalm, from the furthest away side there, up to the houses nearer to me, and [the people] were cast everyone according to his own nature.

5723. I saw a great number of priests snatched from Heaven who had adhered to (the dragon); and who, when explored, were completely against the truths of faith, being solely for external things and the world . . . All these never think about the Divine of the Lord . . . but solely of the human, that it was exactly like another man . . . some, that it was still viler. The most of these were from those who are in faith alone; and therefore these, from doctrine, are also such that they do not care about the life . . . and they were all cast into their lake at the southern side towards the eastern; and those who were there before, were cast still further in.

5729-5736. Concerning the Mogul, and concerning the Last Judgment. The Mongols are at the southern side, beyond Christendom. They are proud, and want to have eminence over all others. They are also hostile to Christians. I saw that these also were cast down into the Hells. The mountains there, in which they dwell, were numerous, and these were cast down; part subsided; from some they were cast into Hells; in some, into deserts. They are proud because they are rich; they have a diamond mine, and they have gold. All those underwent such a Judgment who think solely about Mohammed, and little about God; as do all there who are in the love of self.

5731-5736. On the vastation of those who are in no charity; concerning the Last Judgment. Meanwhile, those who were in faith alone . . . more than others rose up against the genuine Doctrine, without anyone's having harassed them; and they were congregated together, and finally came to the decision that they would stir up all they possibly could, from every quarter except the eastern one—they could not come thither, because they were protected by the Lord—and this as far as the Mohammedans at the western side, and to the Mohammedans at the southern quarter, besides in the northern quarter also, who were there upon mountains and in plains. They sent out from themselves around to a hundred places, to every place as many as fifty, in order that, being present, they might stir them up, and that they might serve them as Subjects; and those who remained behind they divided, by tens, who were to assist the former ones, and hold them in rebellion more strongly, with a mind to completely destroy the Heavenly Doctrine, because Heaven was said to be in charity, and not in faith separated from charity . . .

For this reason they were stirring up such a rebellion, with an obstinate determination to destroy the Doctrine itself; although they had previously been shown that this Doctrine comes from Heaven and from the Lord; which they had also acknowledged . . . but as they were without any charity, or without the good of life, therefore they still acted as wicked enemies against Heaven, and against the Lord. They also said that they knew that those things are from the Lord; and that they also know that all from every religion are left in peace, provided they acknowledge the Divine; and, in the Christian Church, the Divine of the Lord; and do not do evil to others who do no evil to them. But this was all in vain; for they were being remitted into their interiors, which were such that they were devoid of all conscience . . . nay, they did not know what conscience is. Such, then, had been those who were in faith alone; and therefore all those who were in no charity were dislosed, and were completely cast down from many mountains, and from the plains, up to many thousands, in vast numbers, and were cast down into Hells. (5732) Nay, they were such that they were conjoining themselves with the monks who also had been such, especially those who had believed themselves to be Christ, and that they had all the Power . . . and who had feigned holy things in externals . . . and in internals were such that they were in deadly hatred against all those who did not adore them as Christ . . . with these, also, they had conjoined themselves, and were acting as one. (5733) At last, when a great part had been cast down, it came to those leaders who were from faith alone, and therefore some of them became as black as devils both within and without, so that they were no longer recognized as men, but entirely as the blackest devils; and thus they were cast into Hells; everyone, however, according to his evil of life. (5734) This I can assert: that he who does not acknowledge the Divine, and, in the Church, the Divine of the Lord, and does not live the life of faith, which is that of charity according to doctrine, cannot be otherwise than cast into Hell; for he puts off everything human. A man is such as is his life, from head to heel; he who is black as to the life is wholly black. Let them think however they will, and persuade themselves against it however they will; nevertheless, it is an eternal Truth. Let them know, further, that men are saved from every religion, even those who are in the doctrine of faith alone, provided they live the life of faith, which is charity, and thus do not imbue such things inwardly within themselves as are diabolical. The external effects nothing, because if this is separated, then it is their internal which makes their life, and not the external without the internal. It has been commanded me that I should say this to them openly. (5736) These are they who are called by the Lord 'the he-goats,' of whom it is said that they had performed no charity, and that they were therefore to go into eternal fire; for they are in the dragon, and have constituted something in it. They had been for some time on their mountains, and had there led an external life, for they had been kept in such things. But when their thoughts were penetrating round about, and were infesting all, so that they did not know what it was to do good; then the external things were taken away from them, and it was shown of what quality they were. J. (Post.)167.

[D.] 5737-5739. Concerning the Last Judgment of the residue of the Catholic nation. Above the head there were many from the Christian world who showed me that they were in light more than others, and also in heat; and it was perceived that as they were there, and an evil fiery brightness was falling down thence before my forehead, it was perhaps not well with them; and that the light was false, and the heat filthy. It was then disclosed whence they had their heat and light. (5738) The heat was being introduced by those who were in the western quarter, by monks who had believed that they were Christ . . . These, in order to seduce all others they could, wherever they might be, were inventing arts, in order that they might be able to introduce heats, and this in different ways, and from various places, both good and evil; and this by means of translations, which can be done in the other life; for such things can be transferred to others; and they wanted thus to induce the belief that they were gods. (5739) Those who were infusing the light were also in the western quarter. [The two classes were] in two places there, upon mountains; upon one duplicated one towards the north; and upon the other towards the south. Those who were in the duplicated one . . . were also from the Catholic nation, who in like manner were skilled in the art of transferring light from the places where there was light, and also from genuine truths of faith which they had with them, and which had been permitted; but such were in the persuasion that it was Divine; but all these things were from nature; they infused a deadly persuasion concerning that thing . . . and thereby wanted to induce the belief that they were gods, and that they could give Heaven to everyone. Hence they were seducing many of the simple, who yet were good, and had been preserved; for they had a strong persuasive [power]. Their intention was, as also they were compelled to avow, that when they had induced that belief they would afterwards exercise dominion over the souls of all, and over Heaven, because Heaven was from them. Hence it came to pass that that mountain opened itself in the middle, and swallowed all, and they were sent into very great darkness there, which now and then is turned into infernal fieriness; and presently the mountain above opened itself, and all from it were also cast into the same gulf, and this to many hundreds of thousands. The like was done with the other mountain, which was more towards the south in the western quarter.

and then all were turned to them, in order that they might hear what they were saying. Then the Heavenly Doctrine was being rebutted by the dragonists, especially that concerning the Lord; and then everyone who was listening was reduced into the state of his thought concerning the Lord in which he was in the world; and then it was disclosed that most had rejected the Divine of the Lord, saying that they do not want to know anything about a visible God, but about an invisible one. It was said to them that the Lord also is an invisible God; for He is one with the Father, and is in the Sun, and is invisible in the world ever since His ascension from the sepulchre; and many things [were said to them] from the Word; but they all would have none of this. Examination was made, besides, as to whether they had placed anything of salvation in the life of faith; but they said, Nothing, but in faith: thus solely in thinking alone, and nothing in willing and doing, that is, in living. In a word, they were turned to all the quarters, and were explored as to what quality they were; and it was also said to them that it was the draconic Spirits who were pressing upon them, and to whom they were assenting; and that the Lord teaches otherwise. But all was in vain. This advanced through all the Heavens which have been collected since the Lord's Advent: and all there who were such as has been said, after a mighty combat, were judged for casting down. But they still insisted that they should remain there, because they had been there so long. (5743) On this account, the Lord was seen to descend from the Sun, as it were in a bright white cloud, into the loftiest heights; and He gave Judgment that all such were to be cast down; and, when He had returned into the Sun, they also were cast down; and this through a long time; successively, according to the connection of Heaven; and for the most part they were thrust down into the western quarter, where there was such a number that it cannot be calculated except by taking hundreds of thousands as a unit. But [I cannot] describe each and all things of the combat, which was a temptation; and, in fact, the most grievous one of all, lasting almost to despair: the Lord was holding them in the truth, and the devil in falsity; thus there was as it were an internal collision . . . (5744) The whole western quarter was full of such as had been cast down from the Heavens on every side; and there the earth opened itself, and they were covered over with a cloud, so that they should not rise up again any more. They were all such as had indeed acknowledged God, and had lived morally well; but had not thought about the Lord, except as of a common man like themselves; nor had they done what is good for the sake of God, and because it is commanded in the Word; but for the sake of themselves and the world. Nor had they abstained from thinking and willing evil; but only from doing evil, from fear of the law, of [the loss of] life, reputation, honour, and gain. In a word, they were those who, whatever they had done, they had done for the sake of themselves. (5749) In the beginning, all were taken into Heaven who had lived well, thus in the acknowledgment of the Lord, and in a good life for the sake of Him and the Divine precepts. But as they were few, and the Heavens were vast, many others were admitted, and at last all who had lived morally well ; and there was also given them happiness, and all things in abundance, so that nothing was wanting : and finally they began to admit others, from mere piety, provided they could simulate pious things ; and also such as appeared upright and pious in externals only, although in internals they were most wicked. Angels, also, had been sent to them by the Lord, who were manifesting such things to them, but in vain ; and therefore, as such a multitude had increased, so their interiors were for the first time opened, and they gave themselves to them : but all the good had been taken out thence, and had been concealed in various places, and had afterwards constituted a new Heaven. (5746) Thus perished the old Heaven and the old earth ; and all those who had not lived the life of faith, which is charity, were cast into Hell. They were also called 'the he-goats who were on the left,' who had given nothing to anyone from internal charity, but only for the sake of what is external. These things lasted from the 31st of March to the 11th of April when was the feast of the Passover, 1757. (5747) All those are called 'Michael' who were fighting for the Divine of the Lord, and that He and the Father are one ; and thus that there is one God ; and also for the life which is called the life of faith . . . Those who were 'Michael' were chiefly from the ancient Heavens . . . and from those who were in them from the Gentiles, and from infants everywhere then [become] adults. (5748) The western quarter was full of those who had been cast down, from the northern corner up to the anterior southern one ; some were also elsewhere. But the dragonists advanced from the line from the southern [quarter], of which before, into the hinder western one as far as towards the north, in a curved line like a tail, but in thick darkness there beneath the tract. (5749, See the narrative continued under FORMER HEAVEN, here.) (5750) Meanwhile continual purifications had been effected ; for those who had led an evil life, in adulteries, thefts, thus who had been criminal atheists in the world, had not been admitted ; but had been cast into Hell. Purification from such had always been going on ; but still it had been as in the body with the blood ; although it is continually being purified, nevertheless it verges to the death of the whole. Hence, now, a new Heaven. J. (P.) 168.

5758-5767. Continuation concerning the Last Judgment. A description has been given (See above, 5731-5736) of how those from the Christian world were dealt with : the leaders who had endeavoured to destroy the Kingdom of the Lord, and Heaven, were chiefly from those who are in faith alone ; these had congregated, with their dignitaries, and had agreed to be on the look-out on every side for those who were acknowledging the truths of faith, or the Heavenly Doctrine. They sent out by fifties on every side, into a hundred places, and bound themselves together with the diabolical crew ; and part of them remained and were communicating with the former, and were assisting them. So it had begun. But at last all such were cast down and dispersed, and those who were like them. (5759) Afterwards, there were cast down those who utterly despised erudition and knowledges . . . who were very numerous. This also lasted long. Afterwards, there were cast out those who had perceived delight in the fact that others were suffering, and who had invented unheard-of arts for doing evil to others, striking a pain into the body and lower mind, and continually keeping the thought in that pain, and sending those who injected despair also ; and who had also instilled weariness of life, and a continual longing for deliverance from pain or from any evil whatever ; which two things inflict such pain and torture that it cannot be described. Such, also, were cast down in vast numbers ; besides like ones who had perceived delight in the torture of others. There were also cast down all who were communicating with those who were beneath, because they were outside their territory. For these had a mind to command and to lead others ; or else they had not cared for their own. (5760) I saw those who remained collected into one ; and these, together, appeared like one man. They who were outside had been cast out. Those who appeared together as one man were those who were in charity. (5761) Afterwards, there were sent down, and not so much cast down, those who had been in worldly things in preference to heavenly ones . . . thus with whom worldly and corporeal things had prevailed ; for these could not be on high, because they cared for nothing else than to look down thence, and to communicate with lower things. Those who looked down were all sent down, because they cared for earthly things ; but those who had not looked down, remained. There were various kinds of such ; and I heard the sending out and casting down of them for a long time, thus to innumerable myriads. They were sent down into the plain, or into the lower parts, where were their eyes and minds ; and those who were evil into the Hells. All these were from the second resurrection. (5762) In their place others were carried up by the Lord, who had meanwhile been separated from those who were upon the mountains, and had been kept in concealment, and protected up to this time, and they succeeded in their place, and are making a new Heaven. All these were such as were in charity towards the neighbour and in derivative faith, or who were in good and had conscience from the Lord ; and who, when anything evil [had come up] had thought, This is contrary to what is true and good, contrary to the Divine precepts, contrary to God ; and, from the Christian world, those who had worshipped the Lord. This lasted from the beginning of the year 1757 ; and the elevation of the good to constitute a new Heaven, from the end of the month of April, into the month of May. (5763) The greatest part, unto many millions, which was continued for a long while, came down because they looked down, and they were joined with those who were beneath, and were without. By this they were joined with devils, made defence of them, made compacts with them as with their own, began to lust to dominate around themselves, and to do evil to all those whom they saw were without defence. All these did not belong to the mountains, but had moved thither, and had made their home among those who had been there before, and who had been good ; and who, in order that they should not be seduced, were now taken away by the Lord, and concealed in many different places. Nay, in some places, those who had ascended had driven away all who had been there before ; and had established themselves in their place.

They who had thus ascended are of the second resurrection, who also had been driven down and carried away, and the others had come in their stead ; as also all such as had died as children and had been educated in the spiritual life, and they constitute there a new Heaven and a new earth. (5764) Afterwards, there were also sent down those who had been pieties ; they were on a high rock in the middle of it, invisible to the rest, who had led a life of piety, but not any of charity. There were two kinds of them ; one in falsities, who attributed all things to immediate mercy, and also merit to self . . . so that they had not cared to know doctrinal things, and to imbue the internal man with them, provided they were in a holy external, in prayers, in churches, in conversation. The other kind despised the neighbour in comparison with themselves, believing themselves alone to be worthy of Heaven, and at heart condemning others who had not lived as they had. The latter and the former were also looking down below themselves to those who were below, and were wanting to direct all whom they saw there ; thus they had a mind to exercise command ; and it gave them the opinion that they were Angels, because they were on high. They inflicted a heaviness on the interiors of the loins to the right ; with those who were in falsities, the pain was determined towards the urethra ; [with those] who were in the love of self, towards the anus. They said that they had thought little about the Lord, but not about God, about the Father. They were also anxieties ; and therefore they must be together, and must not inflict sadnesses on the Angels, who are joys.

[D.] 5765-5769. Concerning Babylonia, and those destroyed from the old Heaven. I saw and heard many myriads of Spirits who were on mountains and rocks east down thence, and east here and there into deserts, here and there into gulfs, and here and there into other Hells ; all of whom with the mouth spoke about God and Heaven, but at heart they had the world ; and this from Spirits who were in Christendom. All those were cast down who were looking around to other mountains, and to other rocks, and had entered upon a Society with them, in order that they might thus defend themselves against infesters ; and had not had regard to the one God, to the Lord, who was protecting them ; thus who had wanted to be safe and happy there from themselves and their own prudence, and not from the Divine ; a sign that they had been such in the world. Especially have those been cast down who were looking down from lofty [places] towards lower ones ; and who were infesting those whom they saw, by various methods and arts ; finally, all who were looking down ; for those who were not looking down were caring for none but their own houses, and were trusting in the Lord . . . These have been preserved. (5765b) There were besides, those who, by various arts Known in the other life . . . had made for themselves as it were a Heaven ; not that it was felt with interior joy, but with exterior, which soothed the external senses ; and therefore had made for themselves magnificent things . . . both as to the floorings and the things on them, and as to clothing and other adornments, and also as to altars. They had summoned to themselves all the magicians and artificers who could present such things by means of their arts ; and they themselves, taught by them, had also done so. They had looked upon all the upright and good as simple ones, and had wanted to have services from them ; but when they wanted also to seduce them, [the latter] had all been taken out by the Lord, and had been landed elsewhere, and hidden up to this time. That there was so great a number of such I could never think ; there were many myriads. And, what was wonderful, they were also on lofty mountain places, where they were not seen, except as a mist ; and most of them had believed that Heaven was there ; and they had also vaunted themselves as being in Heaven, and had called themselves Angels of Heaven ; although there was nothing Divine with them ; and they had believed that God rules only universally, and they each and all things : thus they were devoid of faith concerning the Divine Providence, and had almost made themselves gods. The Lord they considered no otherwise than as a common man . . . Hence most of them had been consociated in mind with the Hells. (5766) I saw that the faces of many had been turned to one who was not such, who had not thought about the world, but about Heaven ; and not about himself, but about the Divine, especially the Lord ; and who had believed that he has nothing of Power from himself, but from the Lord. On seeing him, thousands of thousands were so hostile that they had all conjoined themselves together to torture him in many ways. Thus were they manifesting themselves as to (their hostility to the Lord). All these were marked ; they were upon some mountains . . . (5766a) Those who were there, appeared in a shining city, as if they were in Heaven, but having been explored, [it was found] that all were such as above described ; and that they were interiorly hypocrites, namely, that they could speak about Heaven, etc., but still did good to no one except themselves, that is, for the sake of themselves. It was shown that some were interiorly hypocrites, and some exteriorly ; and that the interiors of the mind . . . with them were completely closed, and the exteriors open towards the world : hence they cared for nothing except such things. (5766b) These were affecting him who was in such faith and charity evilly . . . even to cruelty, but still he was taken away by the Lord from their fierceness ; and then all of them having been explored, they were cast down from two mountains which were at the right, within the sphere of Christendom where the Word was ; and thus those mountains were emptied of such. There were others besides, round about, especially at the left, who appeared as it were very high above the head. These were explored, and it was found that they were interiorly hypocrites ; and these were in like manner cast down. These, also, were most hostile enemies against those who had done what is good from the heart, although the latter had done no evil to them, and had not spoken anything of evil to them. Such are all who, although they know and speak truths, still do not do truths. (5768) At the back there was a large plain ; a little elevated there, were those who had made a display of piety, and with the mouth had spoken about God, and had prayed that He would be merciful, and had thereby also imbued their thoughts ; and had also frequently and habitually approached the Holy Supper ; and yet had had nothing such at heart; had lived altogether a life of the world, and an evil one; had thought nothing interiorly about God such as they had spoken. These were those who were in the highest degree hostile against him who has been spoken of above, and wanted to destroy him in every way. These, also, were all cast into marshes outside the plain; and part were also cast towards the front, into vaults. (5769) I also saw somewhere on the mountains and rocks, where there were the good mixed with the evil, how they were separated; the good were in the middle and were consociated together, and when looked at by me, they appeared as one man. Those who were outside him were all such as could not be received within the Society of the good; and they were rejected.

5786-5792. Concerning those who have been cast down from the Heavens, Babylon: concerning the Former Heaven. The casting down from the Heavens had lasted long, and this up to myriads. All those were cast down who had been in the love of self. . . . When they look at anyone who worships the Lord, they become as if they were insane, and endeavour to injure him. . . . All such, when turned to me, became such, and hated all the things which have been written concerning the Lord. (5786a) At last, also, there were cast down those who had not acknowledged the Lord as God, but had acknowledged the Father. . . . (5786b) . . . They inflict pains, anxieties, fears, and thus exercise dominion over others; and therefore they go upon mountains and rocks, in order to see far and wide those who are lower, and thus infest them. Most of the cities there are at the sides of the mountain or rock; and those who are congregated in the society go out thence, and thus act. . . . for to exercise dominion and to injure is their inmost joy. . . . Some who are such speak to the evil who are below, and they know how to bind their minds with themselves. . . . whence there are consociations of such with the Hells; and therefore they were cast down. There were in the cities such as had been bound by the evil; but such are then for the most part known; for the evil have them bound together with themselves, which shows itself to others. (5789) It is to be known that all Spirits in whom the love of self is seated, believe Heaven to consist in what is high. . . . and therefore they climb up into mountains, higher and higher, and believe that thus they are in Heaven. . . . for they can look around on every side, and by their thoughts can inflow into and rule all whom they see below. The extension of their sight is great, even into the mountains round about at a great distance, with whom they speak, and to whom they send out Subjects, by whom they are conjoined together and bind themselves in confederacies. . . . and when so it has been done, they begin to exercise dominion over all who are round about, conjointly. . . . I have seen some such Societies in the loftiest places, where I supposed were the Angels of Heaven. . . . But all such were cast down. . . . at which I wondered at first, because I supposed there were Angels there. . . . (5789a) I saw some so high up that you would have said they were at the stars of Heaven; nevertheless they were not there with the body. It is to be known that in the other life everyone, wherever he may appear, is really in that place where his reigning love is, and that those who are in the loftiest [places] are really in the lowest; which I have often seen, in that in a moment they were in Hell. . . . All those were cast down, having first been explored by this: that they were turned to lower things; and those who then. . . . wanted to inflow into others, to lead them to exercise dominion over them, and to do evil to them, were cast down; and this for a long time to many myriads. . . . (5790a) Those who are not such rest quietly in their houses, being content with their own, and performing the works enjoined upon them. These are they who are in the enjoyment of heavenly joy, because it is in them, and not without them. . . . (5791a) Most of such (as are in the love of self) ascend into mountains and rocks, and when they arrive seek nothing else than that they may be set over others. Thus they refuse to be in any employment, saying that they do not know any, and that they had been such. When inquiry is made in respect to their quality, [it is found] that they have been those who have cared for nothing except exercising dominion over others, and that they are good-for-nothings, lazy; but they want to be honoured by others; and when they do not obtain this, they betake themselves outside the Society, and look down, and exercise dominion over all whom they see, and do evils to them, because they love no one except themselves. Such exist as to the greatest part in Germany, Sweden, Denmark, and elsewhere; but few in England, because there they care for their own household and business affairs. (5791b) Such are being cast down in myriads, which is effected by this: that the Lord separates the good from them; thus takes away the communication with the good. . . . and then their quality appears. . . . Such never care for anything of wisdom; they speak as if they understood all things, but they have no intelligent idea about any subject. . . . (5791c) A great part of them were those who were running about to wherever they found delight, from one place to another, leaving all things at home, and thus taking away from others the delight of their life, like the Societies of Friendship, and drawing it into themselves; by which others who had delight from uses and in their offices, were reduced into a miserable state. And they did this, because in the world they had not applied themselves to any offices, except for the sake of honour and gain, and thus of pleasure; and had done nothing for the sake of use. . . . As, in the other life, such are good-for-nothings, they run about to wherever there is said to be any delight. All these were cast down, and were reduced into a state of undelight and misery, until at last they should perceive something of delight in performing uses. Moreover, when these persons come to others, they enter into their houses, and stay there, although those who are there say no; and thus the possessors partly go out of their houses of themselves, and are partly driven out by these newcomers. (5792) I have [also] seen the former and the others, not cast down, but subside; the hill or mountain yawning in the middle, and them cast down in this way into the deep. They climb the mountains in various places, and by various arts, and they also summon and receive magicians and very deceitful ones who defend them, and whom they post around them. The greatest part of such climb not by ways outside, but inside; for there are Cities beneath Cities. When they constitute one Society, the communication is effected by means of open ways: an open way is a descent by a way. There is an ascent by means of ladders (or stairs) from one City into another which is not so like it. Most of such had ascended, by ladders, from lower to higher places; hence there was so great a multitude. They had also descended, by ladders, from city to city. When they are at the highest they do evils to all who are around, and when detected they descend, and hide themselves in caverns and other places, which wind about, and so they are not found. . . (5792a) Some were from those who had indeed frequented churches and the Holy Supper, but merely from habit. . . (5792b) Most of them had made use of phantasies to procure for themselves an image of Heaven, as to buildings and magnificent things; for they knew that they are blown in through such evil Spirits as they had. . . posted round, and also by magic. . . (for) they made nothing of communicating with the infernals. . . (5792c) When they had been explored [it was found] that almost all these had delight in exercising dominion and acquiring gain, and none of them in use; so that they had had no delectation whatever from use, but all from dominion and gain; and that they had regarded these merely as those things from which they had their joy and happiness; so that they were corporeal and natural. . . There were some who had wanted gain and wealth for the sake of honour and dignity. . . there were some who had wanted honours for the sake of gain; there were some who had wanted them for the sake of magnificent things in their houses, gardens, garments, attendance, feasts, and the like. . . Such Spirits are now around everyone in this world, because such are almost all who come into the other life. And therefore all these were separated; and in their place succeeded those who had been reserved by the Lord; who had been delighted with uses; and from whom is the New Jerusalem. Of what quality, in general, were those who were in the Former Heaven, see (above, 5070).

[D.] 5805. I saw some thousands of Spirits congregated together into one, so that Spirits were seen in a great space, as far as the eye could reach. They were from those who had been cast down from mountains and rocks into a plain; and I was then told that at first all are thus congregated together; and that then it is instilled into them from the Lord whither each one is to betake himself; and that he knows this, just like anyone who goes out of his house, and then returns to it. When this has. . . been instilled into each one, they depart from each other of themselves, each to his own abode; and then they are in order.

5807-5810. Concerning the separation of the Christians and of the gentiles; that the Lord has betaken Himself to the gentiles. For a long time, by influx from the Christian world, I laboured in my breast; they inflowed and infested my heart and lungs; some the heart, and some the lungs; and at the same time my lower mind, in various ways. This lasted many weeks, perhaps months; and I was reduced to such an extremity, that for the sickness of heart and mind I knew not whither to betake myself. At last I was brought to the end of it; and inquiry was made as to whom this was from. It was from Christians: it was found that the infestations of the heart and lungs streamed from those on high, who had said that they believe in three Persons; and who also had been separated according to their faith, and their own ways given to all, in order that they should go out from Heaven, and descend to their own places. (5808) The exploration lasted for hours; and there were brought out of the Christian world: 1. Those who had believed in Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. 2. Those who had acknowledged the Lord, but had thought nothing about His Divine. 3. Those who had been in the belief that He is one with the Father, but in various ways. 4. In a word, some [were brought out] in one way, and some in another. Those who had acknowledged His Human, and had rejected His Divine, as the Moravians, had inflicted a pain in my right arm, at the shoulder-blade; or as the Socinians, a breaking of the bones of the breast. In a word, the Christians were explored as to what faith they had concerning the Lord, and His Divine, and His conjunction with the Father. Some of them had thought quite sanely; but few. All were felt by their influx into the breast, and by the various heavinesses [which they caused]. (5809) I was then separated from those who are in the Christian world, who were at the left; and I was brought by the Lord to the gentiles, who were shown as to what faith they had in God. They were, 1. Those who had worshipped an invisible God and a visible God. 2. Some who had made two from them; some who had made one from them. 3. Some had been instructed by Christians that God has been born a Man, and had therefore received the Christian faith; but when they had heard that they distinguished the Divine into three Persons, they had gone away. Many had made one out of the three, believing that although Christians said three, they still thought of one. 4. Some who had not understood what being born from eternity is: they had been told, and they had comprehended well. 5. Some, who were the best, had believed that God is altogether a Man, and that this is implanted in everyone. 6. Some had thought in themselves for some ages before, that God had been altogether born a Man; but they had not known where. They had made inquiry, and had heard that it was in Jericho; and so had contentedly retained that word, and had held it as holy. Whenever these were thinking about God born a Man, they saw a bright star in the air. 7. The wiser of the gentiles [are] from those who in Africa think concerning the Divine Human of the Lord as it is becoming to do; and are wise. They also have a Book, which to them is the Word; but it is not, like ours, written in a like manner by correspondences; it has been written by enlightened men; the latter are in Africa. 8. I was told that there is a book among the Mohammedans, which is in their hands, and is common there, in which some pages have been written by correspondences, and from which (pages) there is some light thence in the Heavens. All were felt by their influx into the breast, as to what quality they were; and also by the more ungrateful and the more grateful sensations. (5810) I was afterwards brought to those who were of the ancient Churches; of whom some were acknowledging an invisible Divine, and a visible one ; some in one way, and some in another. And afterwards to the Most Ancients, who are in the acknowledgment of the Divine and of Divine things exactly as they have been revealed to me. They examined them, and agreed with them.

5812, 5813. Concerning the destroyed Babylonia, and the inundation ; concerning the modern Nephilim. There were some from the Papal religion in the western quarter at the northern, who were the worst of all, who had miserably and most cruelly treated all who would not acknowledge them as gods. Their wicked deeds I pass over ; some of them have been described before. They had their emissaries everywhere, endeavouring to seduce all whom they could, betaking themselves upon the higher places, from which they could look forth upon the lower ones, and rule ; and wherever they found any diabolical Spirit in the World of Spirits, they adjoined him to themselves, and introduced evils. Their arts are more than can be described. But before their deceits and cruelties had come to a height, or had been consummated, they had been destroyed in various ways, having been continually cast down into the Hells ; but still their number had increased daily ; and they persisted with such obstinacy that they would never desist. They saw the Hells before them, and torments ; it was denounced against them that such a lot is for them ; they saw those who were cast in from their own number in thousands, and their torments. But still it was in vain. Sometimes the surface of their [earth] was turned over ; but still they made nothing of it. They were in such obstinate wickedness from the love of self. At last the Last Judgment came upon them, and they were inundated as with waters, and all were immersed in the Hells, in myriads. In like manner those of the same sort who had departed into the more lofty places in the northern quarter were also inundated. Some of them were cast into the Hell where the Nephilim are, because they are like them. Some of them appear bald ; some altogether bristly : those who are bald had been inmost in evils ; those who are bristly had been completely in falsities. (5813) On the following day an inundation took place over a great part of the north side, which advanced to some extent into the east ; and all who were in evils there, were immersed, for they would not desist from attacking the Divine, having been started by the Papal crew. Some of the little mountains were also submerged, whence they cannot any more climb up the mountains, or go through a way upon the mountains and be taken away ; but they at once enter the Hells . . .

5814-5820. On those who are in a holy external ; the Last Judgment. There were many on a mountain in the northern quarter, who in the world had been in a holy external, and in no affection of truth . . . being scarcely willing to hear about spiritual truth, except merely the first theological rudiments. They were explored as to what they had thought about the Lord ; and it was found that they had never thought about His Divine, but solely about His human, as if He were only a man like anybody else ; and that His Divine consists in the fact that He is loved by the Father. They operated into the lower ribs of the left side, and inflicted a pain. These were cast down from that mountain to many thousands ; and they were told that they could serve for ultimates in the Lord's Kingdom, which correspond to the shoes of the feet. A shoe also appeared, which touched their faces. They were so simple as to be of no value. (5815) . . . Thus, with them, truths had been scientific without any mental view . . . and they had believed that they would be saved by a holy external . . . Being such, they were removed in myriads into the western quarter towards the eastern ; and there a region was given them ; but under the earth. The reason it was under the earth, was that they had been able to serve the infernal crew as a support . . . Therefore they were kept in concealment under the earth, in order that those who do something from the heart might serve as the ultimates of Heaven. Those who had believed that salvation consists in prayers and in mere devotion, and had been sedulous therein, and had also lived well, were collected into one, and were transmitted into a city which is at the southern quarter, where are those who had lived a Christian life. They at first believed that they should receive heavenly joy . . . and therefore there was given them something that they wished for, in feasting, etc. . . . but they said that this was not the heavenly joy to them which they had looked for. But they could never find any joy except being in their devotion and their prayers . . . and therefore it was granted them to be among the good in that city, to have intercourse there, and to seek their own joy of whatever kind they wanted ; and if they did not obtain it, then they were in their devotion, and at the same time in consociation with others, with which things they were content. (5816) Afterwards, all who were in that Heaven were sent down, and it was shown that they had raised themselves up into the mountains and hills by means of phantasies ; and that they were not there ; for they appeared before the Angels of Heaven who were with me, below me, in their own place . . . at the level of the Earth. When they were seen there, they were covered over with a cloud, from falsities ; and afterwards by the earth ; and so they were covered over, [that is] those who were not so evil, to many myriads : those who were evil were seen in the same way beneath them in the deep . . . Those who were thus being kept in concealment under the earth were the most of those who were good round about below the World of Spirits ; others were about the south-western quarter ; others were at the north-eastern quarter ; and so on. (5819) All those were preserved in Heaven who in the world had acknowledged the Divine of the Lord, and had lived well ; especially those who had acknowledged the Divine Human. But the rest, who had not acknowledged the Divine of the Lord . . . were sent down out of Heaven, and were cast down. Many wanted to acknowledge the Divine of the Lord in the other life who had not acknowledged it in the world ; but in vain ; they did it with the mouth, and not with the heart. (5820) The evil threw themselves into the mountains from the cupidity of exercising command ; for thus they could look forth all around, and exercise command. Those who were not evil had ascended because they had believed Heaven to be there.

5821. The ordination of the Heavens ; the Last Judgment.

ment. Finally, the Heavens have been ordained. 1. Those were led forth who had thought about the Divine of the Lord, and whose ideas were open; and they were distinguished into classes. 2. Those who had thought about His union with the Father, in like manner. 3. Those who when thinking about the Lord had thought solely about His Human, and nothing about His Divine; although they had known, still they had not thought about it. 4. Those who had thought of three Persons of the Divinity, and had been hostile against all who had not believed in the same way as they; these also were distinguished in special; and so on . . . 5. Then, those who had acknowledged the Father alone: these were perceived to be as it were without a God; and were rejected outside of Heaven. 6. Those who had not believed in the Lord from eternity, but that He had been born His Son.

[D.]5828, 5829. Concerning those who are in faith alone, that they have become heathens of no religion. Those who had confirmed themselves in the doctrine of faith alone . . . and had committed nothing of truth and good to life, because they had rejected all moral life and good works, saying . . . that no evils are any longer imputed, because the Lord has fulfilled the law; these became rebels again and again, wanting to completely destroy the Heavenly Doctrine . . . and at last they were explored, and it was found that they had committed to life nothing of Christian truth and good; and then the doctrinal things which were merely . . . matters of memory were taken away from them . . . and they appeared destitute of garments . . . and then they understood nothing whatever, not even what is just or fair; and were exactly like the Gentiles who are of no religion, because they had lived without religion . . . They were cast into a certain southern dark gulf . . . and thus were taken away out of the World of Spirits. (5829) Others appeared in front, who had only known doctrinal things from memory, and had not thought anything about them. These were divested, in like manner . . . and became like heathens of no religion, and were cast into a gulf which was in the eastern quarter near the southern, where are the dragonists. All these were dragonists; both the former ones, and these. These latter ones inflowed into the pulsation of the heart; the former ones, into the respiration.

5831. Concerning those who have been cast down from on high, and from Heaven. All were explored as to whether they look down into lower places, or round about from on high; and all who had looked down from desire, were cast down . . . This has lasted long. Thus have they been cast down from the Former Heaven; and thus have the Societies of Heaven been expurgated. They were often told that by so doing they appear to the evil Spirits who are below, who know how to adjoin them to themselves; and when once they have been adjoined they cannot be separated; and thus they admit the infernal crew within the Society. Those who do uses, and love the good of the Society, do not know what it is to look around and to look down; there is a counterforce when they think of it; and all who are such are invisible to all around; for thus they turn their backs to such things. They look down in various ways . . . and most have in mind to command others, and to injure others; this has been done thousands and thousands of times. Thus were they cast down from the Former Heaven; thus were the dragonists cast down; and those who were in faith alone . . . and many others. All who look down are in a mind foreign to the minds of the Society.

5833. I spoke with the Pope newly deceased. (Benedict XIV. died in the year 1758.)

5838, 5839. For long, and through a duration of years, I have seen how all the Reformed have been purified according to nations; and this in an admirable order, according to affections, and their genera and species. The purifications were effected in various ways, especially by the presence of the evil; thus by a species of fermentations; whence appeared those who were in the delight of that evil; and then they were separated from the others; and were cast down thence into various quarters, especially into the northern and southern ones; where they have been ordained into Societies; and this in lower places; the evil in marshes and lakes. All those who went forth from their Societies, and looked around them, being such that they did not esteem the delight and use of the Society, were cast down; most into marshes and lakes; thus beneath the earths, to prevent them from looking around them, and thus conjoining themselves with the evil. For those who were such were infesting (also) those who were around, because they were then outside their Society, believing themselves to be thus in freedom; and when anyone supposes himself to be in freedom, he then comes into his interiors, not being then withheld by external bonds, as in the Society; and therefore they at once came into a different state. Those who are such that they want to inflict troubles and evils on others, want to go out of their Societies, and thus to do evils in safety. And then some of those who had gone out had bound themselves together with evil Spirits below . . . and when they had entered their Society they were bound together with the evil Spirits; for he who is once bound to them is kept bound by them wherever he is; and therefore the evil Spirits were communicating with them within the Society, and thus could do evil to the Society; and therefore when the Society began to be infected by them, it was in various ways purified from them. This lasted long. There were also those who had hidden themselves in lower places, and who rose up, and did in like manner, and afterwards returned. But all such were found and cast out. (5839) Some were also skilled in the arts of looking down in the houses themselves, and of seeing and hearing those who were below, and also at the sides. All those who had acted in like manner were found, and cast out. They inflicted the itching of the itch on my body. They all were such as had not delighted in any use for the sake of use; but some had performed a use for the sake of food, and for the sake of honours, reputation, and gain, as ends; in a word, idleness had been their delectation; and those who love idleness more than use, collect evils into their spirit; for they do not determine the mind to use, but to such things as are in the world; thus to filthy things and to evils of every kind; from which they are well withheld if they receive delectation from uses. Such purifications of the nations of the Reformed have lasted long. It was granted to them, as before, after they had been devastated, as it were to climb up to places where before there had been like ones who had formed the Former Heaven; and then they were ordained by the Lord so that they should go in a way which stretched to a Society conformable to them, or to marshes and Hells; from which ways they were not allowed to turn aside; and if they did turn aside they were punished. Those who turned aside had a cupidity to do evil [to some one], or to set themselves in freedom, in order that they might do evils; and therefore the ways were guarded on both sides; and he who went outside the guard was punished, and cast into his own Hell. The explorations [made to discover] of what quality they were, are many; and were clearly seen by the Angels by means of turnings to the quarters.

5841. I spoke with the last Pope three weeks after his death: I spoke to him for some days . . . 1758, 21st to 25th of May. 5843.

5856-5866. Concerning the destruction of the subtle Spirits from the Mohammedans, the Babylonians, and the Reformed. The wandering crowd from the Mohammedans who were anteriorly in the western quarter at the southern, began to look towards the Christian world, and thus to infest it; and they had communication with the most wicked Babylonish crew in the west, who were skilled in making themselves subtle, so that they were not seen by anyone; and with whom there also communicated some of the Reformed, who also were skilled in the art of rendering themselves invisible; so that they were seen by no one, although they were among them. (5857) The Mohammedans, conjointly with the Babylonians, began to obsess my left ear, and to post cohorts of Spirits round about, in order to accomplish their intentions; and they did this so insensibly and invisibly, that it scarcely came to the sensation; but still they were at once detected; and the Mohammedans . . . were destroyed by having the earth where they were rolled back upon them; and thus they were cast into Hell. (5858) Afterwards, the Babylonians were disclosed who had made one with them. They were in an obscure corner among the anterior mountains in the west . . . and a little behind those mountains where were the Neapolitans and Sicilians. There was also a mountain there upon which the chiefs had their homes. They had found out that art in order to render themselves quite invisible to everyone, even to those close by . . . and those who were upon the mountain could also cast themselves upwards, and stay in the air . . . so that in this way they fled away from all destruction. But destruction came upon them; and for some minutes that faculty was taken away from them; and they were cast round about into gulfs and Hells. Presently, those were visited who stood in front, and rendered them aid; and these also were cast into the Hells. The Judgment advanced further, to those who were within, and this in a long tract; first towards the north; and then in a line further into the west where the Sicilians were who were all skilled in that art; and these were in like manner deprived of that faculty; and were cast into the Hells near there, where there appeared what is fiery and very dim. (5859) Among these there were also some who were skilled in the art that they could not only present themselves invisible, but could also cause that no one should know where they were, whether in this or that quarter; and they supposed that thus they should be safe; and that they could commit any crime without the possibility of detection. The latter and the former were communicating with some on the anterior mountains; and all who were making one with them were cast into the Hells. There was the design among them that when there was so great a multitude of like ones that they could attempt it, they would destroy all things; which they also confessed. (5860) They had been preserved to the end that by their means there might also be disclosed all in the Christian world who could make themselves invisible. . . . For there were in the Christian world among the Reformed those who by peculiar approaches had ascended into the Societies where were the good Reformed; and were there hiding themselves, by making themselves invisible as soon as they saw any; so that those who were in the Society did not know that they were there. As these had communication with those wicked Babylonians, they were all disclosed, and were cast down from the Societies on every side. They were from many Societies which looked towards the west. Their art, by which they had made themselves invisible, was disclosed. It was a peculiar art, which could not be learned except by some who in the world had exegitated various arts . . . (5861) Finally, the destruction advanced to the Mohammedans who were in the west in front; and these were all covered over by the earth which was under them; for they were looking towards the Christian world, which had been forbidden them.

5871-5876. Concerning the state as to the spirit after the Last Judgment. . . All Spirits, after they have been vastated, are now brought by ways which extend to the Societies of their life . . . nor is it allowed to turn aside elsewhere, and to stay in other places; still less to form for themselves Societies according to their life in externals, as before. (5872) . . . They go to their Hells directly, without delay. (5874) Hence man now has freedom to think well; for before, men were infested by the evil, who had infused evil affections; and to these the evil above had added themselves; so that freedom to think well was taken away. (5875) Besides, there had long been received into Societies such as could hide their interiors, and present themselves good; but the Societies have been continually purified from such . . . all these have been separated and cast down . . . (5876) It was long permitted that they should pass through the lofty places . . . but afterwards, it is not so allowed; except with some by whom the Societies are to be purified.

5882. Concerning a New Heaven. I saw that those who had been reserved by the Lord were elevated in myriads; and those who were elevated appeared like what is aerial rising up from the earth after rain, when the heat of heaven comes upon it.

[D.] 5889. That all who had looked down have been separated from the rest . . . This has also been done in the Societies of Heaven, where are the upright and the good. Those who did not belong to the Society could not do otherwise than apperceive the things which were below, because they were not in the bond of the Society; and therefore these also have been separated thence, and have been brought into their own Society . . . in order that they might be reduced to their own reigning affection.

5908. There were given to a certain Spirit the books on Heaven and on the Last Judgment . . . 5946<sup>e</sup>.

5937. Concerning the Last Judgment upon the Reformed. This lasted for a long time, because they have the Word; and they were cast out in many ways. Most who had not been cast into the Hells before, or taken up into Heaven, climbed high up upon the mountains, where there are many expanses; and there all who looked around, or looked through, were cast thence; partly into the paths around and beneath, partly into the Hells. They continually made bindings, so that 20, 50, 100 Societies bound themselves together; one crew with this cupidity, another with another; which bindings were disclosed, and they were cast down, and this to myriads . . .

5948. Concerning the Last Judgment upon the Reformed . . . The Judgment upon the Reformed lasted long, because they had communication with the Angels of Heaven by the Word; and therefore the ordinations of them lasted long; and also because there was communication thence from them with the gentiles round about; for the light is propagated thence. (—<sup>5</sup>) The separation of the Papists from the Reformed also lasted long . . . (—<sup>6</sup>) The chief thing of all was the ordination according to the idea concerning the Divine, and according to the idea concerning the Lord . . .

5966–5969. Concerning those who were in the Former Heaven. Such as there were in the Former Heaven are still endeavouring to flee away to places where the like had been; but as those places have been given to the Angels, they cannot now force their way up so far; but are removed in the ascent, and are borne through other ways; thus gradually lower and lower; and at last to their own places where they are to be . . . (5969) Many of them were leading the thoughts of the men who were below, both when they thought within themselves, and when they were in their office. It was their delight to be as it were in them, and to make them think. But all these have been cast out . . .

6012. Concerning new Heavens, which perish. I have been told that such Heavens as those in which they are interiorly evil but exteriorly good are also being formed since the Last Judgment; but in a small form; and still by turns they are destroyed; and that afterwards they are destroyed of themselves, through the vicinity of the good Angels; for when the angelic Heavens are in the vicinity, a connection with them is no longer possible, as before; but they collapse of themselves. So does it take place hereafter. They said that those who are in these Heavens or Societies, are successively diminished . . . It was granted to see one such Heaven which had been formed by the Catholics in the western quarter towards the south, in the mid-distance, which was dissolved. It consisted of from 800 to 1000. There was a certain person with me, who . . . afterwards went to that Society, by means of which communication was made with the Society in which I am, from which they were greatly disturbed, so that they ran about hither and thither, saying that their Judgment or dispersion is now coming; and presently they also began to go out from every part of their Society, which was a city; from all sides of it. The monks told them to remain; but they replied that they wanted to remain, but could not; and that some force was driving them from within, which they could not resist; and also that the same force was separating them, and was driving some hither and some thither, thus everyone to his own place; whence that force was coming they did not know. But it was evident that it was from within; namely, that from exterior delight they wanted to remain, but from the interior, which had now been opened to them, they were being so driven, that the exterior delight could not resist it. And when they had gone away a short distance, there also came the delight of going away; because it was according to the diminution of the exterior one. It was said that these were not from the common people; but from such as in the world had done nothing except go into company, talk, and thus pass their time and the days in pleasant things and sports . . . I afterwards saw in many other places the like dissolutions of commencing Societies; so that this is continually being done . . .

6020. Concerning the purifications of Societies since the Last Judgment. Evil Societies come together in the former places, which were destroyed; because the former way extends thither; but they are afterwards collected together to some hundreds, or thousands, and are taken away into their own Hells; and this went on until those places, and those round about, were filled with good Spirits. Since then, the evil can no longer be there, because they are tortured, and thus recede. (Seven methods described by which the Societies are purified.) See also 6022, 6103.

E. 5. 'The revelation of Jesus Christ' = predictions from the Lord concerning the last times of the Church . . . for it treats of these times especially. It may be supposed that, in the Apocalypse, the successive states of the Church, from beginning to end, are treated of; but these are not treated of therein; but only the state of Heaven and the Church about the end, when is the Last Judgment . . . Concerning the successive states of the Church, however, prediction was made by the Lord Himself, in Matt. xxiv. and xxv.; and also in Mark xiii. . . (Compare E. 91.)

215. The time of the Last Judgment, when those in the Former Heaven are to be visited. Sig.

258. It has been made known above that in this prophetic Book it does not treat concerning the successive states of the Christian Church from its beginning to its end—as has heretofore been believed—but that it treats concerning the state of the Church and of Heaven in the last times, when there is a New Heaven and a new earth; that is, when there is a New Church in the Heavens and on earth; thus where there is the Judgment . . . As it treats in this Book concerning these things, therefore in the first chapter it has treated concerning the Lord who is the Judge; and, in the second and third chapters, concerning those who are of the Church, and who are not of the Church; thus concerning those who are in the Former Heaven which is to be abolished, and concerning those who are in the New one which is to be formed . . . In this fourth chapter, it now treats of the ordination of all things, chiefly in the Heavens, before the Judgment; on which account a throne was now seen in Heaven, and around it twenty-four thrones, upon which were twenty-four elders, and also four animals near the throne, which are cherubs. That by these things is described the ordination of all things before the Judgment, and for the Judgment, will be seen in the explication of this chapter. It is to be known that before any change comes forth, all things are preordained, and are prepared for the coming event; for all things are foreseen by the Lord . . . By 'the throne,' therefore, in the midst of heaven, is meant the Judgment; and by 'Him who sat upon it,' the Lord; by 'the twenty-four thrones, upon which were twenty-four elders,' are meant all truths in the complex, from which, and according to which, is the Judgment; and by 'the four animals,' which are cherubs, is meant the Divine Providence of the Lord lest the Former Heavens should suffer detriment by the coming extraordinary change; and that then all things might be done according to order; namely, that the interiorly evil might be separated from the interiorly good; and that the latter might be lifted up into Heaven, and the former cast down into Hell.

260a. 'Behold a door was opened in heaven'=the arcana of Heaven revealed . . . here, the arcana concerning those things which would come forth about [the time of] the Last Judgment; none of which have as yet been revealed, and which indeed could not be revealed until the Judgment had been accomplished; and not except through some one in the world to whom it had been granted by the Lord to see them, and to whom there had been at the same time revealed the spiritual sense of the Word. For all the things which have been written in this prophetic Book have been written concerning the Last Judgment, but by means of representatives and correspondences. 261.

264. The reason these things are signified, is that in the things which now follow it treats concerning the state of Heaven and the Church directly before the Last Judgment; and afterwards concerning the Judgment itself . . . That the Last Judgment comes forth when it is the end of the Church. Refs.

267. 'Behold a throne set in Heaven, and upon the throne One sitting'=the Lord as to the Last Judgment. Ex.

269. The reason the appearance (of the Divine truth) was 'like an emerald,' was that it indicated the Last Judgment; for the colour of this stone is green; and green signifies truth obscured. . . It was the Heaven which is called 'the Former Heaven,' upon which was the Judgment, and which was about to perish . . . which was obscured.

270. 'And around the throne were four and twenty thrones, and upon the thrones I saw four and twenty elders sitting'=all truths from good in the higher Heavens ordained by the Lord before the Judgment.

277<sup>9</sup>. As, in this chapter, it treats concerning the ordination of all things for the Judgment, therefore it also here treats of the cherubs, that is, concerning the guard and Providence of the Lord lest the higher Heavens should be approached except through the good of love and of charity; for, unless this had been done before the Judgment, the veriest Heavens, in which are true Angels, would have been endangered; for the reason that those Heavens which were about to perish . . . had not been in the good of love and of charity, but only in some truths. For there were there from the Christian world those who had been in the doctrine concerning faith alone, which some had confirmed by some passages from the Word, and had thereby obtained some conjunction with the Ultimate Heaven; but this conjunction was disrupted, when that Heaven, which is called 'the Former Heaven,' was dissipated; and ordination was then made by the Lord to prevent anyone from being hereafter conjoined with the Heavens, except him who is in the good of love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour. This, in special, is what is meant by the things which now follow in this chapter. He, therefore, who believes that the Heavens can hereafter be approached through worship and through prayers by those who are in faith alone, and not at the same time in the good of charity, is much mistaken. Their worship is no longer received, nor are their prayers heard; but attention is paid only to their life's love; and therefore if there reigns the love of self and of the world, no matter in whatever way they may be in external worship, they are conjoined with the Hells, and are also borne thither after death; and not previously to any Heaven which is to perish, as has hitherto been done.

369. For it treats in (Rev. vi. and vii.) concerning the state of the Christian Church . . . from beginning to end; or from the Lord's time up to the Last Judgment . . . Predictions concerning these successive states of the Church are here manifested as if from the Book . . .

375<sup>6</sup>. The reason the internal sense of the Word has (now) been opened, is that the Last Judgment has been accomplished; and thus all things in the Heavens and in the Hells have been reduced into order . . . 376<sup>8</sup>.

391. By 'the souls under the altar,' are meant those who were reserved under Heaven up to the Last Judgment . . . I will say how the case is with this . . . The Former Heaven which passed away . . . consisted of those who had been in external worship without internal, and who had thence lived an external moral life although they were merely natural . . . Those who before the Last Judgment constituted this Heaven, were seen upon the earth, and also upon the mountains, hills, and rocks, in the Spiritual World; and they had thence believed themselves to be in Heaven. But those who had constituted this Heaven . . . were cast down ; and, when they had been cast down, then there were elevated and translated into the same places—that is, upon the mountains, hills, and rocks, where the former ones had been—all those who had been reserved by the Lord, and had been hidden away here and there ; most in the Lower Earth ; and from these there was formed a New Heaven. Those who were reserved, and were then elevated, had been from those in the world who had lived a life of charity, and who had been in the spiritual affection of truth. The elevation of these into the places of the former has often been seen by me. These are they who are meant by ‘the souls of the slain seen under the altar’ . . .

[E.] 392<sup>2</sup>. Hence it came to pass that all those who had been spiritual ; that is, who had been not only exteriorly, but also interiorly good ; could not be together with those (who belonged to the Former Heaven) ; but they had seceded from them, either of their own accord, or had been put to flight ; and when found had suffered persecutions ; and therefore they had been concealed by the Lord ; and had been reserved in their own places to the day of Judgment, in order that they might constitute a New Heaven. These, therefore, are those who are meant by ‘the souls of the slain seen under the altar’ . . . For they had been held in hatred by the rest, on account of Divine truth, and on account of the confession of the Lord . . .

— In the Apocalypse, it treats principally concerning such things as there were to be in the Spiritual World before the Last Judgment, and also during it, and after it.

394<sup>3</sup>. From these things the reason may be seen, why those who had professed the Lord, and had led a life of charity, had been taken out by the Lord from the violence of such, and had been kept concealed in the Lower Earth, and had been reserved there up to the Judgment. But after the Judgment those who had dwelt upon the earth, upon the mountains, hills, and rocks there ; who had been . . . interiorly evil, were cast out ; and those who had been kept concealed under the earth, or under Heaven, were elevated, and were allotted an inheritance in the places whence the former ones had been cast out.

397. As those who were then on high (in the Former Heaven) could not endure the presence of those who were interiorly good, they cast them out . . . and therefore they were taken away by the Lord from their violence, and were kept in concealment beneath Heaven . . . ; and this was done from the time when the Lord was in the world up to this time ; when the Judgment has been effected ; and then those who were upon the high places were cast down . . . The reason the evil were tolerated so long upon the high places ; and the good were kept so long beneath Heaven ; was that the latter and the former might be filled up, that is, that the good might be sufficiently numerous for a New Heaven to be formed from them ; and also that the evil might of themselves fall down to Hell ; for the Lord never casts anyone into Hell, but the evil itself which is with evil Spirits casts them down. Sig.

—<sup>3</sup>. When the state of the Church (is such that there is no longer any truth because no good) then comes the Last Judgment. The reason the Last Judgment then comes, is also because the human race is the basis or foundation of the angelic Heaven . . . and when the basis does not correspond, the angelic Heaven wavers . . .

400<sup>2</sup>. (The scenery of the Last Judgment described and explained.)

401<sup>10</sup>. It is to be known that when the Last Judgment is being executed, the Lord appears in the Heavens in much greater shining and resplendence than at other times ; and this for the reason that the Angels must then be more strongly protected ; for the lower [parts] with which the exteriors of the Angels have communication, are then in perturbation. Hence, too, it is, that as it is here treating of the Last Judgment, it is said that ‘the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun ; and that the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days ;’ and for the same reason it is said that ‘there shall then be streams of waters upon every high mountain, and upon every lofty hill,’ by which [is meant] abounding intelligence with those who are on the higher mountains and on the higher hills ; for it is the lower mountains and hills upon which is then the Judgment.

403<sup>3</sup>. These things (in Is. xxxiv. 4) are said concerning the day of the Last Judgment . . . for the Last Judgment foretold by the prophets of the Old Testament was executed by the Lord when He was in the world. And as like things were then done to those which were done in the Last Judgment which is foretold in the Apocalypse, and which has been executed by the Lord at this day, therefore almost the like things are said here . . .

—<sup>15</sup>. It there (Luke xxi. 28–31) treats concerning the consummation of the age, which is the Last Judgment ; and there are enumerated the signs which precede . . . That a New Church will then commence, which in the beginning will be external, is signified by, ‘Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees, when they shall put forth’ . . . ‘A fig-tree’=the External Church ; and ‘trees’=the Knowledge of truth and good. ‘The Kingdom of God,’ which is then ‘near,’=the Lord’s New Church ; for at the time of the Last Judgment the Old Church perishes, and the New one commences.

404<sup>2</sup>. That this is so, is manifestly evident from the appearances in the Spiritual World when the Last Judgment has been effected ; for there have then sometimes appeared mountains and hills rolled together as the roll of a book is rolled together ; and then those who were upon them were rolled down into Hell ; which appearance is caused by the fact that the interiors of their minds, through which something of the light of Heaven had previously inflowed, had been closed up . . .

405<sup>23</sup>. These things (in Zech. xiv. 3–5) are said concerning the Last Judgment executed by the Lord when He was in the world. For, when He was in the world, the Lord reduced into order all things in the Heavens and in the Hells ; and therefore He then effected a Judgment upon the evil and upon the good. This Judgment is what is meant in the Word of the Old Testament by 'the day of indignation,' 'of anger,' 'of wrath,' 'of the vengeance of Jehovah,' and by 'the year of retributions' . . . That it treats in this chapter concerning the Advent of the Lord, and concerning the Judgment then, is evident from these words there: 'Then Jehovah my God shall come; all the saints with Thee; and there shall be in that day no light, resplendence, and sparkling; and it shall be one day which shall be known to Jehovah; not day, nor night; because about the time of the evening it shall be light' (ver.5-7). 'The time of the evening' = the last time of the Church, when is the Judgment; there is then evening for the evil, but light for the good. . . By 'Jehovah shall go forth, and fight against the nations' (ver.3) is signified the Last Judgment upon the evil. Further Ex.

411. 'They said to the mountains and rocks, Fall upon us' = the covering over by evils, and by the derivative falsities. . . These things are illustrated by such things as come forth in the Spiritual World when there is a Last Judgment; for these things are said concerning the Last Judgment; as is evident from the following verse, where it is said: 'Because the great day of His anger is come, and who is able to stand?' By which 'day,' is meant the time and state of the Last Judgment. The state of the impious is then such, that they cast themselves down from the mountains and rocks—upon which they had made their dwelling-places—deep down into the Hells, according to the atrociousness of the evils and falsities with them; and this they do themselves; because they cannot endure the Divine good, and the Divine truth. For the higher Heavens are then opened; from which inflows the light of Heaven, which is Divine truth united to Divine good; by this light the simulated goods and truths with them are constricted, (and then) their evils and falsities are opened; and as these cannot endure the light of Heaven—for they are tortured by it—they cast themselves from the mountains and rocks deeply into the Hells, according to the quality of their evil and falsity; some into chasms and caves; some into holes and rocks; which then stand open before them; and after they have cast themselves in, the openings are closed. . . When they are in the caves and rocks, their tortures cease; for there is rest for them in their evils and derivative falsities, because these had been delightful to them. . . Hence may be evident what is signified by their saying to the mountains and rocks that they should fall upon them. (So) in Hos.x.8; Luke xxiii.30, where also it treats of the Last Judgment . . .

413. 'Because the great day of His anger is come' = the Last Judgment upon the evil . . . The Last Judgment which is signified by 'the great day,' is [that] upon the evil; and also upon the good. The Judgment upon the evil is called 'the day of indignation,' 'of wrath,' 'of anger,' and 'of vengeance;' whereas the Judgment upon the good is called 'the time of the Advent of the Lord,' 'the year of well-pleasing,' 'the year of the redeemed,' 'the year of salvation.' Everyone, both evil and good, is judged immediately after death . . . But still many of them, both evil and good, are reserved to the Last Judgment; but only those evil who could act a moral life in externals, from habit in the world; and those good who had imbued falsities, from ignorance, and from religion. But the rest, after some time had passed, had been separated from them; the good had been elevated into Heaven; and the evil had been cast into Hell; and this before the Last Judgment.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason the Last Judgment is called 'the great day of the anger of God,' is that it appears to the evil who are being cast into Hell as if God does this from anger and wrath; because their destruction then comes from above, and also from the east, where is the Lord as a Sun; and because they are then in terrors, pains, and also torments. But still there is no anger whatever in the Lord . . . but that appearance is from this:—When it is the last state; which is when evils on earth, and at the same time in the Spiritual World, are so augmented, that the dominion hangs on their side; and thereby the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell is perishing—on the perishing of which, the Heavens where the Angels are begin to labour—then the Lord intensifies His virtue from the Sun; that is, He intensifies His love to protect the Angels; and to restore the state which is labouring, and which is beginning to be weakened; by which virtue and power, the Divine truth united to Divine good, which in its essence is the Divine love, penetrates through the Heavens to the lower [parts], where the evil have consociated themselves; and as they cannot endure such an influx and presence of the Divine love, they begin to tremble, to be in anguish, and to be tortured; for thereby are dissipated the goods and truths which they had learned to counterfeit in their speech and actions . . . and their internals are opened, which are nothing but evils and falsities; and as these are diametrically opposite to the goods and truths which are inflowing from within—and yet evils and falsities have made their life—they feel such trembling, anguish, and torture, that they can no longer withstand it; and therefore they flee away, and cast themselves into the Hells which are beneath the mountains and rocks; where they can be in their evils, and falsities of evil.

—<sup>4</sup>. Some passages shall be adduced where the Last Judgment is called 'the day of the indignation,' 'of the anger,' 'of the wrath,' and 'of the vengeance,' 'of Jehovah,' and 'of God.' III.

—<sup>6</sup>. It treats (in Is.lxiii.4,6) concerning the Lord's combats, by which He subjugated the Hells; thus concerning the Last Judgment which was effected by Him when He was in the world; for, by means of combats—which were temptations admitted into Himself—He subjugated them, and effected the Last Judgment. It is this Judgment which is meant by 'the day of the anger and of the wrath of Jehovah,' in the Word of the Old Testament. But the Last Judgment which has been executed by the Lord at this day, is meant by 'the day of His anger,' in the Apocalypse . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Besides, the time of the Last Judgment is called, in other places, 'the day of Jehovah,' 'the day of visitation,' 'the day of slaughter,' and 'the day of the Advent' . . .

416. 'After these things I saw' = new perception concerning the state of Heaven before the Last Judgment; as is evident from the things which follow in this chapter (Rev.vii.), in which it treats of the separation of the good from the evil. For before the Last Judgment arrives, the good are separated by the Lord from the evil; and are withdrawn.

[E.] 418. (Spiritual light and heat) flow forth from the Lord as a Sun . . . sometimes more slackly, and sometimes more intensely; when more slackly, the good are separated from the evil; but when more intensely, the evil are rejected; and therefore when the Last Judgment is at hand, the Lord at first inflows slackly, in order that the good may be separated from the evil; and as, in this chapter, it treats of this separation, mention is first made of the withholding of the four winds of the earth, by which is signified the slackening of the influx of Divine good and Divine truth from the Lord . . . 419, Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. (In Matt.xxiv.) there are foretold by the Lord all the successive states of the Church, even to its end, when is the Last Judgment . . .

426<sup>3</sup>. That (the good and the evil) cannot be separated before the time of the Last Judgment, on account of the above-mentioned conjunction, is meant by the answer given to the servants who wanted to gather up the tares before [the harvest]: . . . 'The harvest' = the Last Judgment . . . for it is said 'the harvest is the consummation of the age,' and the consummation of the age is the time of the Last Judgment . . . From these things it may be evident that the plenary separation of the good from the evil takes place at the time of the Last Judgment . . . and that otherwise the good would perish with the evil; for it is said, 'Lest haply gathering up the tares, ye at the same time root up the wheat with them' . . . How the separation itself is effected, shall also be told in a few words. When the good are being separated from the evil—which is effected by the Lord by means of His slackened Divine influx, and by inspection into those things which are of spiritual affection with Angels and Spirits—the Lord then causes that those who are interiorly and thence also exteriorly good, should turn themselves to Him; and should thus turn themselves away from the evil; and when they turn themselves away, they become invisible to the evil . . . (and then) the evil have been separated; and, at the same time, they have also been separated from the holiness which they had counterfeited in externals; and thus they look towards Hell; into which they are also presently cast.

427. 'Until we have sealed the servants of our God upon their forehead' = that those who are in truths from good are first to be separated.

430<sup>7</sup>. It is, besides, to be known, that by 'the 144,000' are meant those who had been taken up into Heaven before the Last Judgment; whereas by those who follow, from verse 9 to the end of this chapter, are meant those who had been reserved by the Lord to the Last Judgment; and who then, for the first time, were taken up into Heaven . . . For those who had been in truths from good had all been received into Heaven before the Judgment; whereas those who had been in good, and not as yet so much in truths, had been reserved; and meanwhile had been instructed and prepared for Heaven . . . Those who had been taken up into Heaven before the Judgment, are also meant by those treated of in Rev.xiv.1,3,4 . . . The same are also meant by 'those who are of the first resurrection;' and the rest are those who are of the second resurrection (Rev.xx.4-6).

486. 'When he had opened the seventh seal' = prediction concerning the last state of the Church. . . The last state of the Church is when there is no truth because no good . . . That which was done in this state is foretold in the things which now follow. That which was done . . . was done in the Spiritual World before the Judgment; for there was then a like state of the Church in the Spiritual World to that which there was in the natural world; but under a different appearance—specie . . . When it was the last state of the Church in the Spiritual World, then all these things which are predicted in the following [verses] were accomplished some of which are to be related . . . because they were seen.

489a<sup>2</sup>. That all the changes of state, and the separations of the evil from the good, and the reverse, which came forth before the Judgment, and during the Judgment, were effected by means of an interior influx of Divine good and truth, more intense and more slack out of Heaven from the Lord, has been . . . 'shown above' . . . This is [here] signified by the Angel filling the censer with the fire of the altar, and casting it into the earth; and afterwards, by the Angels sounding. A this was effected by the Lord through the Heavens; therefore the Lord first conjoined the Heavens with Himself more interiorly and closely; for otherwise danger would have threatened the Heavens also; and therefore this is signified by the seven Angels standing before God . . . And when they are more interiorly and closely conjoined with Him, then those are separate with whom there is not any spiritual good. Ex.

493<sup>2</sup>. That by these words (Rev.viii.3) is signified the conjunction of the Heavens with those who were to be separated from the evil and saved, may be evident from the series of things . . . for it treats in this chapter, and in the following ones, concerning the last state of the Church . . . when the Judgment is at hand; and, before this state is described, it treats of the separation of those who were to be saved; all of whom are meant those sealed upon their foreheads, and by those clothed in white robes . . . As these were then together in Societies with those who were to be damned, therefore in this chapter, is described the means by which they were separated and saved; namely, that the higher Heavens were first closely conjoined with the Lord through Divine influx into celestial good, and through it into spiritual good; and then by these goods conjoined into one in the lower [parts], where those who were to be saved, and those who were to be damned were together in Societies. This influx of the Lord of the higher Heavens, was received by those who had lived in good in the world; for this good was within them; and therefore by it they were conjoined with the higher Heavens; and were thus separated from the evil who could not receive the influx, because they had not lived in good, but in evil, when they were in the world. I

497. '[The Angel] cast the censer filled with the fire of the altar into the earth'=the influx of the Divine love out of the Heavens into the lower [parts,] where were those who were to be separated and removed. For below, upon the earths there, there were Societies in which the good and the evil were together; and who were to be separated from each other before the Last Judgment could take place; for from the time of the Lord, up to the time of the Last Judgment, all had been tolerated who could live an external moral life... And as, in the same Societies, or in the Former Heaven, there were also the simple good; some together with those who were there; and some elsewhere, but conjoined with them by a pious and holy external; and yet the good were to be separated from the evil before the Judgment; in order that the former might be elevated into Heaven, and the evil be cast into Hell; and as the separation was effected by means of an influx of Divine good and truth out of the Heavens into the lower [parts], where they all were—hence it may be evident that by 'he cast [into the earth] the censer filled with the fire of the altar,' is signified that influx into the lower [parts].

503<sup>3</sup>. Like things are signified by the plagues of Egypt as by the plagues in the Apocalypse which took place when the seven Angels sounded; for by the Egyptians were signified merely natural men; by the sons of Israel, spiritual men; by the plagues of Egypt, those changes which precede the Last Judgment; in like manner as here in the Apocalypse; for by the immersion of Pharaoh and the Egyptians in the sea Suph, was represented the Last Judgment and damnation.

566<sup>e</sup>. For the end itself—which is when the Last Judgment is at hand—is described by the sounding of the seventh Angel.

600<sup>3</sup>. 'The sheep'=those who are in the good of charity towards the neighbour, and thence in faith; and 'the he-goats'=those who are in faith separated from charity; thus [the two]=all upon whom the Judgment would come in the last time of the Church. For all who had been in the good of love to the Lord, and thence in the good of charity and of faith, had been taken up into Heaven before the Last Judgment; and all who had been in no good of charity and the derivative faith; thus all who had been interiorly and at the same time exteriorly evil; had been cast into Hell before the Last Judgment. But those who had been interiorly good, and not equally exteriorly so; and those who had been interiorly evil, but exteriorly in good—all these had been left to the Last Judgment; and then those who had been interiorly good were taken up into Heaven; and those who had been interiorly evil were cast into Hell.

624<sup>2</sup>. The reason the Word is still to be taught, although its interior truths are undelightful; and the reason the Last Judgment does not come until there is the consummation; that is, when there is no longer any good and truth left with the men of the Church, is this: ... There are two kinds of men upon whom the Judgment is effected; one kind consists of the upright; the other of the non-upright. The upright are the Angels in the Ultimate Heaven, of whom most are simple...

but the non-upright are those who had lived as Christians exteriorly; but interiorly had admitted into the thought and will evils of every kind... These, when they come into the other life, are for the most part consociated with the upright—that is, with the simple good who are in the Ultimate Heaven—for the exteriors consociate them... These, namely, the non-upright, are to be separated from the former... before the Last Judgment comes; and also after it; and they can only be separated successively. This is the reason why, before the Last Judgment, the Word is still to be taught, although... as to its interiors, it is undelightful; and which, being undelightful, they do not receive; but only such things from the sense of the letter of the Word as favour their loves and the principles thence apprehended; on account of which the Word as to the sense of the letter is delightful to them. By these things, therefore, the upright are separated from the non-upright.

—<sup>3</sup>. That, on account of this reason, the time is protracted, after the Last Judgment, before the New Church is fully instantiated, is an arcanum from Heaven which at this day cannot fall into the understanding, except with a few; and yet this is what the Lord teaches in Matt. xiii. 27-30; 37-42. 'The consummation of the age'=the last time of the Church; and, that before this, the upright are not to be separated from the non-upright, because they are consociated by exteriors, is meant by 'not gathering the tares lest at the same time ye root up the wheat with them.'

—<sup>20</sup>. For... the Advent of the Lord, and, with Him, the Last Judgment, are not at hand until there is no longer any truth of doctrine and good of life remaining in the Church; and this for the reason... that the upright may be separated from the non-upright.

—'. 'To bring in the justice of the ages'=the Last Judgment, when it is recompensed to everyone according to his deeds.

627<sup>2</sup>. Then came the destruction of (the Sodomites); by which is meant their Last Judgment.

633<sup>4</sup>. By 'the Flood' is signified... the Last Judgment upon those who had been of the Most Ancient Church.

674<sup>2</sup>. For the things which are said in this verse (Rev. xi. 13), take place, and also did take place, when the Last Judgment was at hand; but in the Spiritual World...

—<sup>4</sup>. The Societies upon which the Last Judgment came forth consisted of both the good and the evil; but of such evil as had been interiorly against the goods of love and the truths of doctrine, but not exteriorly... When, therefore, the good were separated from those who had appeared good solely in the external form, then the external good vanished, and the internal evil appeared; for they were being kept in that external good by communication with those who were within the same Society who were not only exteriorly but also interiorly good... These things, therefore, are what are meant in special by 'the two witnesses ascending... into Heaven in a cloud, and their enemies seeing them;' and... that 'in that hour there was a great earthquake'...

676<sup>3</sup>. In the end of the Church, when the Last Judgment is at hand, those who are spiritually good are taken away from those who are only naturally so; and (then) from the latter are also taken away all truths of good, and consequently all understanding of truth . . .

687. The higher Heavens in light and power from the Lord to separate the evil from the good before the day of the Last Judgment shortly to come. Sig. and Ex.

693<sup>3</sup>. Because, in the end of the Church, a little before the Last Judgment . . . the state of those who are in the Former Heaven and the former earth is changed; which is effected by the separation of the good from the evil. Ex.

699. Because in this chapter it has treated of the changes of state which precede the Last Judgment; namely, concerning the separation of the evil from the good; and concerning the removal of the former from the places where they had previously been. When this is done, there then appears to those who are in the higher Heavens a new Heaven and a New Church. Sig. and Ex.

702<sup>4</sup>. For it here treats concerning the state of Heaven such as it would be proximately before the Last Judgment.

710<sup>7</sup>. For man is kept in the midst between Heaven and Hell; and, before the Last Judgment, that which rises up from Hell prevails over that which descends from Heaven.

727<sup>18</sup>. The time of the Last Judgment. Tr.

754<sup>3</sup>. Because, after the Last Judgment, the state of the Spiritual World has been completely changed . . . For now everyone is borne (to Heaven or Hell) according to his life.

806<sup>3</sup>. In order that the destroyed equilibrium might be restored, it pleased the Lord to come into the world, and to effect a Last Judgment . . .

817<sup>e</sup>. When the Last Judgment had been effected upon those who had been of the Christian Church, all those who had been in faith separated from charity . . . were cast into Hell; and all those who had been in faith from charity were preserved.

849. Manifestation concerning the future separation of the good from the evil before the Last Judgment. Sig. and Ex.

— In (Matt.xxiv.) also it treats concerning the Last Judgment . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The future separation of the good from the evil at the time of the Last Judgment, is foretold by the Lord in (Matt.xiii.).

850<sup>3</sup>. The Last Judgment by Him [when in the world]. Sig.

—<sup>9</sup>. As the Lord came into the world in order to effect a Judgment, and thereby to reduce into order all things in the Heavens and in the Hells; and as the Judgment is effected by means of Divine truth . . . the Lord assumed the Human; and, so long as He was in the world, made it Divine truth . . .

859. For it treats in (Rev.xiv.) concerning the separation of the good from the evil before the Last Judgment; and therefore the good, who were separated from the evil, are meant by 'the 144,000 sealed from all the tribes.'

878<sup>e</sup>. By this latter [Angel] manifestation is made concerning the Last Judgment now at hand.

879. Finally, (in what follows, it treats) concerning the Last Judgment.

880. That at the time of the Last Judgment (the Babylonians) are to be completely destroyed. Sig.

907. This separation (of the good from the evil) precedes the Last Judgment.

911<sup>e</sup>. The Angels will have such a state (of celestial loves and their joys) after the Last Judgment . . .

912<sup>2</sup>. That the separation of the good and the evil, when the Last Judgment was at hand, was thus effected. Sig. and Ex.

926. Revelation from the Lord concerning the state of the Church proximately before the Last Judgment. Sig. and Ex.

957. There is [here] meant the time before the Last Judgment was effected . . . [for] before that time the Word was in obscurity before the understanding. Sig.

985. No fear in regard to the Last Judgment by the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

1013. Manifestation out of Heaven from the Lord that a consummation has been made, and thus that the Last Judgment is at hand. Sig. and Ex.

— This was said after the seventh Angel had poured out his vial into the air; by which is signified that all things of man's thought are averted from Heaven, whence there is no longer any communication of the men of the Church with Heaven; and, when this communication is broken, then comes the Last Judgment; for all things are held together in connection so long as there is a communication of Heaven with the Church; but when the communication perishes, it is like a house which falls when the foundation is taken from under it . . .

1087<sup>4</sup>. Therefore it pleased the Lord to take on the Human, and to become Divine truth . . . and thus from Himself, to reduce into order all things of Heaven, and all things of Hell; that is, to effect a Last Judgment . . .

1091. After the Last Judgment had been effected upon those who are meant by 'the harlot.' Sig.

1093. For when the Last Judgment had been effected upon those who are meant by . . . 'Babylon,' the darkness was removed which had been interposed between Heaven and earth. 1094.

1094. This was the reason why the spiritual sense of the Word was not revealed, and the state of Heaven and Hell manifested, until after the Last Judgment had been executed. For if [they had been done] before, Divine truth would not have had power and light.

1096. Joy of heart . . . because after the Last Judgment had been effected upon those who are meant by . . . 'Babylon,' Divine truth has power and light. 1097.

1098. Where they are after the Last Judgment. Sig.

1107. Since the Last Judgment was executed upon

(the Babylonians), they have been severely forbidden to send any [emissaries] into the Societies where the Reformed are, or to the Gentiles . . . As it here treats concerning their state after the Last Judgment, especially concerning their state in the Spiritual World, therefore the things said here . . . are to be understood as said principally for [the Babylon there].

1124. By the last state . . . is signified the state when there is no longer any good and truth left with them; and, as they are then completely destroyed as to the spiritual life, destruction, that is, the Last Judgment, comes upon them. The reason . . . is, that then there is no longer any connection or conjunction of Heaven with them; and when there is no connection or conjunction, separation takes place; and separation is the Last Judgment; and when this takes place, the evil are cast into Hell; and the good, having been drawn out from them, are elevated into Heaven; for as soon as the connection of Heaven with anyone is dissolved, he at once falls into Hell . . .

1127. 'Because strong is the Lord God who judgeth them' (Rev. xviii.8)=by the Last Judgment . . . upon them . . .

1179. For, before the Last Judgment—or before the Babylonians were cast into Hell, and the World of Spirits was thereby delivered from them—the light from which the Angels derive their wisdom and intelligence was intercepted. The reason that light was intercepted . . . was on account of the conjunction of the Babylonians with the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven.

1217. 'The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth'=that His Kingdom is on earth as in the Heavens; by which is meant that after the good had been separated from the evil, and the evil had been cast into Hell, then all the good came into a better state for receiving truth and good from the Lord; in which state they had not been before; for if they had received goods and truths so long as they were in connection with the evil, they would have contaminated and perverted them. This, also, is the reason why interior truths were not revealed on earth until after that separation had been effected by means of the Last Judgment. This, also, is meant by: 'Thy Kingdom come on earth, as in the Heavens' . . . The Lord's Kingdom was before the Last Judgment also . . . but the state of the Lord's Kingdom after the Last Judgment has been made different from what it was before it; for the reception of Divine truth and good after it, is more universal, interior, easy, and distinct.

De Dom. 22. That the Lord effected a Judgment when He was in the world . . .

Ath. 49. The Last Judgment which is described by 'the Flood,' was effected from the Divine which was left in the human race; thus the Divine effected it from its own therein; and thus also from primes through ultimates. The ultimate then was in the human race which was left.

92. If the Lord had not now effected a Judgment—which is His Advent—no one in the Church could have any longer been saved; because all are in falsities . . .

J. (Post.) Title. Concerning the Last Judgment.

2. When the Last Judgment was going on, the Protestants were brought into the middle, and then appeared in the following order:—the English in the middle; the Dutch towards the east and south; the Germans more towards the north; the Swedes at the north and west, in the middle. All then appeared according to their general genius as to the reception of good and truth. . . It was perceived that many from the English had received the Heavenly Doctrine, and are thereby coming into the New Jerusalem; because they are such as to receive the truths of faith more easily than the rest; and they see them in interior light.

18. On the day of the Last Judgment, there were cast out of their cities, villages, and lands, the Dutch who had done nothing of good from any religion . . . but only for the sake of reputation . . . This casting out was seen on the 9th day of January, 1757. (See above, D. 5366.)

102. The Pope who was in the year 1738 . . . when the Last Judgment was going on dwelt . . .

105. [Immediately after the date 13th. Dec. 1759, occurs the following.] Since the Last Judgment, the Babylonians are collected upon the mountains in the west for a long time, as before . . . where part have made for themselves as it were new Heavens. But as soon as there has been computed [np] to about two hundred there, they are cast down into the Hells, as before; and this is done until all things have been reduced into such an order that no one after death can go anywhere except into his own Hell . . . and this is done when those places are occupied by Societies where they are in the acknowledgment and adoration of the Lord. (See also the following numbers.)

126. About [the time of] the Last Judgment, the Christians appeared in the middle there, ordained at a distance on the right at the circumferences, and also at the quarters, according to the light of truth from the love of good. Around that middle were seen the Mohammedans; in like manner at all the quarters; near the Christians; according to the light of truth from good. Outside this compass were seen the Gentiles, ordained according to their religiosity, and according to the life therefrom. With all of them there are the like lands, distributed into mountains, hills, rocks, and valleys; and over them there are expanses, in which are the best of them, who had received from the Angels truths of doctrine concerning the Lord, and concerning life. Outside of them there appeared as it were a sea, which was the boundary. All these compasses, taken together, are not extended into a plane, but into a globe, like the earth . . .

127. (Concerning the Last Judgment upon the Gentiles.)

134-179. Concerning the Last Judgment upon the Protestants or Reformed. Before the Last Judgment, which was general, less general Judgments preceded, which may be called preparatory ones, by which those who were evil more exteriorly were cast into Hell. It is to be known, that between the Judgment effected by the Lord when He was in the world, and the Judgment effected now, the Spirits who had lived an exteriorly moral life, and who then confessed God with the mouth; but not interiorly, or with the heart, had ascended upon mountains and hills, and had made for themselves there as it were Heavens . . . so that the World of Spirits . . . had been filled up with such Heavens; and thereby the communication of the Lord and Heaven with the human race had been intercepted; which also was the reason why the spiritual things of the Word and of doctrine thence were not disclosed until after the Last Judgment; for thereby the World of Spirits was purified, and the communication with man was opened. If [it had been done] before, the spiritual things of the Word and of doctrine thence would not have been received, nor understood; and if they had been received and understood, still Hell, which then prevailed, would have snatched those things away from their hearts, and would have profaned them. . . (135) Before the Last Judgment, I often saw Societies cleansed and also destroyed which had made for themselves a semblance of the Heavens. There was one rock upon which was a rather large city, where were those who were in faith separated from charity . . . They were in the desire of commanding; and therefore they stood at the sides of the rock, and in various ways were infesting those who were below. When visitation was made, and all there were found to be such, I saw that that rock subsided into the deep, together with the hill and the inhabitants. The like was done elsewhere; but before this is done, the good are separated from the evil; and the evil are in the middle; and then the middle subsides; and the circuit remains—in the circuit are those who are in the good of faith; that is, who are in charity. (136) All who have not denied God with the mouth, although [they have done so] at heart; and who [have led] a moral life on account of the civil laws, and also on account of reputation and the consequent honours and gains—when they come into the other life, betake themselves into Societies, where there are cities; and there, as in the world, they live morally well, from fear of a penalty, and of the loss of honour and gain. But, when externals are taken away from them, and they are let into internals, they rush into nefarious things. But, when the wicked increase in number, then the Society is perverted; and therefore Angels are sent thither, who explore the state, and who separate the good from the evil; and the good are either sent to the sides, or are taken out. Then that city subsides, together with the evil, into Hell; deeply according to their wickedness. I once saw that four Angels were sent to such a city; who, when they came thither, entered a house; but the infamous ones there, being excited by their presence into interior wickedness . . . ran to the house where the Angels were, crying to them to come out and scortate, wanting to force them to it . . . In a word, it was done like as it was done in Sodom; and that city was completely destroyed, and its inhabitants were cast into the Hells. . . (137) I also saw a rock upon which there was such a city torn up from its place, and translated into another place at a considerable distance, which appeared like the translation of a cloud; and, when it came to that place, I saw that it subsided, because their Hell was there. The inhabitants had previously been driven into stupor. (138) Most who are in faith separated from charity betake themselves into a rock; and those who are in the love of self, into mountains, which are higher than the rocks . . . and when, before the Last Judgment, the evil had been so congregated upon rocks and upon mountains, then suddenly there were first felt concussions and earthquakes—by which are meant perversions of the state as to the Church—and afterwards there follows an overturn, which is effected either by subsidences, or by translations, or by castings out, and thus thrustings down into Hell. With the mountains and hills upon which are Angels, the wisest are in the middle, and the less wise are at the circumferences; but with those upon which are the evil, the worst are in the middle, and the better ones are at the circumferences. The subsidence in the middle appears like a vortical gyration; but in a spiral. (139) There was a plain a little more elevated than a valley, where there was congregated a multitude of Spirits who had learned to work evils by cunning, and to present themselves invisible behind others, and thus to compel others to think and to speak what they want [them to do], even evils and falsities. They had derived these things from the fact that they had been in the insane love of reigning over others. As it was then found that their wickedness was consummated, their destruction came. That whole plain was overturned; and then the earth was opened elsewhere, and there rose up good Spirits who had been kept concealed by the Lord in the Lower [Earth]; and who had been guarded lest they should be infested by the evil; and they succeeded in their place, and came, in full number, into possession of their land. Such things were represented by the sons of Israel, to whom Canaan was given, after the wickedness of the nations had been consummated. (140) After many destructions and quasi Judgments had been executed, which were premonitory of the general destruction and Judgment; and [after] cohorts of Spirits who had been impure, had been cast down into pools, lakes, and gulfs; that is, into the Hells; there then came some who were skilled in the art of insuflating and exciting others to evils of the interior thought. These excited lower minds against the Lord, and against the Divine truth from Him; by means of whom the multitude began to ferment as it were in the whole mass. The tumult advanced from thence on every side; as when a rebellion is made by a few, and nevertheless it excites the crowd. There, on many rocks and mountains, up to their peaks, and thence on the sides down to the roots, I saw the disturbance widely extended. Their mind was to destroy those who were acknowledging and worshipping the Lord, and who were in Divine truths from Him. When it was observed that the contagion had grown so widely, then there was the Advent of the Lord, to a general Judgment. This Advent was the influx of the Lord through the Heavens into them, which appeared like a cloudy sphere carried round upon those mountains and upon those rocks; and it carried away the inhabitants there; not by casting them down, but by carrying them away. That Divine sphere entered into their interiors; and it opened them, so that there became evident what was concealed in their will, and hidden in their heart; and it snatched them away, and drew them down into the Hells, according to the evils of life. That Divine sphere was seen to be carried round in gyres, returning several times; and it also drew them out from the places where they had concealed themselves. This was done with some myriads, within the time of an hour. (Then) the heads of the mountains receded; and the mountains themselves subsided down to the plain, and there was seen a solitude. Such things are meant in the Apocalypse by 'the Former Heaven and the former earth' which John saw pass away . . . Those who were thus . . . cast down are those who are meant in the Apocalypse by 'the dragon' and his 'two beasts' (Rev.xii.xiii.); and by 'the false prophet' who were cast into the lake of sulphur and fire (Rev.xix.20; xx.10). (141) The Judgment upon the Protestants or Reformed was thus effected. They who had led a life of charity . . . had been carried up into Heaven long before the universal Judgment; and all who at heart had denied Heaven, and had led an evil life, had all, by turns, as they had come from the world, been cast into Hell. The Judgment was effected upon those only who had professed religion, and had acted as if from religion, but only hypocritically . . . These were they who made for themselves Heavens . . . for their exteriors communicated with the Ultimate Heaven, and their interiors with the Hells . . . The Angels of the Ultimate Heaven were first separated from them, and the communication was broken; as . . . with seeds in fruits, when they have ripened . . . in that the seeds separate themselves from the flesh of the fruit, as it were of their own accord . . . (142) All the Protestants or Reformed, concerning whom there was still any hope, were collected in the middle; where they were all ordained according to their kingdoms in the world . . . But above, and also around them, were those who had read the Word, had frequented temples; but still had made nothing of the evils of life, loving themselves and the world above all things. There was a vast multitude there. Round about the Middle, where were the Christians who had been in the good of faith and of charity, there were black caverns, tending obliquely into the Hells, which occupied a wide space below; where there were Hells beneath Hells. There were such chasms and gulfs on every side around that middle —on the eastern, western, southern, and northern sides; and also beneath the compass which the Papists had made around the Reformed. All the interiorly evil were disposed around the Christian middle; and they were brought into those gulfs from every quarter, and were cast in thither. Thus, into the eastern gulf, [were cast] those who were collected from the east, who had been in the love of self, especially in the love of reigning; nor had any of them known but that faith alone saves. Into the southern gulf were cast those who had been skilled in the doctrinals of faith. Into the western gulf, those who had been in the love of the world. And into the northern one, those who had been in no understanding; but had merely heard preachings; and had received no instruction afterwards. (143) First, the southern ones were brought; afterwards the western ones; finally the eastern ones. This was done at the same time as with the Papists. The eastern ones were brought beyond the northern tract. (144) When this had been done, their dwelling-places were devastated and destroyed. (145) I afterwards saw a vast number of those who had vaunted faith alone, and yet had had no faith, because they had paid no attention to the evils of their life, both the learned and the unlearned, saying, that they have the Word and the true doctrine . . . These, in a multitude, were first brought out into the west; and afterwards into the south, on the other side of the tract. The Babylonians were devastated there, and even towards the east, and thus further; and they were divided and dispersed towards the north . . . (146) When they were in the southern quarter, there then went forth near the gulf there a multitude which had been concealed there from early times; who in like manner had said that they had faith; and that they were to be saved on account of faith alone; and yet had thought nothing about the life. This multitude then approached and was commingled with them. (147) From a certain mountain[land] there was led forth a multitude who had led a moral life; but not in any religion; [but] solely from fear of the law, of the loss of reputation, of honour, and of gain; thus without any Christian life; and therefore in so far as they could perpetrate evils unseen, they had perpetrated them. As these had not acquired for themselves any communication with Heaven by a life from religion, they were brought round to the southern and western quarter, and were explored as to whether they had any religion of life; and, as they had none, they were rejected. (148) Lastly, came those who had been skilled in the doctrinals of the Church, and who in like manner had led a moral life, but not a Christian one . . . These, also, were cast out from that mountain[land]. (149) All these, who were divided into three classes, were driven away so far that they did not appear, except as a cloud; and were dispersed. I was told from Heaven, that they had been cast down into uninhabited and desert places; and thus had been separated, to prevent them from consociating. (150) This dispersion of the three classes was made to all the quarters . . . whence they can never return . . . because all the Knowledge of religion has been taken away from them . . . (152) The cleansing of the middle where the Reformed were lasted long; and those who were in the Church without having the Church in themselves . . . were cast by turns into the gulfs around the middle; and many into deserts. These cleansings lasted long after the Judgment. . . (165) I afterwards saw a vast number both sent forth out of the Heavens, and rising up below, and also left behind, who were allotted their places, abodes, and dwelling-places; in the east, those who were in the clear good of love and of charity; to the west, those who were in the obscure good of love and of charity; to the south, those who were in clear truths from good; to the north, those who were in obscure truths from good; all acknowledging the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth. (166) Many were also brought from the Christian world who had the understanding of truth, but not the will of good. In the beginning such had been accepted by the good, because they can also speak many truths; and with such in the beginning the understanding is illustrated, but the will is lulled. Such had been collected on the mountains in the western quarter. They bind themselves with the upright who are in the Ultimate Heaven . . . [and] secretly consociate themselves with the evil, and infest the upright, first by reasonings, and then by arts, until they are conjoined . . . for thus they prevail against others . . . I saw such on a rather high mountain in the western quarter towards the north . . . I saw such cast down from the mountain, and from the sides of the mountain; and a chasm opened beneath, and swallowed them . . . (See also above, at D.5696.) (176) Since the Judgment, all the Societies have been disposed in admirable order according to nations; the order was according to the affections in the Heavens, and according to the cupidities in the Hells . . . (178) The ordination of the Reformed lasted long after the Judgment . . . (179) All those were retained in the Heavens who had the delight of any use . . . and the acknowledgment of God . . .

[J. Post.] 219. After the Judgment [the Solifidians] were collected who had been dispersed among others round about; and when they had been collected there came into their mind the cunning to seduce the upright—that faith alone saves; and therefore the latter complained about them to the Lord; and then I saw them recede more and more, until they came to the boundaries of the Christian world, behind which there were deserts . . . (Their life there des.)

352. On the Last Judgment. (Nine propositions.)

—<sup>2</sup>. That a Last Judgment has been effected three times.

—<sup>3</sup>. That a Last Judgment has been effected and is effected by the Lord from primes through ultimates.

—<sup>4</sup>. That the Last Judgment could not have been effected the second time, unless the Lord Himself had come into the world . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. That unless the Lord had glorified His Human . . . no Last Judgment could have been effected at this day.

—<sup>7</sup>. That after a Last Judgment a new Church is always instaurated . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. That it is therefore foretold in the Apocalypse that the New Jerusalem will descend from Heaven after the Last Judgment, by which is meant the New Church.

—<sup>9</sup>. That no one is received into this Church . . . except him who acknowledges God as one both in Person and in Essence, in whom is the Trinity, thus the Lord; and unless by some combat he removes and shuns evils as sins against the Divine laws.

Coro. 10. That after this consummation . . . the Lord Jehovah appears, and effects a Judgment upon the men of the former Church, and separates the good from the evil . . . Gen.art.

— Every man is indeed judged after death; but at the end of [each Church] all are collected, and a general Judgment is effected upon them; and this to the end that they may be conjoined in heavenly order; which is effected by the ordination of the faithful into a new Heaven, and of the unfaithful into a new Hell beneath it.

11. The Judgment which is the last of every Church, is not effected in the natural world, but in the Spiritual World . . .

12. The Judgment which is effected upon all from the past Church, is effected to the end that the good may be separated from the evil, both generally and singularly; and in order that the good may be elevated into Heaven, and the evil cast down into Hell. (Other reasons given.) Such a Judgment was effected in the year 1757, upon the men of the modern Christian Church . . . 20<sup>a</sup>. 21<sup>a</sup>.

34. The fifth state of (the Most Ancient) Church, was the separation of the good from the evil, which was the Last Judgment upon all who had been of that Church. Gen.art.

36. Thus, in this Earth, there have come forth four Last Judgments upon its inhabitants; and from them four Heavens and Hells . . . All these Heavens have been described in the work concerning Conjugal Love . . .

A. 1726<sup>2</sup>. In their vernal flower and smile.

2072. 'Abraham' laughed' (Gen.xvii.17)=the affection of truth; as may be evident from the origin and essence of laughter. Its origin is nothing else than the affection of truth, or the affection of falsity. Hence come hilarity and gladness, which put themselves forth in the face by means of laughter. Hence it is evident that the essence of laughter is nothing else. Laughter, indeed, is a something external, which is of the body, because of the face; but in the Word interior things are expressed and signified by means of exterior ones . . . thus the affection of truth by laughter. In the Rational of man there is truth, which is the chief thing. There is also the affection of good in it; but this affection is in the affection of truth itself, as its soul. The affection of good which is in the Rational does not put itself forth by laughter; but by a certain joy; and by a derivative delight of pleasure which does not laugh; for in laughter there is commonly something which is not so good . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'laughter' here=the affection of truth, may be evident from the fact that it is here mentioned that Abraham laughed; and in like manner Sarah, both before Isaac was born, and also after he was born; and also from Isaac's having been named from laughter; for 'Isaac' means laughter. III.

2083. Because 'laughter,' in the internal sense, =the affection of truth, which is of the Rational . . . thus, here, the Divine Rational.

2139. That the human rational truth with the Lord did not perceive it, thus did not believe, is signified by the laughter of Sarah at the door of the tent, which was behind him;

VOL. IV.

2202. 'Sarah laughed within herself' (Gen.xviii.12)=the affection of truth of that Rational, that it should be so. 'To laugh,' or 'laughter,' =the affection of truth.

2207. 'Why did Sarah laugh at this?' (ver.13)=the thought of rational truth from its affection. 'To laugh,' or 'laughter' =the affection which is of truth.

2215. 'Sarah denied, saying, I did not laugh, because she was afraid' (ver.15)=that human rational truth wanted to excuse itself . . .

2216. 'He said, Nay, but thou didst laugh' (id.)=that still it was such. . . How these things are circumstanced, may be evident from those things which have been said above concerning the signification of 'to laugh,' or of 'laughter'; namely, that it is an affection of the Rational; and in fact the affection of truth or of falsity in the Rational. Thence is all laughter. So long as there is such an affection in the Rational as puts itself forth in laughter, so long there is something corporeal and worldly, thus merely human. Celestial good and spiritual good does not laugh; but it brings out its delight and cheerfulness in the face, speech, and gesture, in a different way. For there are very many things in laughter; as, for the most part, something of contempt; which, although it does not appear, still lies hidden; and it easily distinguishes itself from that cheerfulness of the lower mind, which also produces something like laughter. The state of the human Rational with the Lord is described by Sarah's laughing; and by it there is signified with what affection the truth of the Rational—at that time separated from good—regarded that which was said; [namely] that it was to be put off, and the Divine put on; not that it laughed; but that it perceived from the Divine of what quality it still was, and how much of the human there was still in it that had to be expelled. This is signified, in the internal sense, by the laughter of Sarah.

2640. '(Sarah said) God hath made me laugh' (Gen. xxi.6)=the affection of celestial truth. 'Laughter' =the affection of truth.

2641. 'Everyone who heareth shall laugh to me' (id.) =that all things there will have affection.

—<sup>e</sup>. That 'to laugh' =to be affected with truth; or to have the affection of truth. Refs.

2658. 'Laughter,' from which Isaac was named, =the affection of truth, or the good of truth.

3392. 'Behold Isaac laughing with Rebekah his woman' (Gen.xxvi.8)=that Divine good was present in Divine truth; or that Divine good was adjoined to Divine truth. . . 'To laugh' =the love or affection of truth.

8113. The Spirits of Jupiter . . . disposed the face to be smiling and cheerful.

8246. They were pleased with the faces . . . which were cheerful and smiling.

8247. The reason they were pleased with the smiling and cheerful faces, was that in their Earth the faces of almost all are such; and this because they have no solicitude about future things, nor have they worldly cares.

Laver. Labrum.

See LIP.

A. 3147<sup>e</sup>. See LAVER—lavacrum, here.

8215<sup>e</sup>. By the ten lavars, or 'bases' (near the temple of Solomon) (1 Kings vii. 30–33) were signified receptacles of the truth by means of which man is purified and regenerated.

10175a. By the laver and the washing (Ex. xxx.) is signified purification from evils the first in all worship.

10235. 'Thou shalt make a laver of brass' (ver. 18) = the good of the Natural of man, in which is purification. (For) 'the laver,' in which was water for washing, = the Natural of man. (See WASH, here.)

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason 'the laver' = the Natural, is that by the washing therein is signified purification from evils; and purification from evils is effected in the Natural; and besides, by vessels in general are signified those things which are of the natural man. . . It may seem strange that by 'the laver' is signified the Natural of man; but it is to be known that in the internal sense it here treats of purification from evils; and man is that which is purified. Hence it follows that something of man is signified by that in which the washing took place . . . and the reason that this is the Natural, is that purification is effected therein.

—<sup>4</sup>. As by 'the laver' is signified the Natural of man; by the waters in the laver, the truths which are of faith; and by the washing, purification from evils; it may thence be known what was signified by the brazen sea near the temple; and also by the twelve oxen which bore it: and in like manner what by the other ten lavvers which were also placed near the temple; and by the lions there, the oxen, and the cherubs; and also by the wheels as of a chariot beneath them. (See SEA, here.)

—<sup>5</sup>. This vessel, or this laver, is called 'a sea,' because by 'a sea' is signified the Scientific in general; and all the Scientific is of the natural man . . . The reason why this laver was 'according to the laver of a cup,' was that by 'a cup' . . . is also signified the Scientific which is of the natural or sensuous man; by 'the twelve oxen' were signified all the goods of the natural and sensuous man in the complex, because they were in place of bases; and by 'a base' is signified that which is the ultimate, and supports . . . The reason they looked to all the quarters of the world, was that the good of the Natural of man is the receptacle of all things which inflow from the world; both those which relate to goods, and those which relate to truths. Its diameter of ten cubits signified what is full; and its circumference of thirty cubits signified a plenary complex. The 'two thousand baths' signified the conjunction of good and truth; thus purification and regeneration . . . That the brazen sea was placed 'on the right shoulder [of the house] towards the east overagainst the south,' signified towards the Lord; for the Lord is the east. 'The house,' or temple, = Heaven and the Church where is the Lord. (Thus) 'the brazen sea,' consequently 'the laver' = the Natural of man, in which is purification.

10236. (For) 'the base' of the laver in which was the water for washing = the ultimate of the Natural, which is called the Sensuous.

10237. The reason the laver was placed 'between the Tent of the Assembly and the altar' (id.), and the reason Aaron and his sons there washed their hands and feet, was that there might be represented the purification of the heart, and regeneration, which in its essence is the conjunction of truth and good . . . This conjunction is effected through the truths of faith . . . and this is meant by man's being regenerated 'by water and the spirit' . . .

10275. '(Thou shalt anoint with it) the laver and its base' (ver. 28) = all things which belong to purification from evils and falsities, and to regeneration by the Lord. . . . 'The laver,' in which was the washing, = the Purificatorium from evils and falsities; and also the Regeneratorium.

10345. '(They shall make) the laver, and its base' (Ex. xxxi. 9) = a representative of purification and regeneration; and of the Natural; (for) the washing which was effected by the water in the laver, = a representative of purification and regeneration; and 'the laver' = the Natural of man.

E. 600<sup>21</sup>. The reason Solomon placed lavvers; 'five near the shoulder of the house on the right,' and 'five near the shoulder of the house on its left;' but the brazen sea 'on the right shoulder of the house towards the east overagainst the south,' was that 'the house,' or temple, represented Heaven and the Church; 'the lavvers,' purifications from falsities and evils, and thus preparations to enter into Heaven and into the Church; and 'the right shoulder of the house,' the south in the Heavens, where Divine truth is in its light; and its 'left shoulder,' the north, where Divine truth is in its shade. Thus by those 'ten lavvers' were signified all things of purification, and all who are being purified; and by the five on this shoulder and on the other were signified those, or that kind of men, with whom Divine truth is in its light, and those with whom it is in its shade . . . But 'the brazen sea' represented a general Purificatorium; and the reason this was placed (as it was) was because the Divine truth which purifies proceeds from the Lord's Divine love . . .

Laver. Lavacrum.

See WASH-lavare.

A. 2162<sup>12</sup>. Hence their lavvers were of brass . . . because 'brass' represented the good of external worship, which is the same as natural good.

3147<sup>6</sup>. The lavvers, which were of brass, were placed outside the temple; namely, the brazen sea, and the ten brazen lavvers, and the laver of brass from which Aaron and his sons washed themselves . . . by which was signified that external or natural things alone were being purified; and unless these are purified—that is, unless the things which are of the love of self and of the world are removed—internal things . . . can never inflow.

T. 685<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that baptism . . . is called the Laver of Regeneration.

Law. Lex.

See under JURISDICTION-jus.

A. 36<sup>e</sup>. 'The Law and the Prophets' (Matt. xxii. 40) = the universal doctrine of faith; and the whole Word. 2037<sup>e</sup>. 2049<sup>3</sup>.

162. All the laws of truth and right flow from celestial principles (or beginnings); or from the order of life of the celestial man . . . so, principally, does the law of marriages descend [therefrom] . . . The law of marriages thence derived, is that there shall be one husband and one wife . . . This law was not only revealed to the men of the Most Ancient Church, but was also inscribed on their internal man . . .

266. As every law, and every precept, comes forth from the Celestial and the Spiritual, as from its true beginning, it follows that this law, which is of marriages, does so also . . .

548. The laws of this Kingdom are eternal Truths, which are all founded on that one only law, that they shall love the Lord above all things, and the neighbour as themselves. 1038<sup>5</sup>. 1728. 1775. 5826<sup>3</sup>. H. 406.

[A.] 1121. (The sons of the Most Ancient Church) said that they had the law inscribed on themselves, because they were in love to the Lord, and in love towards the neighbour; for in that case whatever the laws dictated was according to their perception; and whatever the laws forbade was contrary to their perception: and they did not doubt but that all human laws—as is the case with the Divine ones—are founded in love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour, and regard it as their fundamental . . . They also believe that all who live in the world at this day who love the Lord and the neighbour, also have the law inscribed on themselves . . .

1361. It is a general law of representation, that . . .

1857<sup>3</sup>. A universal law of order . . .

1861<sup>15</sup>. When the Law was being promulgated . . .

1937<sup>4</sup>. Hence is a universal law, that . . .

2015<sup>4</sup>. 'So that there is no law' (Lam.ii.9)=nothing of the doctrine of faith.

—<sup>10</sup>. All the laws of order by which the Lord governs the universe as a King, are truths; but all the laws by which He governs it as a Priest—and by which He also rules the truths themselves—are goods . . .

2121. It is according to the laws of order, that . . .

2235. What is right is what is judged from the law; and thus from what is just of the law . . .

2447. From the laws of order as to truth. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. When a man separates himself from good, he then casts himself into the laws of order which are of truth separated from good; and which are such that they condemn . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. For all the laws of order are from the Divine Itself, the Divine Human, and the proceeding Holy of the Lord.

2567<sup>8</sup>. All these laws originate from the laws of truth and good in Heaven; and, in the internal sense, they have relation to these . . .

2606. The Word of the Old Testament was formerly called 'the Law and the Prophets.' By 'the Law' were meant all the historical books. Enum.

2748. I asked them if they did not fear the laws . . .

2768<sup>e</sup>. For he who separates himself from the laws of Divine order—all of which are of good and the derivative truth—casts himself into laws opposite to Divine order, which are of evil and falsity, and thence of punishments and tortures.

2826<sup>7</sup>. 'The law of Truth' (Mal.ii.6)=the truth of (good).

2876. It is an eternal law, that . . .

3382. 'He hath observed My observances, My precepts, My statutes, and My laws' (Gen.xxvi.5)=through continual revelations from Himself . . . 'Laws'=all things (of the Word) in special.

—<sup>3</sup>. For to observe . . . laws, etc. is not predicable of the Lord; because He Himself was the Word; consequently, He Himself . . . was the law . . . Therefore by the above words, in the supreme sense, nothing else can be signified than the union of the Divine of the Lord with the Human through continual revelations from Himself.

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'laws'=all things of the Word in special, in the genuine sense. Ill.

3540<sup>2</sup>. As all the laws—even the civil and public ones—which are in the Word, have a correspondence with the laws of good and truth which are in Heaven . . .

3654<sup>8</sup>. 'The law written on the heart' (Jer.xxxi.33) =the derivative perception of good and truth; and also conscience.

3693<sup>6</sup>. In this law, as in the rest, there is what is representative and significative of the Divine law which is of good and truth in the Lord's Kingdom. —<sup>7</sup>.

3703<sup>15</sup>. In the representative Churches there were many laws which had their Divine thence. Ill.

—<sup>17</sup>. (As) the laws of marriages . . . The laws of inheritances . . . The laws concerning the allowed and the forbidden degrees . . .

3974. The law concerning the [Hebrew] servants. Ex. 4113<sup>9</sup>.

4167<sup>2</sup>. The fear of the law, etc. (as a motive). 5135<sup>3</sup>. (See under BRIND-vincire.)

4197<sup>7</sup>. This command . . . is founded on the Divine law, that . . . These are the things upon which that law is founded; although, in the external form, it appears to be founded on the civil state; but the one is not contrary to the other . . .

4281<sup>8</sup>. In order that the representative of a Church might come forth with them, there were given them, through manifest revelation, such statutes and such laws as were entirely representative; and therefore so long as they . . . strictly observed them, they could represent; but when they turned aside . . . to the statutes and laws of other nations . . . they deprived themselves of the faculty of representing.

4335<sup>4</sup>. This law was delivered because (of its signification).

4434<sup>10</sup>. The laws concerning marriages delivered in the Old Testament, in like manner have a correspondence to the laws of the heavenly marriage. Ill.

4444<sup>2</sup>. That this same law was known to the Ancients . . .

— (Thus Dinah's brothers) did not act from the law, thus not from good; but against the law, and therefore from evil.

—<sup>6</sup>. For the statutes, judgments, and laws, which were given to the Israelitish . . . nation were not new; but were such as there had been before in the Ancient Church, and in the second Ancient Church . . . 4449<sup>2</sup>.

4503<sup>11</sup>. The reason these laws were delivered (was on account of the signification).

4835<sup>2</sup>. The quality of the levirate law . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. When representatives ceased . . . that law was abolished.

4859<sup>2</sup>. Moses represented the Word which is called 'the Law.'

4952<sup>2</sup>. Unless the laws had withstood them . . .

5002<sup>2</sup>. Unless there were laws which united . . . society would be entirely dissipated.

5127. From a law of order. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. That it is a law of order that lower or exterior things must serve higher or interior ones . . .

5135°. For as all the laws (of the Jewish Church) derived their origin from the Spiritual World, they correspond to the laws of order which are in Heaven.

5323°. The Royal was to (kings then) the law; which, being from Divine truth, was to be adored in the king . . . Thus the king himself attributed to himself nothing of the Royal except the guardianship of the law . . . knowing that adoration from any other source than the law . . . was idolatry. The Royal is Divine truth . . . consequently, the Royal is the law; which, in itself, is the truth of the kingdom, according to which they must live.

5413°. It is a general law, that . . .

5759. This law is of judgment from truth.

5764. Such a law has been derived from Hell.

5828°. The universal law, that influx accommodates itself to efflux.

5886°. The law of the female captives. Ex. —8.

5922°. Moses (in this) represented the Law; that is, the Historical Word . . . By 'the Law' are meant his books together with the other historical ones . . . and therefore when the Word is called 'the Law and the Prophets,' by 'the Law' is meant the Historical Word . . .

6071°. The laws in kingdoms are from the king; but not the evils of penalty.

6435°. As such things were signified (by mountains) . . . the Law was promulgated upon Mount Sinai.

6559. It is a law in the other life, that . . .

6632°. 'The Law and the Prophets' are the Word in each and all things.

6705. Hence the doctrine of their Church contained the laws of life.

—e. Everyone . . . either explains or changes the laws of doctrine in his own favour.

6714. (In Ex.ii.) in the supreme sense, it treats of the Lord, how as to the Human He was made the Law Divine. Moses represents the Lord as to the Law Divine, which is the Word.

6718. The first of birth of the Law Divine in the Lord's Human. Sig.

6719. The Law Divine in its own origin. Sig.

6723°. As it was provided that Moses should represent the Lord as to the Law Divine, or the Word . . . he was placed in a little ark, but in a mean one, because it was at its first birth . . . But afterwards, when it had shone forth from Mount Sinai, it was placed in an Ark which was called the Ark of the Testimony. That the Law Divine was placed within the Ark. Ill.

—4. Hence the Ark was most holy, because it represented the Lord's Divine Human as to the Divine Law; for from the Lord's Divine Human proceeds the Divine Law, or the Divine truth, which is the same as 'the Word' in John i. 6725.

6744. Moses . . . =the Law Divine in its origin; in the supreme sense, with the Lord when He was making His Human to be the Law Divine; and, in the relative sense, with man . . . when he is being initiated into truth Divine. 6752.

6752. What the Law Divine is . . . The Law Divine, in a wide sense, signifies the whole Word; in a less wide one, it signifies the Historical Word; in a confined one, that which was written through Moses; and in the most confined one, the ten precepts inscribed on stone tables upon Mount Sinai. (All these different senses of the 'Divine Law' ill.)

—8. As Moses represented the Law, he was allowed to enter to the Lord on Mount Sinai; and not only to receive there the tables of the Law, but also to hear the statutes and judgments of the Law . . .

—9. The radiation from his faces signified the internal of the Law; for this is in the light of Heaven, and is therefore called 'glory;' and 'the covering' signified the external of the Law.

6766°. It has treated . . . concerning the beginnings of the Law Divine in the Lord's Human: it now treats of the progress of that Law. But, in the internal sense, it treats of the progress of Divine truth with the man who is being regenerated . . . 6772.

6780. Aid from the truths which are of the Law from the Divine. Sig.

6789°. The truth which is of the Law from the Divine is the truth of the Internal Church.

6804°. 'To put the law in the midst of them; and to write it upon their heart'=to endow with faith and charity.

6827. That the Law from the Divine was instructing those who were in the truth of simple good. Sig. and Ex.

—, Moses=the Lord as to the Law Divine; in the beginning, as to truth which is of the Law from the Divine; but here, as to the Law from the Divine. So may be named the degrees of progression in the Lord before He became the Law Divine itself as to the Human.

6940. (In Ex.iv.) it treats of the Law Divine,—that truth was adjoined to its good . . . Moses represents the Law Divine as to good; and Aaron, as to truth.

6943. Thought from the Law Divine. Sig. and Ex.

7089. 'Moses and Aaron'=the Divine Law, and the doctrine thence.

—, By the Divine Law which Moses represents, is meant the Word such as it is in its internal sense, thus such as it is in the Heavens.

—, The ten precepts, which, in special, are called 'the law.'

7104. That their Divine Law and doctrine will not exempt them from grievous things. Sig.

7158. Thought concerning the Divine Law and the derivative doctrine. Sig.

7164. Complaint from the Law Divine. Sig.

7166. When yet the Law proceeding from the Divine seems to say otherwise. Sig. and Ex.

—, For the Law from the Divine is the law of order; and the law of order concerning those who are in a state of infestations is . . .

7167. When the command from the things which are of the Law Divine appeared to those who are in falsities. Sig. and Ex.

[A.7167]<sup>2</sup>. (For) 'the name of Jehovah' = everything of faith and charity from which the Lord is worshipped, thus everything which is of the Law Divine; for the Law Divine is nothing else than that which is of charity and faith; for the Law Divine is truth Divine proceeding from the Lord; and that which proceeds from the Lord is Divine good and truth . . .

7186. Instruction concerning the Law Divine. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>1</sup>. Divine order is no other; hence neither is the Law Divine any other; for every law Divine is of order; inasmuch, that whether you say the Law Divine, or a law of Divine order, it is the same.

—<sup>2</sup>. Those of the Spiritual Church are now instructed concerning this Law, and that they will certainly be delivered by means of it . . . Moses here represents the Law Divine, such as it is with those who are of the Spiritual Church when they are in a state of infestations . . .

7201. That the Law Divine will give those of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom to apperceive. Sig.

7206. These truths Divine are nothing else than the laws of order from the Lord's Divine Human; for all order is from Him; thus all the laws of order. According to these laws is the whole Heaven, consequently also the universe. The laws of order, or the truths, which proceed from the Lord . . . are what are called 'the Word by which all things were made' . . .

7215. Exhortation by the Law Divine to those who are of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom. Sig.

7222. The Law from the Divine and the derivative thought. Sig.

7226. Instruction anew from the Law Divine, and at the same time from doctrine. Sig.

—<sup>3</sup>. The quality of the difference between the Law Divine, and doctrine. Refs.

7231<sup>e</sup>. The Internal of the Church is called Law from the Divine; and the External, doctrine thence. The Law from the Divine, which is the Internal of the Church, is also the Word in the internal sense . . .

7244. Thought concerning the Law Divine with those who are in falsities. Sig.

—<sup>4</sup>. Here, that the Law Divine is impure to those who are in falsities.

7268. The Law Divine, and its power over those who are in falsities. Sig.

—<sup>5</sup>. Because Moses represented the Divine Law, which is Divine truth, and is called 'the Word.'

7270. Immediate Divine influx into the Divine Law. Sig.

7284. The state and quality of the Law from the Divine (then with them). Sig. and Ex.

7291. The influx and communication of the Law Divine . . . with doctrine. Sig.

—<sup>6</sup>. Because the Law Divine is internal truth, and doctrine is external truth.

7296. 'Wizards' = those who pervert . . . the laws of order.

7381. The influx of the internal law into the external law. Sig. . . The doctrine of good and truth, which Aaron represents, is nothing else than the external law, which comes forth from the internal law, that is, through the internal law from the Divine. . . The internal law is truth Divine itself, such as is in Heaven; and the external law is truth Divine such as is on earth: thus the internal law is truth accommodated to the Angels; and the external law is truth accommodated to men . . . The (former) truth is for the most part incomprehensible to men . . . (whereas) the ideas of interior thought with men, although they are above material things, still are terminated in material things; and where they are terminated there they appear to be . . . Hence it is evident how the case is with the truth of faith; and of what quality is that which falls into the thought of man; and which is called the external law, and is represented by 'Aaron.' Examp.

—<sup>7</sup>. From this example, it may in some measure be evident of what quality is internal truth, or truth accommodated to the Angels, which is called the internal law; and of what quality is external truth, or truth accommodated to men, which is called the external law.

7390. The presence of the Law Divine. Sig. 7451.

7416. The influx of the internal law into the external law. Sig.

7463<sup>2</sup>. The reason the Law Divine is the same as truth Divine, is that the Law Divine = the Word, and thus truth Divine. That 'the Law' = the Word, and thus truth Divine. Ill.

—<sup>8</sup>. 'Written in the law' (John x.34) = in the Word; for it is written in David.

—<sup>9</sup>. That 'the law,' in a wide sense, = the whole Word; in a less wide sense, the historical Word; in a still less wide sense, the Word which was written through Moses; and in a confined sense, the precepts of the decalogue. Ref.

7634. By Moses is represented the Law Divine, which is the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine good of the Lord; thus it is Divine truth to which Divine good is united; from which is the Church.

7721. By the presence of the Law Divine with the infesters, is meant that they perceived whence the plagues were coming.

7995. The laws of order for those who have been delivered from damnation and infestations. Sig.

—<sup>10</sup>. It is to be known that all the statutes which were commanded to the sons of Israel, were laws of order in the external form; but those things which they represented and signified, were laws of order in the internal form. The laws of order are truths which are from good. The complex of all the laws of order, is the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine good of the Lord . . .

8013. 'One law shall be' (Ex.xii.49) = that there is a like right . . .

8068. 'That the law of Jehovah may be in thy mouth' (Ex.xiii.9) = that the Divine truth may be in everything which proceeds from . . . the understanding and the will.

8080<sup>4</sup>. The law of the redemption of the first-born of men . . .

8118<sup>3</sup>. As the laws of charity and of conscience which had been inscribed on their hearts ceased, it was necessary to enact laws to restrain violence.

8223. That the evil which is intended for others relapses upon themselves . . . originates from the law of Divine order: 'Do not to another except what thou wantest others should do to thee.' From this law, which, in the Spiritual World, is constant and perpetual, have originated the laws of retaliation. III.

—<sup>2</sup>. But with that law in the other life, the case, further, is this. Ex. . . And as it is from a law of order, that evil relapses upon those who intend evil . . . they rush in. . . The good who are in the Heavens . . . do not resist evil; for the laws of order defend and protect what is good and true . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) the law of retaliation . . . was not abrogated by the Lord; but was explained . . . that the law of order itself which protects what is good, does it from itself, through the evil.

8420. 'Whether he walks in My law' (Ex.xvi.4)=whether they can live the life of truth and good. . . 'The law'=the Word; and as it=the Word, it=Divine truth; thus also the doctrine of good and truth. Hence by 'to walk in the law of Jehovah' is signified to live the life of truth and good according to doctrine.

8513. 'How long do ye refuse to keep My precepts and My laws?' (ver.28)=that were not acting according to Divine order. Ex.

8581. 'Horeb'=the Law Divine.

—<sup>e</sup>. The reason water was not given to the people from any other rock than from that in Horeb, is that by 'Horeb' is signified the Law Divine. The reason the Law Divine is signified by 'Horeb,' is that the Law was promulgated there; and the faith which is from the Lord is from the Law Divine; that is, from the Word; for by that the Lord teaches what faith is; and also gives faith.

8658<sup>e</sup>. To this state comes the man of the Church after he has undergone temptations; and before the Law Divine is inscribed on hearts.

8695. 'I make known the judgments of God, and His laws' (Ex.xviii.16)=that thence they are taught what is true and what is good. . . 'Judgments'=truths; and 'laws'=the truths of good. The reason 'laws'=the truths of good, is that 'the law' in a wide sense=the whole Word; in a less wide one, the Historical Word; in a confined sense, the Word which was written through Moses; and in the most confined sense, the ten precepts of the decalogue.

8706. 'Thou shalt teach them the statutes and the laws' (ver.20)=that from the truth which is immediately from the Lord are the external and internal goods and truths of the Church. . . 'Statutes'=the external goods and truths of the Church; and 'laws'=the internal goods and truths of the Church.

8753<sup>2</sup>. The reason Mount Sinai=these things, is that the Law was promulgated thence by the Lord; and the Law is Divine truth from Divine good; and also is the truth of faith from good. Refs. 8817.

8904. 'Thou shalt not commit adultery'= . . . that the laws of order are not to be inverted. Ex.

8972<sup>2</sup>. The laws which were delivered and commanded by the Lord to the sons of Israel were distinguished into precepts, judgments, and statutes. (Continued under JUDGE.)

—<sup>4</sup>. All laws, in so far as they were of a Representative Church, were called in general 'judgments,' and 'statutes.' III.

8981<sup>2</sup>. The law from which this statute flows, is that . . .

8999. That which is contrary to the laws of Divine order. Sig.

— The laws of Divine order are truths in Heaven; for Divine order is from the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord.

9026<sup>e</sup>. Therefore such things were . . . commanded as do not avail as laws since the internals of the Church have been opened . . .

9049<sup>2</sup>. For the laws of order in the other life are not learned from books, and thence stored up in the memory, as with men in the world; but they are inscribed on hearts; the laws of evil in the hearts of the evil; and the laws of good in the hearts of the good . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The law of order from which these things (of retaliation) flow, is . . . 'All things whatever that ye would men should do to you, so do ye also to them; this is the Law and the Prophets' (Matt.vii.12). Order is from the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord; the laws of order are truths from good in Heaven; and truths separated from good in Hell . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The Law which is called the law of the right of retaliation. Quoted and Ex.

9182. Whence came the law concerning illegitimate conjunction . . . All the laws delivered to the sons of Israel have their causes in Heaven, and derive their origin from the laws of order there. The laws of order in Heaven are all from the Divine truth and good which proceed from the Lord: hence they are the laws of the good of love, and of the truth of faith.

9211. From this law concerning interest and usury it can be seen how the case is with the laws which are called 'judgments' . . . namely, that they ceased together with the sacrifices . . . The interiors of this law are, that . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. But let men beware lest they believe to be abrogated the laws of life, such as are in the decalogue, and passim elsewhere in the Old Testament; for these laws have been confirmed in both an internal and an external form; for the reason that they cannot be separated.

9290. 'As I have commanded thee'=according to the laws of order.

9301. This is the heavenly arcanum from which this law (respecting the seething of a kid) flows; for all the laws, and all the judgments and statutes, which were given to the sons of Israel, contain arcana of Heaven; with which they also correspond.

9349. It has treated in Ex.xx.xxi.xxii.xxiii. concerning the laws, judgments, and statutes which were promulgated from Mount Sinai; and it has been shown what they contain in the internal sense . . . The literal sense of the Word is by no means annihilated thereby, but is rather confirmed . . . according to the Lord's words in Matthew: 'Amen, I say to you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one little horn shall not pass from the Law, until all things be done' (v. 18); and in Luke: 'It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than for one apex of the Law to fall' (xvi. 17). 'The Law' = the Word.

—4. The laws, judgments, and statutes (in the above-mentioned chapters) which are by all means to be observed and done, are those which are contained in Ex. xx. 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 20; xxi. 12, 14, 15, 20; xxii. 18, 19, 20, 28; xxiii. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 24, 25, 32. Those which can serve for use if one pleases, are such as are contained in Ex. xx. 10; xxi. 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 33, 34, 35, 36; xxii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 31; xxiii. 4, 5, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 33. Those which have been abrogated as to use at this day where the Church is—Ex. xx. 21, 22, 23; xxi. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 16, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32; xxii. 15, 29, 30; xxiii. 10, 11, 17, 18, 19.

9411. The reason they had 'seen the God of Israel' . . . is because the laws promulgated from Mount Sinai—in a wide sense, the Word in the whole complex; and the Word is the Divine truth from the Lord, which, in the supreme sense, treats of the Lord alone; and therefore when those who are in illustration are reading the Word, they see the Lord . . . This is effected in the Word alone, and not in any other writing.

9416. 'I will give thee tables of stone' = the Book of the Law, or the Word in the whole complex. Ex.

9417. 'And the law and the precept' (Ex. xxiv. 12) = truth in general and in particular. 'The Law' = truth in general . . . In the Word a distinction is made between precepts, judgments, and statutes . . . but all these, in a general word, are called 'the Law'; and the several things which are of the Law are called 'precepts' . . .

9422. By Mount Sinai is signified the Law, or the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord; thus the Word: by its peak, where was Jehovah . . . is signified the supreme or inmost of the Law or Word: by the rest of the mountain . . . is signified the internal of the Law or Word, such as in Heaven; and by the things which were below the mountain, where were the elders and the people, is signified the external of the Law or Word, which is its external sense . . .

9613<sup>3</sup>. The conjunction of the angelic Societies into one Heaven, has relation to the following laws. Enum.

9987. A law of order. Sig. . . (For) 'a word' = Divine truth, and thence a law of order.

—5. The law of order which in this chapter is signified by 'a word,' is how {the Lord glorified His Human . . . and, in the relative sense (it applies to) the regeneration of man . . . The reason this especially is a law of order, is that the Lord as to His Divine Human is order in the Heavens; and because everyone who is being regenerated is being reduced into that order; and therefore those who are in that order are in the Lord.

10122<sup>2</sup>. It is a law of Divine order, that the will and understanding make one mind . . .

10160<sup>2</sup>. The Most Ancients . . . acted what is just and fair from a law inscribed on their hearts.

10336<sup>2</sup>. 'To write the law upon the heart' = to implant Divine truth in the will . . .

10802. See KING at this ref. 10803. 10804. 10806.

H. 19<sup>2</sup>. 'The Law and the Prophets' = the whole Word; thus all truth Divine.

202<sup>2</sup>. The Word contains all the laws of Divine order; for the laws of Divine order are the precepts which are therein . . .

215<sup>2</sup>. (In the Spiritual Kingdom) they have laws, according to which they live together. The governors administer all things according to the laws. They understand them, because they are wise; and in doubtful things they are illustrated by the Lord.

420<sup>2</sup>. He receives the Lord who lives according to the laws of Divine order, which are the precepts of love and faith . . .

531. The laws of spiritual life, the laws of civil life, and the laws of moral life, are delivered in the ten precepts of the decalogue; in the first three, the laws of spiritual life; in the four following ones, the laws of civil life; and in the last three, the laws of moral life.

J. 69<sup>2</sup>. They had been just and sincere for the sake of civil and moral laws; and not for the sake of Divine laws . . .

9. That by 'the Law,' in a wider sense, are meant all things written by Moses in his five books. Ill.

10. That all things of the Word are meant by 'the Law' in the widest sense. Ill.

S. 46. By the Law itself inscribed on the two tables of stone . . . was signified the Lord as to the Word.

Life 21. Hence results this general law . . .

53<sup>2</sup>. They were promulgated with so great a miracle, in order that it might be known that those laws were not only civil and moral laws, but also spiritual laws . . . and therefore those laws, by their promulgation from Mount Sinai, were made laws of religion. R. 529<sup>2</sup>.

54. As those laws were the firstfruits of the Word . . . and as they were, in a brief summary, the complex of all things of religion . . . nothing was more holy. 55. 56. 59.

63. (The notion that man cannot fulfil the law. Ex.) 64.

F. 67<sup>2</sup>. 'The little horn' (of the he-goat) = the argument that no one can fulfil the law . . .

W. 37<sup>a</sup>. The Divine Love wills to save all; but it cannot save them except by means of the Divine wisdom; and of the Divine wisdom are all the laws through which salvation is effected; and Love cannot transcend these laws; because the Divine love and the Divine wisdom are a one, and act in union.

P. 32<sup>a</sup>. He comes into the second degree . . . if he lives according to the spiritual laws of order, which are Divine truths; and he can also come into the third degree . . . if he lives according to the celestial laws of order, which are Divine goods.

70. That there are laws of the Divine Providence which are unknown to men. Gen.art.

71. That it is a law of the Divine Providence that man should act from freedom according to reason. Gen.art.

95. In proportion as man as from himself does the laws of his table, the Lord gives him to do the laws of His table. But the man who does not do the laws of his own table—all of which relate to love towards the neighbour—cannot do the laws of the Lord's table, all of which relate to the love of the Lord . . .

329<sup>a</sup>. If you say, Do not do this because it is contrary to the Divine laws—to this he can attend . . .

331. That the Lord cannot act contrary to the laws of the Divine Providence . . . Gen.art.

R. Pref. IVa. (The doctrine of the Reformed concerning the Law and the Gospel. Quotations.)

417<sup>a</sup>. That Paul meant the works of the Mosaic law, which was for the Jews, we have been further confirmed by this: that all the statutes for the Jews in Moses are called 'the law.' III.

577. 'His wound of death was healed' = . . . that no one can . . . fulfil the law; and that . . . Christ . . . has taken away the damnation of the law.

578. 'And the whole earth admired after the beast' = that that faith was then received with joy . . . because thus they would not be servants under the law . . .

— For they believe that thus the law does not damn; thus they believe that to sin without the damnation of the law is freedom, provided they have faith; when yet this is servitude itself . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. I have spoken with certain doctors of the Church in the World of Spirits, as to what they understand by 'the works of the law;' and what by 'the law,' under whose yoke, servitude, and damnation they say they are not. They said that they were the works of the law of the decalogue. I then said, What does the decalogue decree? Is it not these things—Thou shalt not kill; Thou shalt not scortate; Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not testify falsely? Are these the works of the law which you separate from faith, saying, that faith alone justifies and saves without the works of the law? and are these the things for which Christ has made satisfaction? And they replied that these are the things. And then was heard a voice from Heaven, saying, Who can be so insane? and their faces were at once turned to the diabolical Spirits, among whom was Machiavelli, and many from the Jesuitical order, who permitted all those things, provided they would beware of the laws of the world . . .

579. 'They adored the dragon . . . '= the acknowledgment by the leaders and teachers of the doctrine of justification by faith without the works of the law . . .

580. 'And they adored the beast' = the acknowledgment by the general body—coetu—that it is a holy truth, that no one can . . . fulfil the law.

— It follows that the works of the law are to be removed from faith, as not saving.

601. 'Saying . . . to make an image of the beast . . . ' = that they lead the men of the Church to receive for doctrine, that faith is the only means of salvation, because no one can . . . fulfil the law . . .

662. 'They sang the Song of Moses . . . and the Song of the Lamb' = confession from charity, and thus from a life according to the precepts of the Law, which is the decalogue . . .

— By 'Moses,' in a wide sense, is meant all the Law written in his five books; and, in a confined sense, the Law which is called the decalogue . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason why by 'Moses,' in a wide sense, is meant the Law, is that his five books are called 'the Law.' That all the precepts, judgments, and statutes given through him in his five books are called 'the Law.' Ex. and III.

—<sup>3</sup>. It follows from this that by 'Moses' is meant the Law which is the decalogue . . .

920<sup>a</sup>. In the Church [those] men are celestial who live justly according to the precepts because they are Divine laws; as a civil man lives according to the precepts of what is just because they are civil laws. But the difference between them is, that the former, from his life according to the precepts or laws, is a citizen of Heaven, in proportion as, with himself, he makes the civil laws which are of justice also Divine laws.

M. 276<sup>a</sup>. That matrimonies . . . are to remain to the end of life, is from the Divine law; and, as it is from this, it is also from rational law, and thence from civil law . . . It is from rational law, because it is founded upon spiritual law ; for Divine law and rational law are one law.

[M.] 351. That from these . . . are saved those who acknowledge God ; and, from religion, live according to the civil laws of justice. Gen.art.

— By the civil laws of justice are meant such precepts as are in the decalogue . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. These same laws were promulgated . . . with a stupendous miracle . . . in order that . . . they might become also the laws of religion . . . T.282. 444<sup>2</sup>.

T. 55. There is not an empire, kingdom, dukedom, republic, City, house, which is not established by laws, which make the order, and thus the form, of its government. In each of them the laws of justice are in the highest place ; political laws are in the second ; and economical laws are in the third. If these are compared with man, the laws of justice make his head, political laws his body, and economical laws his garments ; and therefore these latter, like the garments, can be changed. But as to what concerns the order into which the Church has been instaurated by God . . . the laws of this order are as many as the Truths in the Word : the laws which regard God will make its head ; the laws which regard the neighbour will make its body ; and ceremonies will make its garments ; for unless the latter held together the former in their order, it would be as if the body were stripped naked, and exposed to the heat in summer, and the cold in winter . . .

56. That the omnipotence of God . . . proceeds and operates according to the laws of His order. Gen.art.

71<sup>2</sup>. IV. It is a law of order that . . . V. It is a law of order that . . . VI. It is a law of order that . . . VII. It is also a law of order that . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. When the satan had heard these things . . . he retorted . . . Is man, from his own power, to introduce himself into order by doing these its laws ? Do you not know that man is not under the law ? . . . I only replied this : It is also a law of order that man by his own work and power should procure for himself faith through Truths from the Word . . .

73. (They said,) What is the Divine omnipotence if it is tied to laws ? Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The laws of order prescribed for man are . . . The laws of order on the part of God then are . . . God cannot, according to the laws of His order, remit sins to any man, except in so far as the man, according to his laws, desists from them . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (God did this) by fulfilling all things of the Word ; that is, all the laws of order therein . . .

— The Divine omnipotence . . . acts continually and to eternity according to the laws of its order ; and it cannot act against them ; nor change them as to a point ; because order with all its laws is Himself.

74<sup>2</sup>. (They said,) Are you the man who has circumscripted God with laws, as with bonds ? . . . I said, Learn the laws of Divine order . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. God from Himself as order created . . . man, in whom He established the laws of His order . . . which laws, in the sum, are that he should believe in God, and love the neighbour . . . There is no reciprocal dwelling of man in God, except with those who live according to the laws of order prescribed in the Word . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. I replied, It is not a contradiction to act omnipotently according to the laws of justice with judgment ; or according to the laws inscribed on love from wisdom : but it is a contradiction that God can act against the laws of His justice and love . . . (See OMNIPOTENCE, and ORDER, here.)

87<sup>e</sup>. By means of Divine truth, God created the universe ; and all the laws of order, through which He preserves the universe, are Truths.

89<sup>e</sup>. For it is a law of order, that . . .

100<sup>e</sup>. For it is a fixed and immutable law, that . . .

131<sup>e</sup>. (This) is according to a law inscribed on nature.

220. By the Law itself inscribed on the two tables was signified the Word.

262. That the Lord fulfilled all things of the Word, is evident from the passages where it is said that the Law and the Scripture were fulfilled by Him. III.

—<sup>2</sup>. That all things of the Word are meant by 'the Law.' III.

283. The holiness of the whole Tabernacle was . . . from the Law which was in the Ark.

—<sup>2</sup>. On account of its holiness, from the Law in the Ark, the people . . . encamped around it . . . On account of the holiness of that Law, and the presence of Jehovah in it, Jehovah talked with Moses over the mercy-seat . . . and the Ark was called 'Jehovah there.' . . . On account of the presence of Jehovah in that Law, and around it, miracles were wrought by the Ark in which was the Law. Enum. 284, III.

287. The decalogue is called, by eminence, 'the Law,' because it contains all things which are of doctrine and of life . . .

288. 'The Law' is often mentioned in the Word . . . In a confined sense, by 'the Law' is meant the decalogue ; in a wider sense . . . 'the Law' means the statutes given through Moses to the sons of Israel ; and . . . by 'the Law,' in the widest sense, is meant the whole Word. III.

341<sup>2</sup>. The laws of justice are truths which cannot be changed ; for the Lord says, 'It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than for one apex of the Law to fall.'

411. The law of charity . . . is this : 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, so do ye also to them ; for this is the Law and the Prophets.'

414<sup>2</sup>. That our Country is to be loved . . . more than self, is a law inscribed on human hearts . . .

423<sup>2</sup>. Such become like those of whom it is said . . . that they 'have the law written on their hearts.'

437. For it is a universal law in the Spiritual World ; and thence also in the natural world ; that in proportion as anyone does not will evil, he wills good . . .

444. The spiritual law is this one of the Lord : 'Whatsoever ye would . . .'

643<sup>2</sup>. There was (then) no other law of imputation . . .

5526. In the other life they do not care whether a man has lived according to the civil laws . . . but that he has lived according to Divine laws . . .

E. 130<sup>8</sup>. 'The law' = Divine truth itself.

204<sup>7</sup>. 'The Law,' in a confined, and in a wide sense . . .

237<sup>3</sup>. 'The Law' = the Word. 392<sup>11</sup>.

392<sup>13</sup>. 'Law,' 'precepts,' 'commandments,' 'statutes,' and 'judgments,' are frequently mentioned; and by . . . 'law' and 'precepts' are signified the things which teach doctrine . . . Ill.

406<sup>5</sup>. 'To hope in the law' (Is.xlii.4) = to give the Knowledges of truth.

—<sup>6</sup>. 'A law shall go forth from Me; and I will excite My judgment for a light of the peoples' (Is.li.4) = that from Him are Divine good and Divine truth itself, from which is illustration; 'a law' = the Divine good of the Word; and 'judgment,' the Divine truth of the Word.

444<sup>10</sup>. 'They shall teach Jacob judgments, and Israel thy law' (Deut.xxxiii.10) = that those who are in the affection of spiritual truth will do the Word, and teach the goods and truths of the Church . . . 'Judgments' = the truths of doctrine from the Word; 'law' = the good of truth.

—<sup>12</sup>. 'The law' (Mal.ii.7) = the goods of doctrine.

502<sup>3</sup>. By 'the Law' which was then promulgated (from Sinai) is signified Divine truth.

597<sup>9</sup>. By 'the Law and the Prophets' (Matt.xxii.40) is meant the Word in each and all things; consequently by those words is meant that each and all things of the Word hang upon the good of love to the Lord, and the good of charity towards the neighbour.

624<sup>17</sup>. By 'the law hath perished from the priest' (Ezek.vii.26) are meant the precepts of life.

653<sup>7</sup>. By 'the word of Jehovah,' is meant Divine good; and by 'the law of God' (Is.i.10), is meant Divine truth . . .

700<sup>6</sup>. The reason the Lord spoke to Moses from above the propitiatory (or mercy-seat), was that the Law was there; and by that Law, in a wide sense, is signified the Lord as to the Word; and the Lord speaks with man from the Word. 701.

701<sup>9</sup>. By 'the law of Truth' (Mal.ii.6) is signified Divine truth from Divine good.

— By 'to recede from the way, and to stumble in the law' (ver.8) is signified to live contrary to Divine truth.

—<sup>21</sup>. As by the Law which was promulgated from Mount Sinai, is signified, in a wide sense, the Word . . .

734<sup>2</sup>. 'Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the Word of Jehovah from Jerusalem' (Is.ii.3) . . . 'The law' = the doctrine of the good of love; and 'the Word' = the truth from that good.

774<sup>5</sup>. That man cannot possibly fulfil the law, is a reasoning from the natural man. The spiritual man knows that to do the law, and to fulfil it in the external form, does not save; but that in proportion as a man does the law in the external form from the internal form, it saves. The internal form, or the internal of the law, is to love what is good, sincere, and just; and its external is to do them. This the Lord teaches in . . . 'Cleanse first the internal of the cup and of the platter, that the external may become clean also.' In proportion as a man does the law from the internal, he fulfils it; but not in proportion as he does it from the external without the internal. The internal of man is his love and will; and to love what is good, sincere, and just, and from love to will them, is from the Lord alone; and therefore to be led by the Lord is to fulfil the law.

—<sup>6</sup>. That without the fulfilling of the law there is no salvation, involves that if a man could fulfil the law from himself, he would be saved; which, however, in itself, is false . . . It follows that the law is to be fulfilled by the Lord . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. That the Lord came into the world in order to fulfil the law; and that thus His justice and merit might be imputed to man; and that by this imputation man is loosed from the yoke of the law . . . is also a reasoning from the natural man . . .

826<sup>2</sup>. By 'the law' (Jer.xxxi.) are meant all things of the Word; thus all the truths and goods of Heaven: 'in the midst of them' = in their life: and that 'the law shall be written upon the heart' = love.

—<sup>9</sup>. Those become Angels of the Third Heaven who draw the laws of life from the Word, and live according to them; and who worship the Lord.

946. For the laws of government in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom are called 'judgments;' and the laws of government in the Lord's Celestial Kingdom are called 'justice;' for (the former laws) are laws from Divine truth; and (the latter laws) are laws from Divine good.

—<sup>4</sup>. By 'judgments' are signified civil laws; by 'precepts,' the laws of spiritual life; and by 'statutes,' the laws of worship. . . That the laws with the sons of Israel were called 'judgments,' 'precepts,' and 'statutes.' Ill.

948<sup>4</sup>. All laws, whether civil, moral, or natural, declare that we are not to steal, etc. . . But still a man is not saved if he shuns these evils from those laws alone, unless he also shuns them from spiritual law . . .

1135<sup>3</sup>. The laws of this order are called the laws of the Divine Providence; and the natural mind, unless it is illustrated, cannot know them . . .

1136<sup>2</sup>. The laws of order, which are called the laws of the Divine Providence, are as follow . . . (These laws treated of seriatim.)

1138<sup>2</sup>. From these things it is evident that the Lord cannot lead man to Heaven, except by means of these laws . . .

1173<sup>2</sup>. These laws are immutable, because they are of the Divine wisdom, and at the same time of the Divine love . . .

D. Wis. ii<sup>4</sup>. That these productions take place according to the laws of correspondence . . . Ex.

9231<sup>3</sup>. By 'the poor man' are signified those within the Church who are in but little good, from ignorance of truth; and who still long to be instructed. The reason he was called 'Lazarus,' was from the Lazarus who was exsuscitated by the Lord; and of whom it is said that the Lord loved him; and that he was His friend; and that he reclined with the Lord at the table. That he wanted to be filled with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, signified his longing to learn a few truths from those within the Church who were in abundance. 10227<sup>20</sup>. E.118<sup>4</sup>.

S. 40<sup>3</sup>. By 'Lazarus the poor man' are meant the gentiles, who have not the Word. That these were despised and rejected by the Jews, is meant by Lazarus being cast forth at the vestibule of the rich man full of sores. The reason why the gentiles are meant by 'Lazarus,' was that the gentiles were loved by the Lord; as Lazarus, who was resuscitated from the dead, was loved by the Lord; and was called His friend; and reclined at the table with the Lord (John xi.3,5,11,36; xii.2).

A. 24<sup>e</sup>. It is a heavenly arcanum, that man is led (by the Lord) both by the fallacies of the senses, and by cupidities . . .

50<sup>3</sup>. The Angels do indeed lead, but they only minister ; for it is the Lord alone who rules man through Angels and Spirits.

132. As man is such that he is not content to be led by the Lord ; but desires to be led by self and the world, or from proprium, it here treats of the proprium which was conceded to him.

205<sup>e</sup>. The love of self is attended with this,—that they do not want to be led by the Lord, but by self . . .

1386. So long as Spirits suppose that they lead themselves . . . they cannot have perception.

1884<sup>e</sup>. Then also he is led through ways of which he himself is ignorant, even to the designated place.

1937<sup>2</sup>. Therefore they are among the less useful ones ; for they suffer themselves to be led equally by the evil and the good ; and they suffer much from the evil.

2294. The Spirits . . . could not withhold themselves from leading (the infants) to think and to speak . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Such is the temptation of the infants . . . to accustom them . . . to not suffering themselves to be led by another, except by the Lord alone. H. 343.

2679<sup>e</sup>. For the least things . . . with man are foreseen by the Lord, and are provided for his future state to eternity ; and this for his good, in so far . . . as the man suffers himself to be led by the Lord.

2768. Good, into which God leads him who is in temptations . . . But it is the evil with man . . . which leads—inducit—into temptation.

2890. The evil Spirits with a man . . . infuse into him their cupidities and their persuasions, and thus lead him wherever they want. But the Angels . . . insinuate into him affections of good and truth, and thus lead him by freedom, not whither they want, but whither the Lord pleases. Hence it is evident . . . that it is slavery to be led by the devil, and that it is freedom to be led by the Lord.

2891<sup>e</sup>. The more exquisitely (the Angels) perceive that they are led by the Lord . . . the more they are in freedom.

3350. Although there were so many (Angels), they all thought and spoke as one . . . and this because no one wanted . . . to lead the choir : he who does this is of himself dissociated in a moment. But they suffered themselves to be led mutually by each other ; thus all in singular and in general by the Lord . . .

3573<sup>3</sup>. For he who suffers himself to be led by the Lord, never intends and thinks anything else (than what is good).

3913<sup>2</sup>. When man is being regenerated . . . he is led by the Lord through many states. Sig.

3963<sup>e</sup>. They who are in the affection of good from which is not truth . . . suffer themselves to be led into any evil and also falsity ; provided there is induced on the evil the likeness of good, and on the falsity the likeness of truth.

3986<sup>4</sup>. The good of love to God, and the good of charity towards the neighbour . . . suffer themselves to be led by the Lord . . . Otherwise those who are in the love of self and of the world ; these do not suffer themselves to be led and bent by the Lord, and to the Lord ; but resist severely ; for they want to lead themselves . . .

4088<sup>2</sup>. These are not such as do much from themselves and from proprium ; but they suffer themselves to be led by others ; thus to good by the Angels, and to evil by evil Spirits ; which also shines forth from the historicals here concerning Laban.

4136<sup>2</sup>. For it is foreseen by the Lord . . . how a man will suffer himself to be led by the Lord.

4151<sup>6</sup>. If they had believed . . . that all good and truth are from the Lord, they would have suffered themselves to be led by the Lord . . .

4122<sup>2</sup>. For the Angels see and perceive with a man who is being regenerated all the changes of his state . . . and according to them and by means of them they, from the Lord, lead to good, in proportion as the man suffers himself to be led.

4232<sup>e</sup>. So that he can, if he chooses, be led from Hell to Heaven, and through Heaven to the Lord.

4364<sup>2</sup>. The Lord leads everyone by his affections, and thus bends by a silent Providence ; for he leads by freedom . . . When, therefore, man has been led to good in freedom, then truths are accepted and implanted . . . He who has been regenerated . . . if he reflects upon his past life, will then discover that he has been led by many things of his thought, and by many things of his affection.

4366. Man is led by the Lord in spiritual life by almost the like things as those by which a man leads others in civil life. Examp.

4563<sup>2</sup>. Therefore infants are led by the Lord by means of infants and Angels from the Lord.

4680<sup>2</sup>. (Then) Spirits from Hell led those (of the Ancient Church).

4844<sup>4</sup>. For good is what teaches and leads ; and truth is what is taught and led.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'Widows'=those who . . . nevertheless long to be led through good. Ill.

— . It here treats of those who are being instructed in truths and led to good by the Lord.

— . 'An orphan'=those who . . . long to be led through truth to good ; and 'a widow'=those who . . . long to be led through good to truth.

—<sup>6</sup>. The Lord is called 'the Father' (of the orphans), because He leads them like a father ; and this through truth into good . . . The Lord is called 'the Judge' (of the widows), because He leads them ; and this through good into truth . . . For by 'a judge' is signified a leader.

[A.] 5145<sup>5</sup>. All those with whom the voluntary interiors have been terminated, are elevated to Heaven ; for the influent Divine can lead them . . .

5660<sup>2</sup>. They who are being regenerated . . . choose, from freedom, to be led by the Lord as to willing and thinking . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. For to be led by the Lord is freedom ; for he is led in good, from good, to good.

5662<sup>2</sup>. No one can be gifted with this peace, except him who is led by the Lord . . .

5893<sup>2</sup>. He is thus led, through degrees, to good.

—<sup>3</sup>. The truths of faith, introited through the affection of truth, are the plane into which the Angels operate ; and therefore those who have not this plane cannot be led by the Angels ; but suffer themselves to be led by Hell.

5954<sup>8</sup>. Suffers himself to be led by means of reasonings equally by evil and by good Spirits.

5982. In freedom man must be withdrawn—abduci—from evil, and be led to good.

6201. He is (then) said to be withdrawn—subduci—from sensuous things.

6325<sup>2</sup>. For the man who is led by the Lord is in freedom itself ; and thus in delight and bliss itself ; goods and truths are appropriated to him ; the affection and longing to do what is good is given him ; and then nothing is more happy to him than to perform uses ; the perception of good is given him ; and also the sensation of it ; and intelligence and wisdom are given him ; and all these things as his own ; for he is then a recipient of the Lord's life.

6390. Whereas the affection of the latter love inflows from the Lord, who does not command, but leads.

6392<sup>a</sup>. For they do not know that those who are led by the Lord want nothing more than to do good works ; and think nothing less than about merit through them . . .

6472<sup>2</sup>. The Lord does not compel man to receive what inflows from Himself ; but leads in freedom ; and, in proportion as man allows, through freedom leads to good : thus the Lord leads man according to his delights ; and also according to fallacies and the principles taken thence ; but He gradually leads him from these ; and this appears to the man as if from himself . . .

6484<sup>2</sup>. It was shown . . . that each thing of his life had been led by the Lord ; and that otherwise he would have precipitated himself into the most frightful Hell . . .

6717. 'He took a daughter of Levi' (Ex.ii.1)=conjunction with good. 'To take' . . . namely, to wife=conjunction.

6914<sup>3</sup>. There are evil Spirits with these (preachers) . . . who lead them.

7044<sup>2</sup>. When a man knows these truths, and wants to do according to them, he is then led by the Lord . . .

7055<sup>2</sup>. For those with whom immediate Divine influx has been conjoined with mediate, suffer themselves to be led by the Lord ; but those with whom these influxes have not been conjoined, lead themselves, and love this.

7272. Derives its origin. — .

7284<sup>2</sup>. Multiplied into each other. — .

8093. 'God did not lead them by the way of the Philistines' (Ex.xiii.17)=that it was provided by the Divine that they should not pass to the truth of faith which is not from good . . . For 'to lead,' when by God, =Providence.

8098. 'God led the people about—circumduxit—by the way of the wilderness' (ver.18)=that from the Divine auspices they were brought—perducti—to confirm the goods and truths of faith through temptations. 'God led'=Providence ; or, what is the same, the Divine auspices.

8107. 'To lead them in the way' (ver.21)=the Divine auspices. (For) 'to lead in the way,' when said of Jehovah, =Providence . . .

8216. 'He dragged his [chariot] in heaviness' (Ex. xiv.25)=resistance and impotence.

8307. 'In Thy mercy Thou hast led Thy people' (Ex. xv.13)=the Divine influx with those who had abstained from evils, and thus had received good. 'To lead in mercy'=to receive the Divine . . .

8309. 'In Thy virtue Thou hast conducted—deduxisti—to the habitation of Thy holiness' (id.)=that the Divine power of the Lord has elevated them to Heaven, into the Divine there. 'To lead in virtue'= . . . to elevate from Divine power.

8315<sup>2</sup>. That those who are in natural good and not in spiritual good cannot possibly be led by any influx from Heaven. Refs.

8495<sup>4</sup>. That with those who are led by the Lord all things inflow, even to the last of life, both intellectual and voluntary. Refs.

8505<sup>3</sup>. For he who acts from truth leads himself ; whereas he who acts from good is led by the Lord. Sig.

8510. For the order in which man is led by the Lord is through the willing of man, consequently through good . . .

8512<sup>a</sup>. By to live according to order, is here meant to be led by the Lord through good ; whereas by not yet living according to order, is to be led through truth ; and, when man is led through truth, the Lord does not appear ; and therefore the man then also walks in darkness, in which he does not see good. It is otherwise when man is led through good ; he then sees in light.

8513. When a man does what is good for the sake of himself . . . the interiors are closed, and he cannot be led through Heaven by the Lord ; but he is led by himself. The love determines by whom a man is led ; for everyone is led by his love : he who loves himself more than his neighbour leads himself ; but he who loves good is led by good, consequently by the Lord from whom is good.

8516. Everyone must be led to . . . charity through the truth of faith.

—<sup>3</sup>. When a man has been regenerated . . . he is led by the Lord through good ; and no longer through truth . . . All in Heaven are so led ; for this is according to Divine order . . . If they were to think and act from truth . . . they would be . . . led by themselves, and not by the Lord. Ex. 8539<sup>2</sup>.

8517. 'The Sabbath' = a state of peace . . . in which man is led by the Lord through good. If man were then to lead himself, even by truth, he would dissipate the state of peace . . .

8521<sup>2</sup>. Those who are in the affection of truth for the sake of the uses of life . . . are led by the Lord through good . . .

8559. The life of Heaven is to be led by the Lord through good . . .

9227<sup>2</sup>. In the same proportion the man is not led through truths, but through good ; consequently, in the same proportion he is led by the Lord.

9229. 'Men of holiness' = those who are led by the Lord . . .

9305. 'To bring—perducendum—thee to the place which I have prepared' (Ex.xxiii.20) = introduction into Heaven . . .

9336<sup>2</sup>. There are thousands and thousands of arcana . . . through which man is led by the Lord . . . into the life of Heaven.

10184<sup>4</sup>. In (the first) state, man is led through truth to good, thus partly by himself ; but in the latter one . . . he is led by good ; that is, by the Lord through good. Sig.

10188<sup>2</sup>. They who suffer themselves to be led by the Lord . . . are in the sphere of Divine good . . .

10210<sup>2</sup>. For if a man is not in the good of innocence, he is not led by the Lord ; but by himself : and he who is led by himself is led by Hell.

10360<sup>5</sup>. 'By the Sabbath' is signified a state of the conjunction of man with the Lord ; thus a state when man is led by the Lord, and not by himself ; which state is when he is in good. For to be led by the Lord, and not by self, is 'to turn away the foot from the Sabbath ; not to do our own wills ; not to do our own ways ; not to find our own desire ; and not to speak a word' (Jer.lviii.13, 14).

10362. 'Profaning it' = to be led by self and our own loves, and not by the Lord.

—<sup>3</sup>. It is to be known that to be led by self and to be led by the Lord are two opposite things ; for he who is led by self is led by his own loves ; thus by Hell . . . and he who is led by the Lord, is led by the loves of Heaven . . . He who is led by these loves, is withdrawn—subducitur—from his Own loves ; and he who is led by his Own loves, is withdrawn—subducitur—from the loves of Heaven . . .

10377. For all who acknowledge God under a human form . . . are led : the rest cannot be led . . .

10409. 'To make to ascend from the land of Egypt' . . . = to lead themselves. Ex.

10490<sup>7</sup>. 'To be a disciple of the Lord' = to be led by Him, and not by self ; thus by the goods and truths which are from the Lord ; and not by the evils and falsities which are from man.

H. 119°. When they were withdrawn-subducti-from the body . . .

278. They who are in innocence . . . want to be led by the Lord, and not by self.

280. As innocence is to be led by the Lord, and not by self, all in Heaven . . . love to be led by the Lord ; for they know that to lead one's self is to be led by proprium . . . and he who loves himself does not suffer himself to be led by another. 341. M. 414°.

— For in proportion as anyone is wise, he loves to be led by the Lord ; or, what is the same, in proportion as anyone is led by the Lord, he is wise.

351<sup>2</sup>. Man believes in the Divine when he wants to be led by the Divine.

359°. The reason the Lord's yoke is easy . . . is that in proportion as a man resists evils . . . he is led by the Lord, and not by self.

420°. And to be thus led by the Lord, from infancy to the last of life here, and afterwards to eternity, is the mercy which is meant.

479<sup>3</sup>. All Spirits can be led wherever you please, provided they are kept in their reigning love . . .

522°. Through Divine truths the Lord leads man to Heaven . . . In proportion, therefore, as a man abstains from evil, the Lord, from pure mercy, leads him through His Divine means ; and this from infancy to the end of his life in the world, and afterwards to eternity . . .

558. In proportion as anyone is in celestial love, which is to love uses and goods . . . he is led by the Lord ; because this love is that in which He is . . . But in proportion as anyone is in the love of self . . . he is led by self ; and in proportion as anyone is led by self, he is not led by the Lord . . . To be led by self is to be led by one's own proprium . . .

J. 12<sup>3</sup>. This is especially the case when a man is led by the Lord ; for he is then introduced into genuine truths . . . and into genuine goods . . . for the Lord then disposes all things of such a mind into the form of Heaven . . .

44. To be led by self they call slavery. Ex.

154. That . . . man is to be led and taught by the Lord from Heaven, through the Word, doctrine, and preachings from it ; and this in all appearance as of himself. Gen.art.

— It is from appearance that man is led and taught by himself ; and it is from Truth, that man is led and taught by the Lord alone. They who confirm . . . the appearance . . . cannot remove from themselves evils as sins . . . They are all interior idolaters ; for they are worshippers of self and the world . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But they who confirm . . . the Truth, become worshippers of the Lord ; for the Lord . . . gives them to perceive interiorly that they are not led and taught by themselves, but by the Lord.

155. That man is led and taught by the Lord alone. Gen.art.

156. That man is led and taught by the Lord alone, means that he lives from the Lord alone ; for the will of his life is led, and the understanding of his life is taught . . .

162. That man is led and taught by the Lord alone through the angelic Heaven and from it. Gen.art.

— That man is led through . . . Heaven, is from the appearance ; but that he is led from it, is from the Truth. Ex.

165. That man is led by the Lord through influx . . . Gen.art.

— For to be led, and also to inflow, are said of . . . the will.

— That every man is led of himself from his own love ; and according to it by others . . . is known. He is led by the understanding and according to it only when . . . the will makes it . . .

174. That in externals man is led and taught by the Lord to all appearance as by himself. Gen.art.

— No one knows how the Lord leads and teaches man in his internals . . .

176°. If man perceived and felt the Divine Providence, he would also be led by it ; for the Lord leads all through His Divine Providence ; and man does not lead himself, except apparently . . . and therefore if he were led with a living perception and sensation, he would not be conscious of life . . .

183. (Thus) man knows no otherwise than that he leads himself.

186°. By His Divine Providence the Lord leads man silently ; as a hidden stream . . . does a ship.

200°. That the affections of the life's love of man are led by the Lord through His Divine Providence, and at the same time the thoughts, from which is human prudence. Ex.

202°. It follows that unless the Lord leads man every moment . . . the man recedes from the way of reformation and perishes.

—<sup>e</sup>. It is according to the laws of the Divine Providence for it to appear to man as if he leads himself ; but the Lord foresees how he leads himself . . . 203.

208. They who acknowledge God and His Divine Providence . . . are averse to be led by themselves, and love to be led by the Lord. A sign that they are led by the Lord, is that they love the neighbour. But they who acknowledge nature and Own prudence . . . are averse to being led by the Lord, and love to be led by themselves . . .

210. It follows that unless man disposes as from his Own prudence all things which are of his function and life, he cannot be led and disposed from the Divine Providence . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore, if you want to be led by the Divine Providence, use prudence, as a servant . . . who faithfully dispenses the goods of his lord . . .

211<sup>2</sup>. See FREE at this ref. D.5797.

215<sup>18</sup>. For man does not know whether he is led by the devil, or by the Lord. He who is led by the devil does uses for the sake of himself and the world ; but he who is led by the Lord does uses for the sake of the Lord and Heaven . . . From this (alone) is the difference Known . . .

227<sup>2</sup>. This is the good through which every man, even an evil man, is led by the Lord.

249<sup>6</sup>. By these means the Lord leads the evil ; but only from doing those things ; and not from thinking and willing them. But by the former means the Lord leads the good ; not only from doing those things, but also from thinking and willing them.

253<sup>2</sup>. As these . . . look to God, and do no evil to the neighbour, they are led by the Lord ; and they who are led are also taught . . .

295. That the evil are continually leading themselves into-inducant-evils ; and that the Lord is continually leading them away-abducant-from evils. Gen.art.

296<sup>8</sup>. That an evil person, from himself, is continually leading himself more deeply into-inducat-his evils. Ex.

—<sup>7</sup>. That the Divine Providence with the evil is a continual permission of evil, to the end that there may be a continual withdrawal-abductio. Ex.

—<sup>10</sup>. That the withdrawal-abductio-is effected by the Lord in a thousand ways, even the most secret. Ex.

—<sup>12</sup>. With an evil man there is no other . . . withdrawal-abductio-than of the more grievous evils from the less grievous ; whereas with a good man there is not only the . . . withdrawal-abductio-of the more grievous evils, but also of the less grievous ones . . .

297. That the evil cannot be completely . . . led away-abduci-from evils, and led into goods, so long as they believe Own intelligence to be everything . . . Gen. art.

298<sup>5</sup>. That man is thereby led away-abducatur-from evil ; not by himself, but by the Lord. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. He who believes in the Divine Providence is led away-abducitur-from evil ; whereas he who does not believe in it, is not led away . . .

310<sup>5</sup>. Thus they lead others (by their cupidities) . . .

324<sup>6</sup>. Therefore He cannot lead man, except according to the laws of His Divine Providence.

326<sup>5</sup>. The effect of conjunction is that the Lord turns the man's face to Himself, and then leads him ; but the effect of separation-sejunctio-is, that Hell turns the man's face to itself, and leads him.

333. With the evil the Lord provides by leading away-abducendo-from evils ; but with the good He provides by leading to good . . .

the Lord sees, and still leads them ; and He leads them according to the laws of His Divine Providence . . .

R. 384. 'He shall lead-deduct-to living fountains of waters' (Rev.vii.17)=He will lead through the truths of the Word to conjunction with Himself.

D. 842. That man does not at all know that he is led by Spirits, and through Spirits.

— One Spirit is led by others ; and, successively, by others . . . and still the Spirit knows no otherwise than that he is leading himself . . . In like manner, also, a Spirit can be led by a man . . . 3117a.

892. That he who is led by the Lord perceives in each thing he does whether it is of permission, of leave, or of good pleasure . . . Ex.

1589. That he who is led by the Lord is blameless. Ex.

1628<sup>2</sup>. Spirits who are not led by the Lord, but who want to lead themselves (could not do right, however they acted).

1936. That some are more easily led by the Lord. 2223.

1937<sup>2</sup>. It is as easy for the Lord to lead one as another ; but as it pleases the Lord to lead according to order, it is more easy to lead him who is in order than him who is not in order ; for he has first to be brought back-deducendus-into the way, or into order, which causes delay, to prevent his being broken.

2591. That from the creation of the first man the Lord has led the human race. Ex.

2628. That there are mere necessities through which man is led.

2850. That man is marvellously led . . .

2918. How man is led to good ends also, even by the evil. Ex.

2965<sup>6</sup>. For they are thus led through series of their cupidities . . .

2994. For man to be led by the Lord, there must not be the least pertinacity in him. So much pertinacity, so much is there of the proprium of man ; which is taken away by the Lord in those who are led by the Lord . . .

3002. One who supposed that by a mental look directed into others, he could lead them . . . wherever he wanted ; which is so common in the other life . . .

3114. That man can never be led any better.

— Spirits suppose that they could have been led otherwise ; and thus could become better than they are . . . But I perceived in a spiritual idea that they never can be led better ; so that there are necessities every moment of their lives . . . 3115.

—<sup>e</sup>. For man also can thus almost similarly lead man in some particulars, when he knows his evil nature, or cupidity.

3495. How one Spirit leads another both to think and to speak. (See FREE, here.)

4001. It is not conceded to any Spirit to teach man, nor consequently to lead him, except from cupidity ; but the Lord alone wills to teach and lead man ; which would not be possible if a Spirit had anything of the corporeal memory.

[D.] 4144. Spirits are indignant and complain, when they perceive that another is leading them . . . They care nothing when they are not noticing it ; they then suppose that they are leading themselves . . .

4321. A Spirit who said that he had led Paul.

5778<sup>2</sup>. Hence it was evident that in proportion as the external man acts as one with the internal, the man can be led by the Lord . . .

5786. When they were turned to lower things, they wanted to lead all whom they saw . . . For in the other life the thoughts are communicated ; and the one leads the other marvellously by means of the thoughts . . .

5796. The Lord leads his will . . . so that he is affected with good ; and leads his understanding, so that he is affected with truth . . . and in proportion as he learns truth . . . he is led by the Lord through it ; for he who does not know what is good and true cannot be led by the Lord : a man is led through that which he knows : the Lord inflows into the things which he knows, and thus leads his affections and thoughts . . . (that is to say) the Lord leads him by means of those things which he learns from affection.

6080. Thus the Lord leads men of the world by their Own affections.

D. Min. 4652<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) man is led by the Lord to foreseen ends by continual necessities ; and still [he is led] by his freedom.

E. 195<sup>2</sup>. (Such) are led by means of Heaven by the Lord.

242<sup>e</sup>. In proportion to the charity there is in the faith, he is led by the Lord ; but in proportion as there is no charity in it, he is led by himself ; and he who is led by himself, and not by the Lord, cannot think what is good ; still less can he will and do good which in itself is good . . .

386<sup>27</sup>. 'To lead' (Is. xlix. 10), when said of the Lord, = to illustrate.

555<sup>18</sup>. 'Thy leaders' (Is. iii. 12) = those who teach.

689<sup>2</sup>. From this it may be evident, that it is of the Divine omnipotence to lead man according to order ; and this every moment, from the beginning of his life, even to eternity ; and this according to the laws of order . . . that is to say, in so far as the man suffers himself to be led ; that is, in so far as he does not want to be led by himself ; for he who wants this, is in the same proportion carried against order. And as it is of the Divine omnipotence to lead according to order the man who wants to be led—and consequently not anyone contrary to order—therefore it is not of the Divine omnipotence to lead anyone to Heaven who wants to lead himself . . . Hence it may be evident, that it is not of the Divine omnipotence to save those who do not want to be led according to order ; for to be led according to order is to be led according to the laws of order . . . and therefore to lead according to these laws every moment and continually to eternity the man who wants to be led, is of the Divine omnipotence . . .

730<sup>31</sup>. These things were represented by the . . . leading about-circumductio-of the sons of Israel in the wilderness.

803<sup>2</sup>. VI. In proportion as a man is in these good affections, he is led by the Lord, and not by himself.

825<sup>3</sup>. In proportion as a man lives religion, he is led by the Lord ; and in proportion as he is led by the Lord, his works are good . . .

864<sup>5</sup>. 'To deny one's self' = not to be led by self, but by the Lord . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. From these things it may be evident, that 'to follow the Lord' = to be led by Him, and not by self ; and no one else can be led by the Lord than he who is not led by self ; and everyone is led by self who does not shun evils because they are contrary to the Word. Ex. . . Whereas, when evils have been removed . . . then the Lord enters . . . and leads him . . . 865<sup>e</sup>.

979<sup>e</sup>. Only abstain from evils as sins, and look to the Lord ; and the Lord will teach and lead.

1032<sup>2</sup>. By the love of dominating, a man completely averts himself from the Lord . . . and thus can no longer be led by the Lord ; but is led by his own proprium ; and to be led by one's own proprium, is to be led by Hell. Man is led from Heaven, or else he is led from Hell ; he cannot be led by both together. He is led from Heaven when he is led by the Lord ; and he is led from Hell when he is led by himself . . .

1072<sup>2</sup>. That the Word is Divine holiness from inmosts to outermosts, is not evident to the man who leads himself, but to the man whom the Lord leads ; for the man who leads himself sees only the external of the Word . . . whereas the man whom the Lord leads judges concerning the external of the Word from the Holy which is therein.

1145<sup>10</sup>. An Angel man is led by the Lord both from within and from without ; but a devil man is led by himself from within, and by the Lord from without. An angel man is led by the Lord according to order ; from within, from order ; from without, to order : but a devil man is led by the Lord to order from without ; but by himself contrary to order from within. An Angel man is continually led—abducitur—from evil by the Lord, and is led to good ; but a devil man is also continually led from evil by the Lord ; but from a more grievous to a less one ; for he cannot be led to good . . . As an Angel man is led by the Lord, he is led by the civil law, by the moral law, and by the spiritual law, for the sake of the Divine in them. A devil man is led by the same laws ; but for the sake of what is his own in them.

1153<sup>3</sup>. The ways through which the Lord leads man are much more involved and inextricable ; both those through which the Lord leads a man by the Societies of Hell, and from them ; and also those through which He leads a man by the Societies of Heaven, and more interiorly into them.

1155<sup>4</sup>. Through man's internal freedom, the Lord enters to man even into Hell, where he is ; and through it leads him there ; and, if he is willing to follow, leads him out-educit—thence, and introduces him into Heaven . . .

1174<sup>2</sup>. How the Lord inflows ; and how man is thus led . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Thus and no otherwise can man be led by affection into affection . . . from the affection of truth and good, by leading, if he acknowledges the Divine Providence in each thing; and from the affection of evil and falsity, by permitting, if he does not acknowledge it.

1175<sup>4</sup>. Similar would it be if the Lord were to lead man by thoughts, immediately; and not by affections. Moreover, when a man is led by the Lord by affections, it appears to him as if he thinks from himself freely . . .

1179<sup>2</sup>. The good of love is that by which God leads man; and the truth of faith is that through which man is led. Ex.

J. (Post.) 170. (Those who are in faith alone) are such that they do not want to be led; but to lead: this is their delight; and therefore they cannot be led by the Lord; for the Lord leads through the affection of use . . .

241<sup>e</sup>. Nay (the diabolical Spirits) lead (their thought).

4733. On Spirits who induce diseases.

J. (Post.) 45. The Arians induce a pain on the right arm near the shoulder-blade. The Socinians induce a pain on the breast-bone.

Lead. (The metal.) Plumbum.

A. 2967<sup>3</sup>. Mentioned. E. 411<sup>23</sup>.

8298. 'They sought the deep like lead' (Ex. xv. 10) = that evils dragged them down to lower things . . . It is said 'like lead,' because by 'lead' is signified evil.

—<sup>2</sup>. As lead is more ignoble than the rest of the metals, it = the evil which is lowest, such as is the evil of the exterior Natural. But in a good sense, it = the good of the same degree; as in Jeremiah vi. 29; Ezek. xxii. 18.

E. 540<sup>8</sup>. The things of the sense of the letter . . . are signified by 'brass, tin, iron, and lead' (Ezek. xxii. 18), because by these things are signified the goods and truths of the natural man . . .

Leader. See under CHIEF-primoris, and under LEAD-ducere.

Leader. Antesignanus.

A. 1879<sup>2</sup>. The leaders (of the evil Spirits) . . .

10330<sup>6</sup>. So many heresies exist in the world, because the leaders and chiefs-duces-have looked to themselves, and have had their own glory as the end; and those things which are of the Lord and Heaven as means to the end.

H. 74<sup>2</sup>. From these leaders and chiefs-ducibus-falsity of thought concerning the Angels has been derived to others . . .

P. 257<sup>3</sup>. It was necessary that the Lord should be preached from the Word, and that thereby the Christian Church should be instaurated; but this could only be done through leaders who would do it from zeal . . .

328<sup>7</sup>. When, in the Church, (evil) has invaded the overseers, governors, and leaders, religion becomes perverted . . .

R. 581<sup>e</sup>. That this doctrine has been confirmed so ingeniously . . . by the leaders, and by those who teach after them, that it cannot be assailed. Sig.

833. That all who are interiorly evil, who have professed faith alone, with the leaders and their adherents, will assault the Divine truths of the Lord. . .

B. 21. The leaders of the Reformers, Luther, etc. 22. 23<sup>2</sup>. 24. 25. Scia. 3.

T. 759. Such is every Church which is in falsities, when it has once been founded by leaders who seem to themselves like lynxes . . .

796. I have often spoken with these three leaders, (Luther, Melancthon, and Calvin).

D. 4495. An interior magician . . . to whom they adhered as their leader.

E. 163. They (merely) think that the leaders are to be believed . . .

236<sup>2</sup>. They had been solely in the natural affection of knowing what the leaders said . . .

Leader. Dux.

Dukedom. Ducatus.

A. 2135<sup>4</sup>. 'Thou Bethlehem . . . art not the least among the leaders of Judah, for out of thee shall go forth a leader' (Matt. ii. 6; Micah v. 1). . . As they expect a leader and king who shall bring them back into Canaan . . . they explain . . . 'the leader' to be their Messiah; when yet by . . . 'the leader' is meant the Lord.

2407<sup>e</sup>. In proportion as truth becomes the leader, good is obscured; but in proportion as good becomes the leader, truth is evident in its light.

2733. A General of an army who had been an adulterer. H. 385. M. 481. (It was Prince Eugene. D. 4405.)

3448. 'And Phicol the commander of his army' (Gen. xxvi. 26) = the primary things of the doctrine of their faith. . . For 'a commander,' like 'a prince,' = primary things.

4647. 'These are the dukes (or chiefs) of the sons of Esau' (the dukes enum. Gen. xxxvi. 15-19) = the chief truths of good . . . 4648. 4649.

6148<sup>8</sup>. They who reigned over the people were called leaders; and afterwards judges.

7041. Moses here represents . . . that nation . . . whose leader he was to be (8928<sup>4</sup>) . . . for everywhere in the Word a leader, or a judge, and also a king, represents the nation and people whose leader, judge, or king he is; because he is its head.

8150. 'Tertian leaders were over them all' (Ex. xiv. 7) = reduced into order under generals. 'Tertian leaders' = the generals under which are particulars . . . because 'three' = what is complete . . . and 'leaders' = chief things; and these things, taken together, are generals . . .

8276. 'The choice of the tertian leaders' (Ex. xv. 4) = all things with single things; (for) 'tertian leaders' = generals under which are particulars in series; thus each and all things.

8314. 'The dukes of Edom were dismayed' = (ver. 15) = the like with those who were in the life of evil from the love of self. 'Dukes' = chiefs-præcipui; thus each and all.

— As to 'dukes,' by them are signified chiefs; and, in the sense abstracted from person, chief things; thus each and all things; for when 'dukes' (or 'leaders') are mentioned, there are signified generals under which are all the other things; or chief things; as 'the tertian leaders;' and they are predicated of good; and, in the opposite sense, of evil. But 'princes' are predicated of truth.

—<sup>2</sup>. In the Word there are words which belong to the class of spiritual things; and to the class of celestial things . . . Such is the cases with the signification of 'princes,' and of 'leaders.' 'Princes' = primary things; and are predicated of the truths of faith: whereas 'leaders' = chief things; and are predicated of the good of love. In the opposite sense, 'princes' are predicated of falsities of faith; and 'leaders,' of evils of love.

—<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is, that those who reigned in Edom were called 'leaders' (ill.) because by 'Edom' was signified the good of celestial love . . . Whereas with the sons of Ishmael those who were set over the rest were not called leaders, but 'princes;' because by 'Ishmael' were signified those in truth. From this cause also those were called 'princes' who were set over the rest in Israel, (ill.) . . . whereas . . . in Judah they were called 'leaders' . . . ill.

P. 251<sup>5</sup>. Ascribes the victory to the prudence of the General . . .

418. Who loves a king, prince, chief, magistrate, consul . . . except from the judgment from which they act and speak . . . Who loves the General-in-chief of an army, or any commander-præfectum-under him, except from his bravery and prudence?

446<sup>e</sup>. The clown who jokes at the table of a duke.

680<sup>2</sup>. If each (part of an army) were not commanded by lesser leaders . . .

813. (In Germany) there are greater and lesser dukedoms; and each is like a monarch in his own . . . 814.

End of T. A theorem proposed by a certain Electoral Duke in Germany, who also possessed the highest ecclesiastical dignity.

E. 537<sup>8</sup>. Because they taught falsities, and the falsities were also believed by the people, they are called 'blind leaders of the blind' (Matt.xv.14).

576<sup>6</sup>. 'Governors and leaders' (Ezek.xxiii.6)=principal truths.

600<sup>15</sup>. 'The chieftains of Judah' (Zech.xii.6)=the goods with the truths of that Church.

654<sup>69</sup>. 'All of whom have the look of leaders . . .' (Ezek.xxiii.15)=the appearance as of chief Truths, which were to be set over the rest.

C. 164. Charity with the General of an army.

— By the General of an army is meant its highest, whether he is a king, an archduke, or a General constituted by them, who holds the chief command. He, if he looks to the Lord, and shuns evils as sins; and if he acts sincerely, justly, and faithfully in the things of his generalship—ducatus—and government, he does the goods of use which are goods of charity; and as he is perpetually meditating upon them, studying them, and exercising them, he becomes a charity. He, if he is a king, or an archduke, does not love war, but peace; and in war he continually loves it. He does not go to war except for the protection of his country; and thus is not an aggressor, but a defender. But afterwards, when war has begun, he is also an aggressor when aggression is defence. In battles, if he has not been born otherwise, he is brave and strenuous; after battle he is mild and merciful. In battles he would fain be a lion; but after battle, a sheep. Within himself he does not exult from the overthrow of the enemy and from the honour of the victory; but from the deliverance of his country and his own there from the invasion of the enemy . . . He acts prudently; consults faithfully for his army, as the father of a family does for his children and servants; loves them—everyone as he does his work sincerely and strenuously . . . Cunning, with him, is not cunning, but prudence.

Leading man. Antistes.

A. 413<sup>6</sup>. There was a certain Church dignitary who had believed himself to be more learned than others . . .

4730<sup>2</sup>. Because the leading men of the Church can gain nothing by faith alone; but by the preaching of works.

5532<sup>3</sup>. That very many of the prelates of the Church are such (spies), is manifestly evident from them in the other life . . .

6047<sup>2</sup>. The leading men (of the Papists, Quakers, Jews, and Mohammedans) have so said; and their followers confirm (their doctrinals).

7332<sup>9</sup>. They are like evil leading men of the Church; who, if the truths of doctrine do not serve them as means of acquiring gain, deride them.

8581<sup>4</sup>. How readily the leading men of the Church seize upon [the idea] that such Power has been given to Peter . . .

9192<sup>2</sup>. In Hell have been seen . . . both Church dignitaries, and others . . .

9263. It is believed by the leading men of the Church that he is just and justified who knows the truths of faith . . . and is thence in confidence . . .

H. 353<sup>3</sup>. The leading men of the Church who deny the Divine . . .

J. 38<sup>9</sup>. He does not Know that it is true from any other source than because it has so been said by a leading man of the Church . . .

R. 426<sup>2</sup>. For scarcely anyone, except a leading man of the Church who teaches and preaches, comprehends these (arcana of justification and salvation by faith alone).

M. 126. It is from this appearance that the leading men of the Church have given the palm to faith . . .

T. 7. The key to open (their theology) is with the leading men of the Church alone.

135<sup>2</sup>. We cannot think otherwise, because the leading man of our Church . . . ascribes . . .

D. 5230. Monks, abbots, priests, prelates. (See also under LAST JUDGMENT.)

E. 114<sup>5</sup>. Therefore evil prelates equally with good ones; or prelates who have no faith, equally with those who have faith, can preach the Gospel, in appearance, with a like zeal and affection.

250<sup>3</sup>. This the doctors and leading men of the Church preach, when they preach from the Word . . .

443<sup>2</sup>. All in the First Heaven are in the obedience of doing the truths and goods commanded by . . . the master or leading man from whom they have heard that this or that is true . . .

538<sup>10</sup>. 'Pilots'=the leading men who lead and teach.

714<sup>9</sup>. This doctrine and this life are with those who form the head of the dragon, who for the most part are leading men of the Church . . .

802<sup>3</sup>. Lest the leading men of the Church who are initiated into this dogma, when they are initiated into the priesthood; and, from them, the people of the Church, should be infected by such poison . . .

810<sup>3</sup>. As the leading men of the Church speak, when they speak from the Word.

863<sup>8</sup>. By 'governors and rulers' (Jer.li.23) are signified principles of falsity and of evil.

1019<sup>9</sup>. In like manner the leading man of the Church who falsifies the truth of the Word, and perverts its good.

1063<sup>3</sup>. Those of this kind who had been leading men of the Church sometimes appear to shine at the mouth . . .

1130<sup>2</sup>. Their leading men and presbyters, who are called monks, desisted from reading (the Word); saying that the dicta of the Pope are equally holy . . .

1134<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that a man says to himself, or a leading man of the Church says to him . . .

D. Love. xviii<sup>3</sup>. Sacerdotes antistites ministri . . .

Coro. 17. For anything to be perfect, there must be a trine in just order . . . In like manner in the Church—a priminfulate, overseers of the parish, and flamens under them.

Leaf. Folium.

Leafy. Foliosus.

A. 57<sup>e</sup>. 'Leaf' (Ezek. xlvii. 12) = the intelligence which they have for the sake of use; which is called 'medicine.' (=The truths from good which serve for the instruction and regeneration of the human race. 885.) (=the truth of faith. 6502<sup>5</sup>).

216. 'They sewed fig-leaves together . . . ' (Gen. iii. 7) . . . 'To sew a leaf together' = to excuse.

884. 'Behold an olive-leaf plucked off in her mouth' (Gen. viii. 11) = some little of the truth of faith; 'a leaf' = truth.

885. That 'a leaf' = truth, is evident from the Word passim. Where man is compared to 'a tree,' there 'the fruits' = the good of charity; and 'the leaf,' the truth thence; and they are also circumstanced in like manner. III.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'A green leaf' (Jer. xvii. 8) = the truth of faith; thus it = the faith itself which is from charity.

— . What is doctrinal of faith, or the truth, which was preserved with the Jewish Church, is the 'leaf' (on the barren fig-tree). A vastated Church . . . knows truth, but does not want to understand it; and those are like it who say that they know truth . . . and have nothing of the good of charity. They are only the leaves of a fig-tree; and wither away.

3427<sup>3</sup>. If love to the Lord is compared to 'the tree of life,' charity and its works are the fruits thence; and faith and all things of faith are only the leaves . . . and they deduce the fruits . . . from the leaves.

4231. 'When . . . its leaves bud forth, ye know that summer is nigh' (Matt. xxiv. 32). . . 'The leaves' = truths.

5115. See GERMINATE, here.

—<sup>2</sup>. Such things as are of intelligence, are signified in the Word by 'leaves.'

5116. The virescence (of a tree) from its leaves represents the first state of man's rebirth . . . Hence it is that 'leaves' = those things which are of intelligence, or the truths of faith; for these are the first things of the rebirth or regeneration.

7966<sup>e</sup>. In the Spiritual World this is presented representatively as a tree with leaves and fruits; the leaves there, are truths.

8326. In the Word, man is compared to 'a tree' . . . the truths of faith with him are compared to 'leaves' . . .

9031<sup>4</sup>. 'The leaf which is for medicine' = the truths of faith which are for the recreation and restoration of the spiritual life.

9327<sup>e</sup>. 'The sound of a driven leaf shall pursue them' (Lev. xxvi. 36) . . . the reason it is so said is that 'a leaf' = truth.

9337. The leaves are indeed born first; but for the sake of the fruit as the end . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. From these things it is evident . . . that faith without fruit; that is, without the good of life; is only a leaf; and thus that a man . . . luxuriant in leaves, without fruit, is the fig-tree which 'wither away,' and which is 'cut down.'

9553<sup>3</sup>. 'Leaf' (Dan. iv. 12, 14) = scientific truth in general.

9960<sup>80</sup>. By 'the leaves of the fig-tree of which they made themselves girdles' . . . are meant the truths and goods of the external man. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. That 'leaf' = natural truth, which is scientific. Ref.

10185<sup>2</sup>. That all things in nature relate to the human form, is evident from each thing in the vegetable kingdom. All things therein are clothed with leaves . . . For the leaves therein relate to the lungs; and are as it were in place of respiration; for by their means the sap is drawn up; and therefore a tree despoiled of its leaves does not bear fruit. Hence also it is that 'leaves,' in the Word, = the truths which are of faith; for in like manner by them is conveyed the Vital whereby good is formed.

H. 185. Paradises (in Heaven) where . . . in some places the leaves are as of silver; and the fruits as of gold . . . M. 13.

S. 66<sup>2</sup>. A tree . . . draws out of the ground . . . a grosser sap for the trunk, branches, and leaves . . .

Life 46<sup>2</sup>. (The faith of an evil man) is like a tree luxuriant in leaves, and not giving fruits . . . 'A tree,' also, = man; its 'leaves' and 'flowers,' the truths of faith . . .

P. 107. The life's love is that tree; the branches with the leaves are the affections of good and truth with their perceptions . . .

313<sup>e</sup>. By 'the leaves of a fig-tree' with which they covered their nakednesses, are signified the moral truths by which are veiled the things of their love and conceit.

332<sup>3</sup>. There is a correspondence of man's life with the vegetation of a tree . . . The natural truths with which every man is first imbued are like the leaves with which the branches are covered: 'leaves,' in the Word, = nothing else.

R. 936. 'The leaves of the tree for the medicine of the nations' (Rev. xxii. 2) = rational truths thence by means of which those who are in evils and the derivative falsities are brought to think soundly, and to live becomingly.

— . The reason why by 'leaves' are signified rational truths, is that by 'a tree' is signified man; . . . and by the leaves are signified his rational truths.

—<sup>2</sup>. That by 'leaves' are signified rational truths, is clearly evident from the things seen in the Spiritual World . . . With those who are in the goods of love and at the same time in the truths of wisdom, there appear fruitbearing trees luxuriant with beautiful leaves; whereas with those who are in the truths of some wisdom, and who speak from reason, but are not in the goods of love, there appear trees full of leaves, but devoid of fruits; and with those with whom there are neither the goods nor the truths of wisdom, there appear no trees, except such as are denuded of leaves in winter-time. A man who is not rational is nothing else than such a tree. Rational truths are those which proximately receive spiritual truths . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. By 'leaves' are signified rational truths also in . . . (III.); but they signify according to the species of the trees. The leaves of the olive and of the vine = rational truths from celestial and spiritual light; the leaves of the fig-tree = rational truths from natural light; and the leaves of the fir, poplar, oak, pine, = rational truths from sensuous light. The leaves of these cause terror in the Spiritual World, when they are agitated by a strong wind. These are what are meant in Lev. xxvi. 36; Job xiii. 25. But the leaves of the former not so much.

M. 76<sup>o</sup>. The (vine) leaves became silver; and we carried them away as a sign that we had spoken with the people of the Silver Age.

T. 585<sup>2</sup>. The leaves which (a plant) puts forth immediately after birth, are for lungs; for as the heart without the lungs does not produce motion and sensation, and by these vivify the man, so without leaves the root does not cause a tree or shrub to vegetate.

638. By 'the leaves of a fig-tree' (Gen. iii. 7) are meant the truths of the natural man which had been successively falsified.

D. 710a. In every leaf there is a more interior heavenly gladness . . .

1960. What was the leaf of the fig-tree with which Adam girded himself. . . It signified the natural Knowledge, or rational or intellectual faith, under which were the nakednesses or filthy loves, which were covered with such a leaf.

2931. Their Spiritual was represented as a leafy cloud.

3484<sup>e</sup>. When I was writing on the leaf (of paper) . . .

6060. See GARDEN, here.

E. 109<sup>2</sup>. The foliage—frondes—and leaves (of trees) = those things which are of the Knowledge of truth and good.

403<sup>7</sup>. The fig, as a tree, = the natural man; the fig, as a fruit, = the good of the natural man; and its leaf = the truth of that good.

—<sup>21</sup>. That with that nation there was not any natural good, but only truth falsified, which in itself is falsity, is signified by the Lord's coming to the fig-tree, but finding nothing thereon except leaves . . . 'The leaf' = truth falsified, which in itself is falsity; for 'a leaf', in the Word, = truth; but the leaf of a tree which is devoid of fruit = falsity; and, with that nation, truth falsified, because they had the Word . . . but had falsified the truths in it.

481<sup>2</sup>. 'A leaf' (Jer. xvii.) = what is scientific.

504<sup>26</sup>. 'Leaves' (Is. i. 30) = the scientifics and Knowledge of truth in the natural man.

638<sup>15</sup>. (The dove returning to Noah with an olive leaf = the second state of regeneration) which is when spiritual good begins to come forth by means of truths

. . . For by 'a leaf' is signified truth; and by 'an olive,' the good thence born.

650<sup>30</sup>. 'His leaf beautiful, and his flower much' (Dan. iv. 12) = the Knowledge and affections of truth and good, and the derivative intelligence.

739<sup>11</sup>. That they then clothed themselves with natural truths, lest they should appear to be deprived of celestial truths, is signified by their sewing fig leaves together, and making themselves girdles; 'the fig-tree' = the natural man; and its 'leaf' = scientific truth.

1203<sup>2</sup>. In many things, plants relate to such things as are of the animal kingdom . . . They produce . . . leaves as lungs . . .

Leah. Lea, Leah.

A. 409. This was represented also by Leah and Rachel, the two wives of Jacob, of whom Leah represented the External Church, and Rachel the Internal . . . 1242<sup>2</sup>.

422. The External (Jewish Church) was represented by Leah. But as Jacob, or his descendants . . . were such that they wanted nothing but external things . . . Leah was given to Jacob before Rachel; and by Leah the weak eyed was represented the Jewish Church; and by Rachel the New Church of the gentiles.

3758. How the good of truth was conjoined with related good . . . first by the affection of external truth, which is 'Leah' . . . Tr.

3793. The representation of Leah, that it is the affection of exterior truth. Ex. —<sup>2</sup>.

3819. 'The name of the elder was Leah' (Gen. xxix. 16) = the affection of external truth, with its quality.

— Leah is called 'the elder,' because external truth is said first . . . or, what is the same, man is first affected with external truths . . . for external truths are the planes of internal ones; for they are the generals into which the singulars are insinuated . . .

3820. 'The eyes of Leah were weak' (ver. 17) = the affection of external truth as to its affection, that it is such. Ex.

3834. 'And he took Leah his daughter, and brought her to him, and he came to her' (ver. 23) = that the conjunction was as yet only with the affection of external truth. 3838.

3843. Leah, who is here 'the first-born,' = the affection of external truth.

[A.] 3851. 'He also loved Rachel above Leah' (ver.30) = the love of internal truth above external truth. . . 'Leah' = external truth.

3855. 'That Leah was hated' (ver.31) = that the affection of external truth was not so dear, because it was further from the Divine. Ex.

3860. 'Leah conceived, and bare a son' (ver.32) = spiritual conception and birth from what is external to what is internal. Ex.

—e. For by Leah is represented the affection of external truth.

3902. In the preceding chapter, by the four sons of Jacob from Leah, it treated of the state of the Church, or of the man who is becoming a Church, as to the ascent from the truth which is of faith to the good which is of love. In this chapter, by the sons of Jacob from the handmaids of Rachel and Leah, and from Leah, and finally from Rachel, it treats of the conjunction of natural truth by media with spiritual good; and this in the order in which it takes place with the man who is being regenerated.

3906. 'Leah' = external truth. Refs. 3913.

3913<sup>2</sup>. The mediums on the side of the external man, are signified by the handmaids of Leah.

3927<sup>e</sup>. For by 'Leah,' who here is 'my sister,' is signified the affection of the external man.

3930. 'Leah saw that she stood still from bearing' (Gen.xxx.9) = that no other external truths were acknowledged. 'Leah' = external truth.

3943. 'He brought them to Leah his mother' (Gen.xxx.14) = application to the affection of external truth.

3974. 'His woman Leah' = the affection of external truth.

4073. 'Leah' (Gen.xxxi.4) = the affection of external truth. 4096. 4099. 4153.

4342. 'He divided the children over to Leah' (Gen.xxxiii.1) = the disposition of external truths under their own affection. 'Leah' = the affection of exterior truth. 4345.

4345<sup>e</sup>. Then (are insinuated) the less general things, that is, the particular ones relatively, which here are Leah and her children . . .

4428. 'The daughter of Leah, whom she bare to Jacob' (Ex.xxxiv.1) = (the affection of all things of faith, and the Church thence) in externals; (for) 'Leah' = the affection of external truth.

4604. 'The sons of Leah' (Gen.xxxv.23) = external Divine goods and truths in their order. 'Leah' = the affection of external truth.

4696<sup>2</sup>. 'The moon,' here, = natural truth, because it is predicated of Leah. . . For by 'Leah' is represented natural truth.

5469. 'Leah' = the affection of exterior truth. Refs.

6024<sup>3</sup>. 'These are the sons of Leah, which she bare to Jacob in Paddan-Aram' (Gen.xlvi.15) = that those (doctrinals) were from spiritual affection in the Natural, through the Knowledges of good and truth.

D. 3384. It has been shown me by experience how Leah represented the Jewish Church; and Rachel the new one . . .

—e. Hence it was given to know why Leah is described as 'weak-eyed.'

E. 434<sup>8</sup>. 'Jacob' represents the Church as to truth; 'Leah' and 'Rachel,' the Church as to good; but 'Leah,' the External Church; and 'Rachel,' the Internal Church . . . and therefore the 'dudaim' were given to Leah . . . but Leah gave them to Rachel. Ex.

1074<sup>e</sup>. 'A fountain of water springing into eternal life' (John iv.14).

Learn. Discere, Addiscere.

See under SEIZE, and DRAW-haurire.

A. 1050<sup>2</sup>. These are states which man does not learn . . .

1071. What good and truth were (the man of the Spiritual Church) had to learn . . .

1464. The Lord had the power of learning above every other man . . .

1472. With children, when they first begin to learn, the deeper the things are, the more they desire them . . .

1964<sup>2</sup>. They who learn Knowledges in order that they may be perfected in the faith of love . . . are in the use of all uses, and receive spiritual and celestial life from the Lord . . .

1973<sup>e</sup>. For Spirits have not the sense of taste, but in place of it the desire . . . of knowing and learning; this is as it were their food . . .

2049<sup>3</sup>. Unless Knowledges were learned for the sake of life, they would be of no use . . .

2557<sup>3</sup>. For if spiritual truth inflowed from within, as good does . . . man would have no need to learn anything.

2675. With those who are becoming spiritual, good and truth are implanted by the Lord in the affection of knowledges, so that they want to know and learn what good and truth are, to the end and use that they may become rational, and also spiritual . . .

2704<sup>2</sup>. They are then in the affection of knowing and learning truths; and, when they are in this affection, they are easily and as it were spontaneously imbued with truths.

2878. There are innumerable causes from which and for the sake of which man loves to learn truth and to will good . . .

3175. Man learns (these natural and spiritual truths). If he did not learn them, he would be much worse than a brute animal . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. From these things it is evident that man is born into no truth, but that he learns everything, and this by an external way . . .

3241<sup>3</sup>. They who are of the Spiritual Church, as they have no perception . . . of what is good and true, but acknowledge as truths the things which they have learned . . .

3332<sup>2</sup>. The spiritual man when being regenerated . . . first learns the doctrinal things of truth . . .

3603<sup>3</sup>. Hence he is in the affection of truth from a certain worldly love, which also is the means for his learning more . . .

3701<sup>2</sup>. (Necessity of man's learning what evil and falsity, and good and truth are.) 3762<sup>2</sup>.

3863. When man is being regenerated . . . he first learns and imbues the things which are of faith . . . for he is introduced by means of the doctrine of faith or of truth; for man is such that from himself he does not know what heavenly good is, but this he must learn from doctrine . . .

3905<sup>2</sup>. The truths of faith which are not learned for the sake of acting, but only for the sake of knowing, adjoin themselves to affections of evil and falsity; and therefore they are not of faith with him who has learned them, but they are interiorly against faith.

3906. They who are being regenerated, learn to know what internal truth is, but in the beginning they do not acknowledge it with such faith as to live according to it . . .

3982<sup>2</sup>. It is known that man in his infancy and childhood learns many things, for the sole use that through them as means he may learn more useful things, and successively through these things still more useful, even until he learns those which are of eternal life; and, that when he learns these, the former things are almost obliterated.

3995<sup>2</sup>. For when man is being regenerated, he does good from the truth which he has learned; for from truth he learns what good is . . .

4018. The truths and goods which are learned, and with which the man is not affected, do indeed enter into the memory, but adhere as lightly there as a feather does to the wall, which is dispersed by the slightest breath of wind . . .

4317<sup>2</sup>. In place of perception, with the regenerate there is conscience, which acknowledges as good and truth that which is learned from parents and masters.

4404<sup>2</sup>. The sense of hearing corresponds to the affection of learning, and also to obedience.

4713. How it was with those learning, or the Church. Sig. . . (For 'the flock' = those who learn.) Ex.

5113<sup>2</sup>. The man of the Spiritual Church first learns the truth of faith.

5126<sup>3</sup>. From childhood to adolescence the communication is opened to the interior Natural by his learning what is decorous, civil, and honest, both by instruction from parents and masters, and also by studies. And from adolescence to young manhood the communication is opened between the Natural and the Rational by his then learning the truths and goods of civil and moral life, and especially the truths and goods of spiritual life, through the reading and hearing of the Word: but in proportion as he then . . . does the truths which he learns is the Rational opened . . .

5270<sup>2</sup>. When man is being reformed, he first learns truths from the Word, or from doctrine . . . 5280<sup>2</sup>.

5280<sup>2</sup>. Many learn truths . . . for the sake of reputation, etc. (Such must undergo temptation.)

5354<sup>2</sup>. From his new Intellectual he apperceives delight in learning what is good and true for the sake of life.

5432. When the truths of faith . . . are learned in the first age, they are apprehended and committed to memory no otherwise than as other scientifics . . . 5951.

5620<sup>2</sup>. 'Honey,' here, = what is pleasant and delightful from the affections of knowing and learning celestial and spiritual goods and truths.

5820. He who has learned the truths of faith in the world (merely) to know and teach them, for the sake of honour and gain . . . has them taken away from him in the other life. 6316.

5945. As such doctrinals are the first which a man learns . . .

6047<sup>2</sup>. The doctrinals of the Church must first be learned . . .

6750. Scientifics are what those being regenerated must first learn.

7750<sup>2</sup>. If man were in his own love . . . he would have no need to learn these things.

7780. 'To sit at the mills' = to learn and imbue such things as will serve for faith and . . . charity.

8516<sup>3</sup>. Unless he first learns this from the doctrine of his Church . . . he cannot be prepared . . . to receive this good.

8629. (The Spirit) was asked whether he wanted to learn these things . . .

8888<sup>2</sup>. For by (truths) man not only learns what is good, but is also led to good.

8977. The men of the External Church . . . are those who learn truth from no delight, but only because it is the truth of the Church, by means of which they believe that they can be saved; it is this necessity which enjoins them to learn and know it. Rep.

8993<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the affection of truth from (the love of self and of the world), are they who learn the doctrinals of the Church for the sake of gain, etc. 9184.

8995<sup>3</sup>. Most men think of gain or honour through the truths which they learn; but if they have these as the end, the natural man dominates . . .

[A.] 9025<sup>3</sup>. There are some who teach and learn the truths of the Church from the literal sense of the Word; and there are some who teach and learn them from doctrine from the Word. (The difference ex.)

9034<sup>3</sup>. The man of the Church first learns truth from the literal sense of the Word . . .

9050<sup>7</sup>. A longing to learn the goods and truths of faith. Sig.

9188<sup>8</sup>. 'Sorcerers,' etc.=those who learn and teach from the cupidity of gain and of honours; and not from the affection of the truth of faith and of the good of life.

9209. The instruction of those who are in ignorance of truth, and still are in the longing to learn. Sig. (by 'the needy.')

9272<sup>3</sup>. 'To sow the earth,' or 'a field'=to teach and to learn the truths and goods of faith.

9274<sup>2</sup>. The first state of the man who is being regenerated is to learn truths, and to see them . . .

9391<sup>6</sup>. 'To eat the lambs of the flock'=to learn and appropriate to one's self the goods of innocence which are of the internal man. 'To eat the calves . . .'=to learn and appropriate to one's self the goods of innocence which are of the external man.

H. 351<sup>3</sup>. In order to become intelligent and wise, man must learn many things; not only those which are of Heaven, but also those which are of the world . . . In proportion as a man learns and applies to life, he becomes intelligent and wise; for in the same proportion his interior sight . . . and his interior affection . . . are perfected.

512<sup>2</sup>. Spiritual good and truth are not learned from the world, but from Heaven. They can indeed be known from the Word . . . but still they cannot inflow into the life, unless the man is in Heaven as to the interiors of his mind . . .

N. 23<sup>3</sup>. That if man does not learn or receive truths, good cannot inflow, and thus he cannot become spiritual. Ref.

S. 59<sup>6</sup>. The rest who are in some life according to truths, can learn from (those who are in illustration).

R. 618. 'No one could learn the song, except the 144,000' (Rev.xiv.3)=that no others from Christians could understand, and thus from love and faith acknowledge . . . By 'to learn' is signified to perceive interiorly in one's self that it is so, which is to understand, and thus to receive and acknowledge. He who learns in any other way, learns, and does not learn, because he does not retain. E.859.

T. 343. That man receives faith by . . . learning Truths from the Word . . . Gen.art.

D. 1438. Such Knowledges are to be so insinuated . . . that the man does not know that he has learned them . . .

2293. That Souls, Spirits, and Angels learn Truths; both in a state of delight, and also in one of sadness—but what the difference is. Ex.

4034<sup>6</sup>. (Thus) those things also which I have learned through evil Spirits, I have learned from the Lord alone . . .

6008. They were of those men who had wanted to learn nothing . . . 6050.

D. Min. 4741. With those who learn such things . . . without use . . . such things are like scales upon scales, which . . . take away sense from the interiors . . .

E. 403<sup>12</sup>. 'They shall not learn war any more' (Mic. iv.3). Ex.

741<sup>6</sup>. 'The inhabitants of the world learn justice' (Is.xxvi.9). Ex.

803<sup>2</sup>. How man can be in illustration; so that he may learn the truths which are of his faith . . . I. Let him read the Word every day, a chapter or two, and learn from a master, and from preachings, the dogmas of his religion; and especially let him learn that God is one, and that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth; that the Word is holy; that there are a Heaven and a Hell; and that there is a life after death. II. Let him learn from the Word, from a master, and from preachings, what works are sins. Enum. Let him learn the latter and the former things from infancy to adolescence.

840. A prohibition lest anyone should learn and teach anything except what has been acknowledged . . . Sig.

J. (Post.) 31. Those who . . . do not want to learn, but to teach.

225<sup>6</sup>. He wanted to learn; but, as he had confirmed faith alone, he could not.

A. 1385<sup>6</sup>. Hence they seemed to themselves to be more learned than others.

3820<sup>4</sup>. They suppose that in the other life the learned shall shine like the stars . . . But the learned . . . = those who are in good . . .

3957. It has been given to speak with the more learned concerning this . . .

4136<sup>3</sup>. (The stupid ignorance of a certain learned Church dignitary.)

4844<sup>17</sup>. The learned in the Ancient Church knew that . . .

5432<sup>8</sup>. Such appear to themselves learned and wise. 5433<sup>2</sup>.

9188<sup>8</sup>. 'Sorcerers'=those who are learned from themselves . . . For he who will be learned in the truths and goods of faith, must be taught by the Lord . . .

9192<sup>3</sup>. They wondered that those who, above others, had been learned in the Word and in the doctrine of their Church, were among the damned . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. Those who are learned as to doctrine, but evil as to life, are meant in . . . Matt.vii.22,23; Luke xiii. 26,27; and also by the foolish virgins.

H. 347<sup>3</sup>. In the external form . . . they appear equally as intelligent and learned as those who are in the light of Heaven . . .

518. They had persuaded themselves that they should come into Heaven . . . because they had been learned . . .

W. 239<sup>3</sup>. I knew a man ordinarily learned . . .

P. 208<sup>6</sup>. If they have been learned, they apply scientifics to confirm the proprium of man and nature.

R. 419. The exploration and manifestation of the state of life of those in the Church of the Reformed, who are called learned and wise from the confirmation of faith separated from charity . . . Sig.

812<sup>2</sup>. Thus do the simple, . . . but rarely the learned and erudite.

M. 533<sup>2</sup>. A company where were the learned and erudite . . .

T. 74. All these (who wore hats) were learned and erudite; and some, who wore turbans, were unlearned-indocti. They were speaking together about unlimited Divine power . . .

159<sup>2</sup>. At the left were seen the learned of the clergy, and behind them the unlearned; and at the right the erudite of the laity, and behind them the inerudite . . .

402<sup>10</sup>. That the learned and erudite who have confirmed themselves deeply in falsities . . . are sensuous above others . . . 565.

619<sup>2</sup>. One of the spheres is concerning the Lord, which breathes forth from the southern quarter, where are the learned of the clergy, and the erudite of the laity . . .

595. Concerning a certain one among the most learned.

1404. That those who suppose themselves to be in the greatest light, because they are learned, will be in the greatest darkness. Rep.

1462. That the learned, who are exterior men, apprehend nothing but exterior things.

1466. Those who represent the learned, or the wise of the world . . . wanted my tongue to perish. Ex.

2480. That truths . . . not sensuous . . . are at once rejected by the learned.

2682. That the learned in the world obscure the understanding of man.

3060a. That the learned are not permitted to speak with Spirits, except with danger to their lives.

3062. That the most learned . . . have conceived a false idea of Heaven.

3421. That the learned who have taken up phantasies, see nothing else than the things which confirm them.

3460<sup>o</sup>. Therefore, in the learned, the ideas are closed . . .

4264. Therefore, the unlearned . . . can often think and speak better than the learned . . .

1886, Pref. Fewer of the learned believe than of the simple . . .

2144<sup>3</sup>. The learned do not know what perception is.

2310<sup>4</sup>. (Ignorance of the learned world concerning the Word.)

2329<sup>5</sup>. (The learned especially have the idea of three gods.)

2504<sup>2</sup>. When speaking to the learned . . .

2592<sup>2</sup>. He greatly wondered that the learned at this day are not delighted with such a study.

2718<sup>4</sup>. (Is there no happiness from learning, etc.?)

3428<sup>2</sup>. Modern learning scarcely goes beyond these limits, namely, whether it is, and whether it is so . . .

3483<sup>2</sup>. The learned know that subsistence is a perpetual coming forth; but still it is contrary to the affection of falsity, and thence to the reputation of learning, to say that nature continually subsists, as it has come forth, from the Divine of the Lord . . .

3563<sup>4</sup>. When a man is affected with truth . . . that he may become learned . . .

3747. I have sometimes spoken with Spirits about the learned of our age,—that they know nothing except to distinguish man into internal and external; and this not from reflection upon the interiors of the thoughts and affections with themselves, but from the Word of the Lord; and that still they do not know what the internal man is; and . . . many of them doubt whether he exists, and also deny it; and this because they do not live the life of the internal, but of the external man; and that they are much seduced by the fact that brute animals appear like them as to organs, viscera, senses, appetites, and affections: and it has been said that the learned know less about such things than the simple; and that still they seem to themselves to know much more; for they debate about the intercourse of the soul and the body; nay, about the soul, as to whether it exists; when yet the simple know that the soul is the internal man; and that it is his spirit which will live after the death of the body; and also that it is the man himself who is in the body: besides that the learned more than the simple liken themselves to brutes, and ascribe all things to nature, and scarcely anything to the Divine; and also that they do not reflect, that man, differently from brute animals, can think about Heaven, and about God, and thus be elevated above himself; consequently, be conjoined with the Lord through love; and thus that he cannot but live to eternity after death: and that they are especially ignorant that each and all things with man depend upon the Lord through Heaven; and that Heaven is a Grand Man, to which correspond each and all things which are in man, and also those in nature: and perchance when they shall hear and read these things, such things will be paradoxes to them; so that unless experience were to confirm it, they would reject them as something fantastical: in like manner when they shall hear that there are three degrees of life in man, as there are three degrees of life in the Heavens . . .

[A. 3747]<sup>e</sup>. But these things are remote from the ideas of the learned of this age, who only debate as to whether it is; and so long they cannot know that it is; and still less what it is.

3748. A certain Spirit who . . . had been reputed learned. Des.

3749. A certain Spirit . . . inflowed into my head . . . The Angels said that he was taken from the Spirits who are with a certain learned person at this day still living in the world, which learned person had got a reputation for learning above others. Then through this intermediate Spirit communication was given with the thought of that man. I asked the Spirit what idea that learned person could have about the Grand Man, and its influx, and the consequent correspondence. He said, that he could have no idea. Then, what idea he had about Heaven. He said not any; only blasphemies; as that they play on musical instruments there . . . and yet he is esteemed above others, and it is believed that he knows what influx is, and what the soul, and what is its intercourse with the body . . . from which it may be evident what is the quality of those who at this day teach others; namely, that from mere scandals they are against the goods and truths of faith, although they make a different avowal.

4156<sup>d</sup>. Those who had been in scientifics only, and had thence got the name and reputation of being learned, are sometimes much more stupid than those who have been skilled in no knowledges. Ex.

4322. For the learned discuss openly among themselves in their conclaves as to whether there is a Hell, thus whether there is a Heaven; and as they are in doubt concerning Heaven, they cannot receive as any principle that there is an influx through Heaven from the Lord . . .

4527. They then saw how easily the learned fall into error concerning the life after death; and that they above others do not believe except in the things which they see.

4658. Without any other end than to be held learned . . . (See below, U.38<sup>a</sup>.)

4733<sup>d</sup>. Very many of the learned among Christians are such (as worship nature), owing to their not believing the Human of the Lord to be Divine.

4760<sup>d</sup>. It is general . . . that the learned believe (in the life after death) less than the simple; and, in general, that they see Divine truths less than the simple. The reason is that they consult scientifics . . . from what is negative, and thereby destroy with themselves the [mental] view from what is higher or interior, (and then) they no longer see anything from the light of Heaven . . . Hence it was that the simple believed in the Lord, but not the Scribes and Pharisees, who in that nation were the learned. Ill. 6053<sup>d</sup>.

4966<sup>d</sup>. How greatly the human race has receded from the learning of the ancients, which led to wisdom.

5089<sup>d</sup>. The sensuous . . . have immersed their thought in such things as are of the world; that is, in terms and the distinctions derived from them . . . and thus in sensuous things, so that they cannot look around. This is the reason why the learned believe less than the simple; nay, that they are less wise in heavenly things . . .

5128<sup>d</sup>. In such a persuasion (of what is false) are many of the learned more than all others; for they have confirmed falsities with themselves by means of syllogistic, philosophical, and finally by many scientific things. With the Ancients, such were called serpents of the tree of knowledge; but at this day they may be called interior sensuous ones devoid of what is rational.

5146<sup>e</sup>. (Ignorance of discrete degrees) is the reason why the learned can only discuss hypothetically concerning the intercourse of the soul and the body; nay, that many of them also believe that life is in the body . . .

5321<sup>d</sup>. (A place there) where there walk and converse those who in the world had been learned, and had had life as the end of learning.

5649<sup>e</sup>. The learned believe more than the simple (that the life of man is like the life of beasts) . . .

5820<sup>d</sup>. Even if, from this, he is styled in the world as very learned . . .

5991<sup>d</sup>. Among the grossly corporeal was one who had been known to me . . . and who was among those more celebrated for . . . learning.

6316. The learned . . . as to a great part, are sensuous. The reason is, that they have learned knowledges merely for the sake of reputation . . . When they are promoted to honours, they afterwards live sensuous more than the simple . . .

6317. There were with me Spirits who . . . had been called learned. They were remitted into the state of thought in which they had been in the body, and their thought was communicated to me, (which) was such that they could never be brought to believe that a Spirit has any sense . . . The cause was that they had placed life in the body; and had confirmed themselves . . . against the life of the Spirit . . . Hence they had closed interior things to themselves . . . After they had (thus) confirmed themselves, if the greatest truths had been told them, they would have been in relation to them as the blind . . . But the unlearned—indocti—who have been in the good of faith, are not such . . .

6924<sup>e</sup>. The things which obscure are chiefly the affections of elegance of discourse and of learning; for these hide the things themselves . . .

7270<sup>e</sup>. A maxim not unknown to the learned . . .

8381<sup>e</sup>. (In Jupiter) they do not care for the scientific of human learning.

8628. They who have been conceited from learning (from terms), perceive still less.

8629<sup>2</sup>. He was exceedingly stupid . . . (but) had been among the more celebrated on account of learning. He was cold . . .

8631<sup>2</sup>. Learned men were present from our Earth who had immersed their Intellectual in the terms of scientific things, and had disputed much about form, substance, the material, the non-material, and the like; and had applied such things to no use. (Their stupidity in comparison with the Spirits of Jupiter.)

8783<sup>2</sup>. The learned of the world believe that they would have received the Word better, if heavenly things had been set forth barely . . . but they are very much mistaken; for they would then have rejected it more than the simple . . . for human learning induces this thick darkness with those who trust in their own intelligence . . . It is also very evident from the fact, that those who are atheists and naturalists . . . are those who are learned . . . They themselves know this.

8944. This is very evident from the learned of the world, who, by means of knowledges, have raised the lumen of their nature above that of others: it is known that these, above others, deny the Divine, and acknowledge nature as the Divine; and also that when they are speaking from the heart . . . they deny the life after death . . . consequently all things which are of faith . . .

9297<sup>3</sup>. He who is affected with truths solely for the sake of learning . . . is in persuasive faith.

9394<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the learned, who are such, are more insane than the simple; and with themselves deny the Divine, Providence, Heaven, Hell, the life after death, and the truths of faith; which is clearly evident from the learned of the European world at this day in the other life; where a vast number of them at the very heart are atheists . . . From these things it is evident of what use are Knowledges and scientificos to those who think from the delights of the loves of self and of the world. 9407<sup>4</sup>.

10099<sup>4</sup>. Hence it is that they who think from modern learning do not know what the Spiritual is . . .

10156<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the merely natural man . . . at heart denies Divine and heavenly things; which also is the reason why so many of the learned reduce themselves, by means of their knowledges, into such insanity . . .

10201<sup>4</sup>. Hence it is that the learned of the world, who are in the love of self . . . are more blind than the simple.

H. 74<sup>2</sup>. Because they have not extinguished, by learning, that which is implanted in them from Heaven.

r83<sup>2</sup>. This general idea . . . is annihilated . . . especially with the learned . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. He who does not think from learning concerning the soul . . . believes that he will live as a man after death . . .

313. Very many of the learned from the Christian world are amazed when they see themselves in a body after death . . . The learned who have confirmed themselves in such things, and who have ascribed all things to nature, have been explored; and it was found that their interiors were completely closed . . . so that they had not looked to Heaven, but to the world, and consequently to Hell . . .

353. They who do not acknowledge the Divine . . . think from the corporeal Sensuous . . . however erudite and learned—docti—they are believed to be . . . but their erudition does not ascend beyond such things as appear before their eyes in the world . . .

354. It has been given to speak with many of the learned after (death) . . . Those who at heart had denied the Divine . . . had become so stupid that they could scarcely comprehend any civil truth, still less any spiritual truth . . . Their interiors . . . were so closed up that they appeared as if they were black . . . so that they could not endure any heavenly light . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. From infernal ardour they torment those there who do not worship them as deities . . . Into such things is turned all the learning of the world, which has not received into itself light from Heaven by the acknowledgment of the Divine.

411. Before their interiors have been opened, Spirits can be . . . instructed . . .

456. Those who believe, are reputed by the learned as simple.

—<sup>2</sup>. They said that this faith has emanated especially from the learned, who had thought about the soul from the corporeal Sensuous . . .

464<sup>3</sup>. I have spoken with many . . . who had been believed to be learned, from the fact that they were acquainted with the ancient languages . . . and who had not cultivated their Rational by the things written in those languages. Some of them seemed to be as simple as those who had known nothing of those languages; and some seemed to be stupid; but still there remained with them conceit, as if they were wiser than others.

—<sup>e</sup>. The Angels grieve very much that many of the learned ascribe all things to nature; and that they have thus closed up to themselves the interiors of their own minds, so that they can see nothing of truth from the light of truth . . . In the other life, therefore, they are deprived of the faculty of ratiocinating, lest they should disseminate falsities among the simple good . . . and they are sent into desert places.

U. 38<sup>2</sup>. I may relate how the case is with the learned in the other life, who draw intelligence from their own proper meditation, kindled by the love of knowing truths for the sake of truths, thus for the sake of uses abstracted from worldly things; and how the case is with those who [do so] from others, without their own proper meditation, as those are wont to do who desire to know truths merely for the sake of the reputation of learning, and of the consequent honour or gain in the world . . . (Fully des. This long description is quoted from A.4658.)

W. 361<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that many of the learned, who have thought much, and especially who have written much, have weakened and obscured their common perception; nay, have destroyed it . . .

M. 163. The things which belong to the rational wisdom of the men . . . are called . . . in special, erudition, etc.

[M.] 232. (The cry, O how learned ! Ex.) T.333.

415<sup>5</sup>. The two Angels and the two satans were standing to the right . . . and I saw around them many Spirits who . . . had been celebrated for their learning ; and I marvelled that those learned ones now stood near the Angels, now near the satans, (because) they now favoured the one side and now the other . . .

— (They said,) We have looked down into the earth at those who were celebrated for learning, and who, from their own judgment, have thought about God and about nature ; and we have found six hundred out of a thousand in favour of nature, and the rest in favour of God ; and that these were in favour of God because they have frequently said, not from any understanding, but merely from things they have heard, that nature is from God ; for frequent speech from the memory . . . induces a species of faith. T.77<sup>5</sup>.

502<sup>9</sup>. Those who . . . have caught the allurements from instruction.

T. 80<sup>2</sup>. The satan said, My function is learning : do not you see the laurel upon my head ?

98. Most of the clergy, who seek the reputation of learning for the sake of honours and gains . . .

335. I observed a number of Spirits, whose heads were encircled with leaves of laurel, and who were clothed in flowered robes, which signified that . . . they had been renowned for their reputation for learning. . . They were debating about connate ideas . . .

380<sup>2</sup>. The more anyone believes himself to be more excellent than others in learning and judgment, the more prone he is to . . . appropriate (the idea that the Lord) is a man, and not God . . .

665<sup>4</sup>. We turned to the company which consisted of the learned . . .

695. (In Heaven) the various things which belong to rational learning are in their excellence.

D. 1950<sup>6</sup>. Such is the quality of human learning or wisdom.

2515. In the Lord's Kingdom no one is estimated from his learning . . .

4628. How much the perceptions of the learned differ from those of the unlearned—ineruditorum. The learned, that is, those who have been instructed in knowledges . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason the learned are such, is because they learn knowledges for the sake of the reputation of learning . . .

— Hence it is that most of the learned . . . attribute all things to nature . . .

4727<sup>6</sup>. (Thus) the most learned are atheists . . . so that, for them, learning is a means of being insane.

4744. Concerning the learned who have placed learning solely in such things as serve for intelligence, and not in intelligence itself.

5141<sup>6</sup>. Most of the learned within the Church become bones.

5759. Afterwards were cast down those who had utterly despised learning and knowledges, of whom there were a great number.

5999<sup>3</sup>. Most there do not come to intelligence, but to learning.

D. Min. 4739. On those who know from others, and are thence called learned . . .

4752<sup>9</sup>. This is the case with modern learning . . .

E. 52<sup>2</sup>. As this implanted [idea] has been almost cast out with the learned of the world . . . the New Church is being instaurated with the gentiles . . .

236<sup>3</sup>. Spirits who . . . had been believed to be learned were explored as to whether they know what spiritual faith is . . .

543<sup>4</sup>. Such are many of the learned . . .

559<sup>2</sup>. The learned of this kind who know things physical, anatomical, botanical, and many things which belong to human learning . . . say in their hearts that all these things are from nature . . .

714<sup>7</sup>. Most of those (who relate to the head of the dragon) are learned . . .

797<sup>10</sup>. Such are many of the learned, who have confirmed faith alone . . .

808<sup>3</sup>. The idea of the Divine Human . . . has been completely destroyed, especially with the learned there.

885<sup>2</sup>. The latter is done by the learned who teach from doctrine ; the former by the learned and the non-learned who teach from the Word.

886<sup>6</sup>. The latter is done by the simple who receive that faith ; the former by the learned who glory from their learning.

998<sup>3</sup>. It is believed by man that as the learned know many things from the Word and from doctrine, they are more intelligent and wise than others . . .

Ath. 33. The learned mentioned. 77. 112. 198.

J. (Post.) 225. One who was learned, was examined . . .

273. See LEFT, here.

D. Love xiv<sup>6</sup>. Among these are many who have been esteemed as learned . . . and who believe themselves to be wise because they ascribe all things to nature and prudence.

D. Wis. i<sup>5</sup>. The learned were collected, to the number of three hundred ; and the option was given them as to which way they would go ; and . . . two hundred and sixty entered the way of folly, and only forty the way of wisdom . . .

vii. 1. The sensuous learned have conceived this [idea] from the name spirit . . .

xi. 2a. Such is the genius of learning, which is conceit, that it can confirm everything . . .

10048. Ordination is described by the intestines and legs being put upon the segments and upon the head (Ex.xxix.17); and by 'the intestines' are signified the lowest things, which are called external sensuous things; by 'the legs,' the things proximately higher, which are called natural . . . 10050.

10050. The reason 'the legs'=the exteriors which are of the natural man, is that the feet are meant at the same time; for the legs of beasts are four, and they cohere with the feet, (which)=the Natural or External of man.

—<sup>2</sup>. The like is signified by 'legs' in Amos iii.12; (where) 'legs'=the external of the Church, which also is of the natural man. . . By 'the legs,' where the statue of Nebuchadnezzar is treated of. . . is signified the truth of faith in the external or natural man, which also is 'iron.' The reason 'the legs' are here distinguished from 'the feet,' is that legs are differently circumstanced with man from what they are with beasts.

E. 163<sup>3</sup>. 'The legs' (Amos iii.12)=the goods which are in the natural man.

176<sup>2</sup>. By 'the legs' which were 'of iron,' is meant the fourth state of the Church, when there was no longer natural good, but only truth. (Compare 411<sup>4</sup>.)

543<sup>15</sup>. The reason they were allowed to eat locusts, because of their having legs above their feet to leap with' (Lev.xi.21) is because 'legs'=natural good conjoined with spiritual good; and 'feet,' natural truth from this good; and all the truth which is from good ought to be appropriated to and conjoined with man; but not the truth which is not from good; for this truth is conjoined with some evil; and therefore it is said that 'the winged-avis-creeping thing which goes upon four, and which has not legs above its feet' was 'an abomination' (ver.23). —.

A. 650. That 'the length'=the holiness of these things . . . cannot be so well confirmed from the Word, because everything is predicated according to the subject treated of; as, for instance, 'length,' in application to time,=what is perpetual and eternal; as 'length of days;' but in application to space, it=what is holy . . .

H. 168°. Times seem long to those who are sad . . . E.1219<sup>4</sup>.

197°. I will state what is signified in the Word by 'length,' 'breadth,' and 'height.' In the world, that is called long and broad which is long and broad as to space; in like manner what is high; but in Heaven, where they do not think from space, by length is meant a state of good; by breadth, a state of truth; and by height, the differences in them according to degrees . . . because long, in Heaven, is from east to west; and there are those who are in the good of love: and broad, in Heaven, is from south to north; and there are those who are in truth from good: and high, in Heaven, is both according to degrees. Hence it is, that in the Word, by 'length,' 'breadth,' and 'height,' such things are signified. Ill. R.861<sup>2</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'The length' of the New Jerusalem=its good of love; its 'breadth,' the truth from that good; and its 'height,' the good and truth as to degrees.

N. 1°. 'Length'=good and its extension; and 'breadth'=truth and its extension. Refs.

W. 71. In all the objects of (natural) sight there is figure derived from what is long, broad, and high . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But the thought of an Angel has nothing in common with the figure . . . which derives anything from what is long, broad, and high of space; but from the state of a thing from the state of the life. Hence, instead of what is long of space, he thinks of the good of a thing from the good of life; instead of what is broad of space, of the truth of a thing from the truth of life; and instead of height, of the degrees of these. Thus he thinks from correspondence . . . from which correspondence it is that 'length,' in the Word,=the good of a thing; 'breadth,' the truth of a thing; and 'height,' the degrees of these.

R. 906. 'Its length is as great as its breadth' (Rev.xxi.16)=that the good and truth in that Church make one, as do essence and form. By 'the length' of the city Jerusalem, is signified the good of the Church; and by its 'breadth' is signified the truth of the Church. Ex.

907. 'The length, and the breadth, and the height of it were equal' (id.)=that all things of it were from the good of love. . . For by 'length' is signified the good of love . . . and this precedes, the others being 'equal' to it.

R. 572. 'The beast I saw was like a leopard' (Rev. xiii.2)=a heresy destructive of the Church, because from the truths of the Word falsified. . . By 'a leopard' is signified the affection or cupidity of falsifying the truths of the Word; and, as it is a ferocious beast, and slaughters harmless animals, it signifies also a heresy destructive of the Church. The reason the falsified truths of the Word are signified by 'a leopard,' is from its black and white spots; and by the black spots are signified falsities, and by the white among them, truth. Hence, as it is a ferocious and fierce beast, by it are signified the truths of the Word falsified, and thus destroyed. III.

574. That 'the leopard,' 'bear,' and 'lion'=such things, may be evident from the like beasts seen by Daniel (vii.3-7). By these four beasts are described the successive states of the Church . . . The third state of it is described by 'the leopard,' by which is signified the Word falsified as to its truths; by 'the four wings, like those of birds, upon its back,' are signified confirmations of falsity . . .

M. 44<sup>t</sup>. Before the eyes of the Angels they appear with feet like those of calves, or leopards.

E. 355<sup>24</sup>. Their cupidity of perverting truths and destroying them through reasonings from falsities entirely remote from truths, is signified by, 'his horses are swifter than leopards' (Hab.i.8).

780. 'The beast I saw was like a leopard'=reasonings which disagree but which still appear to cohere. . . 'A leopard'=things which disagree, and which yet appear as true. The reason such things are signified by 'a leopard,' is that a leopard has its skin marked off and variegated with spots, from which variegation it appears not unbeautiful; but as it is a fierce and insidious animal, and above all others swift in seizing its prey; and as those also are such who are skilled in reasoning expertly to confirm the dogma concerning the separation of faith from good works, by means of reasonings from the natural man, which, notwithstanding its disagreement with truths, they thereby make to appear as if it cohered with them—therefore as to its body this beast appeared like a leopard. Examps. —<sup>5</sup>, III.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'Or the leopard his spots'=that neither can the falsity of evil change; 'the leopard,' here,=the falsity of evil; for it=truth falsified by means of reasonings; and 'spots'=things falsified.

—<sup>6</sup>. 'The leopard' (Is.xi.)=the falsity which is opposite to charity; and which, by means of reasonings in favour of faith, endeavours to destroy charity.

—<sup>7</sup>. 'The leopard is awake against their cities' (Jer.v.6)=reasonings from the falsities of evil against the truths of doctrine.

—<sup>8</sup>. 'Whose horses are swifter than leopards'=the cupidity of seducing by means of reasonings, and the consequent expertness in seducing. . . Reasonings from the natural man are signified by . . . 'leopards.'

—<sup>9</sup>. 'The leopard,' in Dan.vii., also=reasonings which disagree, but which still appear as if they cohere.

—<sup>10</sup>. 'As a leopard upon the way will I observe' (Hos.xiii.7)=the falsification of truth by means of reasonings from the natural man. By 'a leopard' is signified falsification by means of reasonings. . . This is so said concerning the Lord . . . from the appearance of truth . . . for it is the man himself who falsifies truth by means of reasonings, when he is elated at heart.

Leprosy. Lepra.

Leptrous, Leper. Leptrosus.

A. 3301<sup>6</sup>. That in leprosy the colours of the hair and beard were to be observed; as white, reddish, yellow, black; and also in the garments; and that he who was cleansed from leprosy was to shave off all the hair of his head, beard, and eyebrows (Lev.xiii.1-end; xiv.8,9) signified falsities unclean from what is profane, which is 'leprosy' in the internal sense.

6959<sup>3</sup>. As 'leprosy'=the profanation of truth . . .

6963. 'His hands as leptrous as snow' (Ex.iv.6)=the profanation of truth. 'Hands'= . . . truth; and 'leptrous'=profanation; in special, the profanation of truth.

— The reason 'leprosy' is so much treated of, is . . . that it signified the profanation of truth . . . and because the Jews and Israelites could profane truth more than others . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'leprosy'=the profanation of truth, is evident from the statutes concerning leprosy in Lev.xiii. In this description there is contained in the internal sense every quality of the profanation of truth. Enum. But as the things described by 'leprosy' are profane, it is not allowable to explain them particularly . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. 'One who is leptrous from the head to the heel' (Lev.xiii.12-14) means one who knows internal truths, but does not acknowledge them . . . He is not interiorly in profanation, but exteriorly, which is removed; and therefore he is 'clean.' But if he knows the truths of faith, and believes them, and yet lives contrary to them, he is in profanation interiorly; and so is he who has believed, and afterwards denies; and therefore it is said that 'in the day in which living flesh has appeared in him he shall be unclean' . . .

7524<sup>3</sup>. The sores of the leprosy . . . mentioned in Lev.xiii., are also such (falsities); for 'leprosy'=the profanation of truth.

9014<sup>5</sup>. 'He who is leprous' (2 Sam.iii.29)=the profanation of the truth of faith.

9209<sup>4</sup>. 'The lepers are cleansed' (Luke vii.22) . . . 'The lepers'=those who are unclean, and who still long to be cleansed.

9468<sup>9</sup>. For 'leprosy'=truth profaned, thus falsified.

R. 678<sup>o</sup>. 600<sup>19</sup>. As by 'leprosy' is signified good consumed through falsities, the method of the restoration of this evil by Divine means is described by the process of the cleansing of the leprosy . . . in Lev.xiv.14-28 . . .

962<sup>10</sup>. As by 'leprosy' is signified the profanation of truth, and the profanation of truth is various—being light and grievous, interior and exterior, and being according to the quality of the profaned truth—its effects are various, which are signified by the appearances in the leprosy. A. 1870<sup>2</sup>. Inspired as to each of the little letters . . .

9280<sup>o</sup>. Holiness inflows . . . into the literal sense, and into the letter itself.

S. 3. The holiness of the Word . . . in some places is in the letters themselves.

71. The spiritual style consists of mere letters, each of which involves a meaning; and there are points over the letters, which exalt the meaning. The letters with the Angels of the Spiritual Kingdom are like the printed letters in our world; and the letters with the Angels of the Celestial Kingdom—each of which also involves a complete meaning—are like the old Hebrew letters . . . W.295.

P. 230. (In the spiritual language) each letter in the alphabet means one thing; and a number of letters joined together into one word . . . involve the entire state of the thing. R.29°. —. T.19°.

R. 38°. As, in the Spiritual World . . . each letter means a thing, David wrote Ps. cxix. in order, according to the letters of the alphabet. . . Something like this appears in Ps.cxi.

T. 241. The letters with the Angels of the Celestial Kingdom, with some, are like the Arabic letters; with some are like the old Hebrew letters; but they are inflected above and within, with signatures above, between, and within. Each of these, also, involves a complete meaning.

508°. As the paper was written with rounded-circularis-letters, such as are in that Heaven, I . . . begged that they would explain (it).

D. 3503°. They do not remain in the letter; but in the interior sense of the letter.

5561. In the Spiritual Heaven, the writing is in . . . Roman letters . . . 5579.

5562. But in the Celestial Heaven . . . the letters are . . . almost like the Hebrew letters; and there they see in each of the syllables, little horns, and apexes, many things which they signify.

5563. They write letters, and send them to others.

5621. (Thus) the Word is Divine in the syllables and letters also . . . (Hence) the Jews were driven to count the letters; and they have believed that there are arcana in the several letters; although they did not know how.

5951. See ENGLAND, here.

5965. In Heaven . . . the letters of the words are sometimes written by curvatures, which also contain arcana . . .

D. Min. 4811. Letters printed with type seen there.

4812. They have both written, and as it were printed, letters. . . But I did not understand the language . . .

E. 260°. If the Word were spiritual in the letter also, there would be no basis for it, and it would be like a house without a foundation.

828°. (The Angels of the Third Heaven) do not write by means of letters, as do the other Angels; but by means of curvatures and inflections which contain arcana . . .

1070°. The Word in the letter, which is with us, is Divine truth in ultimates.

Ath. 112°. Hence the Word in the letter is most holy . . . and strength itself is there.

J. (Post) 261. The Word in the (old Hebrew) letter has more immediate communication with Heaven.

324. Spirits and Angels . . . write by means of letters and characters; but the writing is quite different from that in the world, except the letters and some of the points . . .

—e. They write the meanings of words by means of alphabetical letters, each of which signifies a thing . . .

De Verbo 37. As to the letters, the writing of the spiritual Angels is like the writing of men in the world; but each letter signifies a thing; so that if you were to see it when in a natural state you would say that it is mere letters. But in the highest Heaven the writings are not the same as to the letters; they have letters written by means of various curvatures, not unlike the letters of the Hebrew language, but everywhere inflected, and not merely linear . . . Each letter involves a thing, the perception of which they have from affection, and not from thought.

144. The writing of the spiritual Word is from letters which are like the printed letters in our world; but each letter makes a meaning; and therefore if you were to see that writing, you would not understand a single word; for letter is placed next to letter in a continuous series, with little lines and points above and below; for it is according to the spiritual speech . . .

—2. But the writing of the celestial Word is from letters unknown in the world. They are indeed alphabetical letters; but each [is formed] from inflected lines, with little horns above and below; and there are jots or points in the letters, and also below and above them. It was said that such was the writing with the Most Ancients in this Earth . . .

22. In very many places it is better for man to understand the Word according to the letter. Exam. and Ex.

24. See WORD, here.

263. (In order to express 'horses harnessed to a chariot,' the spiritual Angels) write only 'l'; and this letter expresses it. . . They also write 'the understanding of doctrine' by means of 'l'; but they are then in higher thought; from which it was evident that there are correspondences in the words of their language.

D. Wis. vii. 5°. Although as to the letters the writing of the Angels is like the writings of the men of the world. It cannot be understood by any man of the world; [because] every consonant letter therein is one meaning; and every vowel letter is an affection. The vowel letters are not written, but are pointed.

See LEVITE.

A. 342. 'Levi'=charity; and therefore the tribe of Levi received the priesthood, and represented 'the shepherd of the flock.'

352. (Hence) the tribe of Levi—who in the internal sense=love—was accepted in place of all the first-horn, and was made the priesthood (Num.ii.40-46; viii.14-20).

1038°. 'Levi,' in the supreme sense, = the Lord; and thence the man who has love and charity; and therefore 'the covenant of lives and of peace with Levi' (Mal. ii.4,5)=[that] in love and charity. 1286°. 2826°.

3325°. As 'the first-horn' represented the Lord; and those who are the Lord's are so from love to Him, therefore the tribe of Levi was accepted in place of all the first-horn; and this because Levi represented the Lord as to love. 'Levi' also=love; for Levi means adhesion and conjunction . . .

3759<sup>e</sup>. These four degrees are signified by . . . Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah.

3858<sup>11</sup>. The tribe of Levi=love . . . Hence the rod of Levi only blossomed (Num.xvii.)

3862<sup>2</sup>. By 'Levi' is signified spiritual love, or charity. —. The progression is thence . . . to charity, which is 'Levi' . . .

3869<sup>2</sup>. Faith in the will, when it becomes charity, is 'Levi.'

3870<sup>2</sup>. 'Levi' (here)=an affection contrary to charity.

3875<sup>e</sup>. Those who are in spiritual love are called 'sons of Levi' (Mal.iii.3).

—. That, in the supreme sense, the Lord is 'Levi,' from His Divine love and mercy towards those who are in spiritual love (is evident from) Mal.ii.4-9.

—. And as the Divine love or mercy of the Lord is meant, in the supreme sense, by 'Levi;' and, in the internal sense, spiritual love; therefore the tribe of Levi was made the priesthood . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. This mutual love, or charity towards the neighbour, is what is meant by spiritual love, and is what is signified by 'Levi.'

3877. 'She called his name Levi' (Gen.xxix.34)=its quality. . . This quality is what is signified by 'Levi,' and also by the tribe named from him; and it is this third universal of the Church, or the third universal when man is being regenerated . . . and it is charity. Ex.

4497. 'Simeon and Levi' (Gen.xxxiv.25)=faith and love. . . 'Levi'=spiritual love, or charity. In the genuine sense, these things are signified by Simeon and Levi, and also by the tribes named from Simeon and Levi; but, in the opposite sense, falsity and evil. . . Relatively to the Jewish nation . . . Simeon and Levi represent these, (in that) they killed Hamor, Shechem, and the men of the city . . . Simeon and Levi did this in order that it might be represented that the truth of faith and the good of charity had become falsity and evil. . . 4499. 4502<sup>2</sup>. —<sup>3</sup>, Ex.

4515. 'To Simeon and Levi' (ver.30)=what is representative of spiritual and celestial things. . . 'Levi'=love; but, in the opposite sense, evil; here, therefore, what is representative of . . . celestial things. Ex.

4606. See JUDAH, here.

—. In the supreme sense, 'Levi'=love and mercy; in the internal sense, charity or spiritual love; and, in the external sense, conjunction. Refs.

5622<sup>3</sup>. (The blossoming of the almonds) was a sign that the tribe of Levi had been chosen for the priesthood, because by it was signified charity, which is the essential of the Spiritual Church.

6024. 'The sons of Levi, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari' (Gen.xlvi.11)=spiritual love, and its doctrinal things in general. 7230<sup>2</sup>.

6352. 'Simeon and Levi are brethren' (Gen.xlix.5)=faith in the will, and charity; here, what is contrary, because [they=] faith separated from charity. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. Therefore, by 'Levi' is represented evil in act; for this is opposite to charity.

6716. 'There went a man of the house of Levi' (Ex.ii.1)=the origin of truth from good. . . 'Levi' represents good; for, in the supreme sense, 'Levi' represents the Divine love; and, in the internal sense, spiritual love; and, as he represents love, he represents good; for all good is of love.

6717. 'And took a daughter of Levi' (id.)=conjunction with good. Ex.

7184. Afterwards (in Ex.vi.) there is described the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom as to faith and as to charity . . . Levi and his families represent the things which are of charity.

7230<sup>2</sup>. 'These are the families of Levi according to their births' (Ex.vi.19)=that these things are goods and truths from charity.

7231. The reason why Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, and their sons, are here mentioned, and not the rest of the fathers of the tribes with their sons. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Finally, in the (new) will (of the man of the Spiritual Church) there is apperceived the affection of charity; so that he wills to do what is good, not, as before, from faith, but from charity towards the neighbour . . . It is this charity with its affection which is represented by Levi.

8093<sup>2</sup>. Faith separated from charity is described by . . . Simeon and Levi, in that they killed Hamor . . . and were therefore cursed by their father.

8159<sup>2</sup>. 'The sons of Levi' (Mal.iii.)=those who are of the Spiritual Church; for by 'Levi' is signified charity, or spiritual good. 9293<sup>2</sup>.

10484<sup>2</sup>. 'The sons of Levi,' who congregated to Moses, (Ex.xxxii.26)=those who are in truths from good, (which is the same as being in charity). 10485. 10491.

R. 177. 'Levi'=truth in act, which is the good of life; and therefore the priesthood was given to his posterity.

356. By Reuben, Simeon, and Levi . . . are signified truth in the understanding, or faith; truth in the will, or charity; and truth in act, or good work; the like as by Peter, James, and John.

357. 'From the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand' (Rev.vii.7)=the affection of truth from good from which is intelligence with those who will be of the Lord's New Heaven and New Church. By 'Levi,' in the supreme sense, is signified love and mercy; in the spiritual sense, charity in act, which is the good of life; and, in the natural sense, consociation and conjunction; for he was so called from 'to adhere,' by which . . . is signified conjunction through love. But here, by 'Levi' is signified the love or affection of truth, and the derivative intelligence; because he follows Simeon, and is the middle one in this series. As Levi represented these things, that tribe was made the priesthood. Ill. That the tribe of Levi=the love of truth, which is the very love from which the Church is the Church, and the derivative intelligence. Ill.

—<sup>e</sup>. 'To purify the sons of Levi'=to purify those who are in the affection of truth. As this affection blossoms from intelligence, the rod of Levi, upon which was written the name of Aaron, blossomed with almonds (Num. xvii. 1-11).

D. 5987. See ESPALIER, here.

E. 229<sup>4</sup>. The tribe of Levi was the first of the tribes, because Levi represented the good of charity; and therefore this tribe was made the priesthood, (which) is the first of the Church. Refs.

242<sup>9</sup>. 'The sons of Levi'=all who are in the good of charity, and thence in the truths of faith. . .

340<sup>6</sup>. As the sons of Levi were set over Divine worship, and all Divine worship takes place from spiritual good and from the truths thence, it is said that 'Jehovah chose them to minister to Him, and to bless in the name of Jehovah' (Deut. x. 8; xxi. 5) . . .

365<sup>25</sup>. 'Levi'=all who are in the good of charity towards the neighbour; and, in the supreme sense, the Lord Himself, because this good is from Him; here, (Mal. ii.) the Lord Himself. Refs.

438. The obedience of faith is signified by . . . (the tribes of) Simeon, Levi, and Issachar.

443. The tribes of Simeon, Levi, and Issachar, who . . . constitute the third class of the sealed,=those who are in the First Heaven . . . Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. 'Simeon and Levi are brethren'=faith separated from charity.

—<sup>7</sup>. The reason his first three sons, Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, were rejected and condemned by their father Israel, is that in that prophecy it treats of the instauration of the Church . . . and by 'Levi' is there signified no good of charity . . . Ex.

444. 'From the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand'=good works . . . because charity consists in the performance of goods. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason the priesthood was given to the tribe of Levi, was that it represented love and charity . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. As the tribe of Levi represented charity in act, thus the goods of charity . . .

— . As the good of charity must be in all things of the Church . . . and because the affection itself of good and truth . . . gives to understand, and instructs all, the tribe of Levi was not only made the priesthood, but there was also no inheritance given to it . . . (Num. xxxv. ; Jos. xxi.).

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The sons of Levi' (Deut. xxi. 5)=the affection of good and truth, which is charity.

—<sup>6</sup>. That the tribe of Levi=the goods of charity, which are good works. Ill.

—<sup>8</sup>. 'The sons of Levi' (Mal. iii.)=all who are in the good of charity, and thence in the good of faith. Ex.

—<sup>9</sup>. By 'Levi' (Deut. xxxiii. 8-12) is meant the affection of spiritual truth. Ex.

— . 'Levi' means 'adhesion;' and 'adhesion'=conjunction through spiritual love.

— . The three sons of Leah, born in order—Reuben, Simeon, and Levi,=the first and primary essentials of the Church in their series; namely, truth in the understanding, truth in the will, and truth in act; in like manner as the Lord's three disciples . . .

—<sup>12</sup>. That 'Levi,' in the supreme sense,=the Lord as to love and mercy, is evident from . . . Mal. ii. By 'Levi,' here, in the supreme sense, is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human. Ex. . . And therefore by 'the covenant of Levi' is meant conjunction with the Lord through love and charity. 696<sup>16</sup>. 701<sup>9</sup>.

—<sup>13</sup>. 'Levi,' and his tribe, in the opposite sense,=the evil of falsity, which is opposite to the good of charity; and also life without charity, consequently, no charity towards the neighbour. Ill.

494<sup>6</sup>. 'The sons of Levi' (Deut. xxxiii.)=those who are in the truths of spiritual good.

555<sup>10</sup>. 'Levi' (Zech. xii. 13)=the good of charity.

701<sup>9</sup>. For the Lord is meant by 'Levi,' as He is by 'David;' but by 'Levi,' as to the Divine good, which is the Lord's priestly [office]. Ex.

Leviathan. Leviathan.

A. 7293<sup>2</sup>. As 'whales'=scientifics which pervert the truths of faith, they=reasonings from fallacies, whence come falsities . . . Like things are signified by 'leviathan' in Is. xxvii. 1; and in Ps. lxxiv. 14. In a good sense, 'leviathan'=reason from truths (Job xl. 25-32; xli. 1-26). Reason from truths is the opposite to reasonings from falsities. 9755<sup>4</sup>.

10416<sup>6</sup>. 'Leviathan'=the Scientific in general.

B. 93<sup>6</sup>. I said, You are also leviathans . . . the crooked leviathans . . . and the longish leviathans . . . T. 182<sup>6</sup>.

T. 74<sup>2</sup>. I said . . . Open that faith, and you will see . . . leviathan . . .

E. 275<sup>3</sup>. 'Leviathan the longish serpent' (Is. xxvii. 1)=those who reject all things which they do not see with their eyes; thus the merely sensuous, who are devoid of faith because they do not comprehend. 'Leviathan the crooked serpent' (id.)=those who on this account do not believe, and yet say that they believe.

455<sup>18</sup>. See BEHEMOTH, here.

483<sup>6</sup>. 'Whales' and 'leviathan' (Ps. lxxiv.)=scientifics, which are of the sensuous and natural man, from which is all falsity, when the spiritual man is closed above them.

514<sup>11</sup>. By 'leviathan,' that is, a whale, (Ps. civ. 26) are meant all things of the natural man in the complex; which is said to 'play in the sea,' from the delight of knowing and thence of being wise.

581<sup>8</sup>. Their cunning is signified by 'leviathan the crooked serpent.'

Levirate. Leviratus.

A. 1748<sup>4</sup>. The levirate mentioned. 4818<sup>2</sup>.

4834. The levirate represented the preservation and continuation of the Church.

4835. 'Perform the levirate to her' (Gen. xxxviii. 8)=that he should continue the representative of the Church. . . 'To perform the levirate'=to preserve and continue that which is of the Church. The levirate defined. It was not new in the Jewish Church . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The law of the levirate quoted (Deut. xxv. 5-10).

—<sup>3</sup>. The signification of the law of the levirate explained. —<sup>4</sup>.

4836. Not to perform the levirate=not to want the good and truth of the Church, and its continuation.

Levite. Levita.

See under LEVI.

A. 225<sup>24</sup>. The Levites numbered from 30 to 50 years. Ex.

3325<sup>9</sup>. The Levites given to Aaron. Ex.

6998. 'Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother?' (Ex.iv. 14)=the doctrine of good and truth. . . Aaron is called 'the Levite,' because by 'a Levite' is signified the doctrine of good and truth of the Church, which ministers and is of service to the priesthood.

8080<sup>2</sup>. The Levites were accepted in place of the first-born, because by Levi was represented the good of faith, or charity, (Num.iii.12-end; viii.16-18). That the good of faith is that which is to be ascribed to the Lord . . . —<sup>4</sup>.

9959<sup>1</sup>. 'The priests the Levites' (Ezek.xliv.15)=those who are in truths from good.

10017. The priesthood which is represented by the Levites, is the Lord's work of salvation proceeding from this again. (See AARON, here.)

—<sup>2</sup>. The work of the salvation of those who are thence in natural good, is represented by the priesthood of the Levites . . . and therefore it is said concerning the Levites that they were 'given to Aaron' (Num.iii.).

10083<sup>3</sup>. The Levites represented truths ministering to good; and Aaron, the good to which they ministered; and therefore the Levites were 'agitated' (Num.viii. 11-21); that is, vivified. Therefore, also, it is said that they are to be 'purified.' Ex.

10093<sup>3</sup>. As the Levites represented the Divine truths in Heaven and in the Church being of service to Divine good, they were given to Aaron in place of all the first-born . . .

R. 17<sup>1</sup>. See FIRST-BORN, here.

E. 444<sup>7</sup>. 'The Levites' (Jer.xxxiii.18)=those who are in worship (from the good of love and of charity, and from the truths of faith) . . . 'The Levites the priests, My ministers' (ver.21)=those who are in the good of love to the Lord, and in the derivative worship. . . 'Thus will I multiply . . . the Levites My ministers' (ver.22)=the fructification of Divine good with those who have conjunction with the Lord. Here, as elsewhere, by 'the Levites, the priests,' are signified those who are in the good of love and of charity; and, in the abstract sense, this good. 527<sup>2</sup>.

—<sup>4</sup>. This opposite is signified by 'the Levite,' in the parable . . . (Luke x.32) . . . 'The Levite'=those who have no charity towards the neighbour, such as there were in Jerusalem at that time.

710<sup>34</sup>. The Levites were received in place of all the first-born, because by 'Levi,' and thence by 'a Levite,' is signified spiritual good from celestial good; and therefore the priesthood, by which is signified celestial good, was given to Aaron and his sons; and the ministry of this good, by which is signified truth from good, was given to the Levites.

734<sup>14</sup>. The reason the works and ministries of the Levites . . . are called 'warfare,' is that the Levites represented the truths of the Church; and Aaron, to whom the Levites were given . . . for service, represented the Lord as to the good of love, and as to the work of salvation; and as the Lord . . . regenerates and saves men by means of truths from the Word, and also [by their means] removes the evils and falsities which are from Hell, continually fighting against them, therefore the offices and ministries of the Levites were called 'warfare' . . .

5999. On libraries in Heaven.

—<sup>1</sup>. I was admitted into a library containing a great number of books. Those there . . . said, that there were books there from the Ancients, written by correspondences. Interiorly in other libraries there were books written by those who belonged to the Ancient Churches; and, still more interiorly, books for the Most Ancients, from which the society called 'Enoch' had collected correspondences . . . There was a vast number who were studying the books; some of whom become learned; many intelligent; and others wise. The treasures for the more interior libraries appeared brighter and brighter, but to me and them in a dimmer light, because we were not capable of entering into the things of wisdom which were there . . . The places there were distinguished into many, according to the faculties of those who were studying.

—<sup>2</sup>. In the Heavens elsewhere also there are libraries, but not public ones, as there. Moreover, those who are studying in the Heavens, have communication with those who are in those public libraries, and are instructed thence in doubtful things.

—<sup>3</sup>. At a distance to the left also there are libraries which are also distinguished into treasures; and the number of them is great, according to all the varieties of studies and of the derivative learning. Those who are in theological things study their own doctrinals; but still are thus led to perceive their doctrinals differently; for they are bent to truer things by degrees. But most there do not come to intelligence, but to learning.

[D. 5999]<sup>4</sup>. At the sides there, are those who do not study in order to become intelligent and wise through their studies; but who think from those things which they have imbibed by means of objects and knowledges; and who therefore do not want to read books, as do those who choose out those books which are merely of service to the memory, such as lexicons and collections which are for the memory only. To the former it is given to think . . . and to form conclusions to many things which are of intelligence; the reason being that they have no memory such as others have, but thought instead.

—<sup>5</sup>. Those from the moderns were explored, as to whether they were able to apprehend and believe that there are books and libraries in the Spiritual World; and scarcely any from the learned could do so. It was said that they have there very many things concerning correspondences, and explications of the Word by the internal sense; and that there were Most Ancient wise ones there in the inmost chambers.

A. 2. Otherwise it could not be said that there is any life in the Word; for whence is life except from those things which are of life, that is, except it is from this—that each and all things relate to the Lord, who is the veriest life; and therefore whatever does not interiorly regard Him does not live. . . 3.

12. (Man's) spiritual life is delighted and sustained by those things which are of the Knowledges of faith, and of the works of charity. . . and his natural life. . . by those things which are of the body and the senses; from which there is combat, until love reigns, and the man becomes celestial.

16. When man is regenerated. . . he receives life.

17. Hence. . . stupor and ignorance as to all things. . . which are of spiritual and celestial life.

20<sup>2</sup>. Afterwards (he begins to know) that the Lord is good itself, or life. . .

29. He who supposes (that good and truth) are from himself, has not as yet the life of true faith; which, however, he can receive afterwards. . . This state is here represented by the inanimate things; and the state of the life of faith, afterwards, by the animate things.

30. The very essence and life of faith is the Lord alone; for he who does not believe in the Lord cannot have life, as He Himself says in John: 'He who believeth in the Son hath eternal life; but he who believeth not in the Son shall not see life. . . ' (iii.26).

—<sup>2</sup>. The progression of faith with those who are being created anew, is as follows. At first they have no life, for there is no life in evil and falsity, but in good and truth. Afterwards they receive life from the Lord through faith; first through. . . scientific faith; then through. . . intellectual faith; and afterwards through. . . faith of the heart. Scientific and intellectual faith are represented by the inanimate things; but faith vivified by love, by the animate things.

32<sup>2</sup>. For in the Heavens there is no other life than the life of love. . . They who are in love. . . know. . . that all love, thus all life—which is solely of love—and thus all happiness, come from the Lord alone. . .

33. It may be very well known to everyone that there is never any life without some love. . . but such as is the love, such is the life. . . The loves of self and of the world present something like life; but as they are quite contrary to true love. . . they are not loves, but hatreds. . . Therefore true love is love to the Lord; and true life is the life of love from Him ; and true joy is the joy of this life. There can only be one true love ; thus there can be only one true life, whence are true joys...

34. The celestial Angels . . . from love are in such life and light of intelligence that scarcely anything can be described ; whereas Spirits who are in the knowledge of the doctrinal things of faith without love, are in so frigid a life and obscure a light, that they cannot approach the first threshold of the court of the Heavens. Sig.

—<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) they who are in love are also in faith, and thus in heavenly life ; but not they who say that they are in faith, and not in the life of love. The life of faith without love, is like the light of the sun without heat . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. 'Winter' = the life of no love.

35. When the understanding is ruled by the will . . . they constitute one life . . . But when the understanding is at variance with the will, as is the case with those who say they have faith, but live otherwise, then the one mind is torn asunder into two . . .

37. Life without changes and varieties would be one single life, thus no life . . .

39. After the great luminaries have been kindled . . . the man for the first time begins to live. Before this, he can scarcely be said to have lived ; for the good which he did he supposed he did from himself, and the truth which he spoke he supposed he spoke from himself ; and as man from himself is dead . . . whatever he produces from himself is not alive . . . Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. Still, when the Lord resuscitates into life, or regenerates, a man, he at first permits him so to suppose . . .

41. Whatever is Proper to man has no life in it . . . whereas whatever is from the Lord has life ; and, when presented to view, it appears as what is human alive . . . Every word, idea, and least of thought of an angelic Spirit is alive. In his most singular things there is an affection proceeding from the Lord, who is life itself ; and therefore the things which are from the Lord have life in them, because they have faith in Him, and are here signified by 'the living soul.'

42. 'Fishes' = scientifics, here made animate through faith from the Lord, and thus alive.

43. Everything which has life from the Lord in it, fructifies and multiplies itself immensely . . .

44. Says he believes, and yet does not so live . . .

50. Without the communication of man through Spirits with the World of Spirits, and through Angels with Heaven, and thus through Heaven with the Lord, he could not possibly live. His life completely depends upon this conjunction . . .

56. See Food-cibus, here.

57<sup>o</sup>. 'The waters out of the sanctuary' = the life and mercy of the Lord . . .

59. Man's cupidities and Falsities cannot be abolished in a moment ; for this would be to destroy the whole man ; for he has acquired to himself no other life . . .

64. This, then, is the internal sense of the Word, its veriest life . . .

70<sup>o</sup>. For death is a continuation of life.

94. 'To inbreathe into his nostrils the breath of lives' (Gen.ii.7) = to give him the life of faith and of love ; 'and the man became a living soul' = that the external man also became alive.

95. It here treats of the life of the external man ; in the first two verses of the life of his faith or understanding, and in this one of the life of his love or will.

—<sup>8</sup>. The life of faith prepares the external man ; the life of love causes him to be man.

105. 'The tree of lives' (Gen.ii.9) = love and the derivative faith . . .

121. How the things which are of life proceed, may be evident from these rivers ; namely, from the Lord . . . is wisdom, through wisdom is intelligence, through intelligence reason, and thus through reason are vivified the scientifics which are of the memory. This is the order of life . . .

149<sup>2</sup>. The proprium of man is . . . dead . . . Whatever lives with him is from the Lord's life ; and if it were to recede, he would fall down as dead as a stone ; for he is only an organ of life ; but such as the organ is, such is the affection of life. The Lord alone has proprium . . . The Lord's proprium is life, from which proprium is vivified the proprium of man . . .

150. The state of a man when he is in proprium, or when he supposes that he lives from himself, is compared to sleep . . . That no one has any life from himself has been shown in the World of Spirits, inasmuch that evil Spirits, who . . . obstinately insist that they live from themselves, have been convinced by living experiences, and have confessed, that they do not live from themselves . . . It has been given me manifestly to perceive that every idea of thought has flowed in . . . Therefore, the man who supposes that he lives from himself, is in falsity ; and by believing that he lives from himself, he appropriates to himself all evil and falsity, which he never would appropriate to himself if he believed as the case really is.

155<sup>2</sup>. The Angels perceive that they live from the Lord ; and, when they do not reflect, they know no otherwise than that they live from themselves . . . They are in their peace and happiness . . . when they are in the general perception that they live from the Lord.

206<sup>2</sup>. If such were asked what it is to live from the Lord, they would think it to be phantasies.

233<sup>2</sup>. Man does evil . . . and yet he does not live except from the Lord.

290. She is called 'the mother of everyone living,' from faith in the Lord, who is life itself. There cannot possibly be more than one life, from which is the life of all ; and there cannot possibly be life, which is life, except through faith in the Lord, who is life ; nor faith, in which is life, except from Him, thus in which He is ; and therefore the Lord is called in the Word 'the Only Living,' 'the Living Jehovah,' 'He that liveth to eternity,' 'the Spring of life,' 'the Fountain of living waters.' Ill. Heaven, which lives from Him, is called 'the Land of the living.' Ill. Those are called 'the living' who are in faith in the Lord. And they who are in faith are said to be 'in the book of lives;' and 'in the book of life.' Therefore, also, those are said to be 'vivified,' who receive faith in Him. Ill. On the other hand, those not in faith, are called 'the dead.' Ill.

[A.] 303. Man acquires for himself life by all things which . . . he acknowledges and believes . . .

304. 'To take from the tree of lives, and eat' (Gen. iii.22)=to know even until he acknowledges whatever is of love and faith; for 'lives,' in the plural, =love and faith. . . 'To live to eternity,' is not to live to eternity in the body, but to live after death in eternal damnation . . .

316. (This goes on) until (the novitiate Spirit) associates himself with such as are in complete agreement with his life in the world, with whom he finds a life as it were his own; and then, wonderful to say (the novitiate Spirits) lead with them a like life to that which they had lived in the body. But, when they have relapsed into this life, there is then effected a new beginning of life; and some . . . are carried thence towards Hell; but those who have been in faith in the Lord, are from this new beginning of life led by degrees to Heaven.

320. On the nature of the life of a . . . Spirit. Gen. art.

322°. Life consists in sense; for without sense there is no life; and such as the sense is, such is the life.

443. He had believed that he should live (there) an obscure life, because if the life of the body were withdrawn, there would remain something obscure; for he had placed life in the body . . . and had confirmed himself from the fact that he saw the brutes also to have life, almost as men . . .

447. Man as to life is a Spirit, and his body only serves him to live upon the earth; bone and flesh, or the body, cannot possibly live and think.

652. There are in man two lives; one is of the will, and the other, is of the understanding. They become two lives when there is no will, but instead of will cupidity. The intellectual part is then that which can be reformed, and afterwards a new will can be given through it, so that they still constitute one life, namely, charity and faith.

657. Man places life solely in what is sensuous and scientific . . . when yet the case really is that the Lord inflows through the Intellectual with man into his Rational, and through the Rational into the Scientific of the memory: hence is the life of the senses, of sight and of hearing. . . Without an influx of the Lord's life into the intellectual things with man, or rather into the voluntary things, and through the voluntary into the intellectual things, and through the intellectual into the rational things, and through the rational things into his scientifics, which are of the memory, there could never be life with man: and although a man is in falsities and evils, still there is the influx of the Lord's life through the voluntary into the intellectual things; but the things which inflow are received in the rational part according to its form; and this causes that the man can reason, reflect, and understand what is true and good.

661<sup>3</sup>. Although there was no life of faith left, still, as they had derived from their parents something of the seed thence, which they had suffocated, it is here called 'the breath of lives' (Gen. vi. 17; vii.22).

668. In good and delight there is life; but not in truth, except what it has from good and delight.

671. With an unregenerate man . . . there can be rational and scientific truths, but they are not alive; there can also be as it were voluntary goods, such as there are with the gentiles, nay, with the brutes, but they are not alive . . . Such things are never alive with a man until he has been regenerated, and they are thus vivified by the Lord. In the other life it is very manifestly perceived what is not alive, and what is alive. The truth which is not alive is at once perceived as something material, filamentous, closed. Good not alive is perceived as something woody, bony, stony. Whereas truth and good vivified by the Lord are open, vital, full of what is spiritual and celestial, open even to the Lord; and this in every idea and action . . . Therefore it is now said, that 'pairs should enter into the ark to vivify.'

678. Goods and delights constitute the life of man; not so much truths; for truths receive their life from goods and delights . . .

687. As Heaven is such, no Angel or Spirit can ever have any life unless he is in some Society . . . for there is never possible the life of any one dissociated from the life of others. Nay, no Angel, Spirit, or Society, can ever have any life, that is, be affected with good, will, be affected with truth, think, unless there is a conjunction of him with Heaven and with the World of Spirits through a number of his own Society. In like manner the human race: no man whatever can ever live, that is, be affected with good, will, be affected with truth, think, unless he in like manner is conjoined with Heaven through the Angels with him; and with the World of Spirits, nay, with Hell, through the Spirits with him . . . 697.

—°. When, after the death of the body, men come into their own Society, they come into their veriest life which they had in the body, and from this they begin a new life; and thus, according to their life, which they had led in the body, they either descend to Hell, or are elevated to Heaven. 697<sup>2</sup>.

714. Man has a more interior life, which is never possible with beasts, which life is the life of faith and of love from the Lord; and unless this life were in each thing which he has in common with beasts, he would be nothing else [than they are]. Examp.

—<sup>2</sup>. Through the life which man has from the Lord, he lives after death, because the Lord adjoins him to Himself . . . And although a man may live like a wild beast . . . still the mercy of the Lord . . . does not leave him, but continually inspires his life into him through the Angels, which . . . gives him the power to think, reflect, and to understand whether a thing is good or evil . . . and thence whether it is true or false.

726<sup>2</sup>. The life which is not eternal is not life . . .

848. All regeneration is [to the end] that the man may receive new life, or rather that he may receive life, and become . . . a living man from a dead man; and therefore, when his former life, which is merely animal, is destroyed through temptations, he cannot do otherwise than fluctuate . . . between truth and falsity. Truth is of the new life, falsity is of the old. Unless the former life is destroyed . . . no spiritual seed can possibly be sown, for there is no ground.

920<sup>2</sup>. With the man of the Most Ancient Church, each and all things were as it were alive.

933<sup>2</sup>. When a man is being regenerated, he receives life from the Lord; for before he cannot be said to have lived; the life of the world and of the body is not life; but celestial and spiritual life alone is life. By regeneration by the Lord a man receives life itself; and as, before, he had no life, there alternates no life, and life itself; that is, no faith and charity, and some faith and charity. Sig.

977<sup>2</sup>. With a regenerate man there is celestial and spiritual life; but with an unregenerate man there is only corporeal and worldly life. The reason he can think and understand what is true and good, is from the Lord's life, through remains . . .

995. Corporeal and sensuous things . . . are dead; but they live from the delights which come from the interiors in order; from which it is evident that such as is the life of the interiors, such is the delight of pleasures; for in delight there is life. The delight in which there is good from the Lord is alone alive; for then it is from the very life of good.

1000. See SOUL, here.

—<sup>2</sup>. For . . . the new life, which the regenerate spiritual man receives from the Lord, is completely separated . . . from the man's Own life, which is not life, although it is called so, but is death, because it is infernal life. . . That they were not to commingle this new life . . . with the evil or excrementitious life which is of the man. Sig.

1026. 'Every living soul which is with you' (Gen. ix. 10) = all things with man which have been regenerated. . . Everything is called 'living' which receives life from the Lord . . . (and) according to the life which a regenerate man receives, does each thing with him live, both his rational things, and his affections. This life appears before the Angels in each thing of his thought and speech . . .

1040. 'The living soul,' properly = that which receives life from the Lord; that is, that which has been regenerated, because this alone lives . . . With man there are voluntary, and there are intellectual things . . . With a living man they are living; (for) such as is a man, such are each and all things with him; the general life is in each single thing . . . Therefore such as is the life of a man in general, such is his life in the singulars, nay, in the veriest singulars of his endeavour, and of his intention, or will; and in the veriest singulars of his thought; so that there cannot be the least of an idea in which there is not the like life. Examps.

—<sup>3</sup>. Then all things with the man are regenerated, that is, have life; and indeed they have life in proportion as his Own Voluntary . . . could be separated from the new Voluntary and Intellectual . . .

1050. 'Every living soul in all flesh' (Gen. ix. 15) = VOL. IV.

the universal human race. . . Every man is called 'a living soul' from that which is alive with him. No man can ever live, still less as a man, if he has not something alive with him; that is, unless he has something of innocence, charity, and mercy (that is, remains) . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. These remains with every man are what are here called 'the living soul in all flesh.'

1121. For thus man is conjoined with the Angels through their veriest life, which consists in such love.

1153<sup>2</sup>. Humiliation consists in the acknowledgment that with self there is nothing alive . . . (but) that everything alive . . . is from the Lord.

1197. The things of the memory are as dead, unless the man . . . lives according to them from conscience; (they then) are things of life . . . Knowledges are nothing with a man in the other life . . . unless they have imbued life.

1273. Thence they have (there) a new beginning of their life . . .

1293. 'To dwell' = to live.

1317<sup>2</sup>. The end with a man is his life itself . . . Therefore, such as is the end, such is the life of the man . . . (Hence) the life of a man is such as is his love.

1382<sup>o</sup>. The Angels . . . never have any idea of death; but only an idea of life.

1387. The difference of life between having perception, and not having it, is such as there is between darkness and light. We live to ourselves for the first time when we receive such perception; for then we live from the Lord.

1399. Every Spirit has communication with the Interior and the Inmost Heaven . . . otherwise he could not live . . . Such also is the case with man; he communicates through Angels with Heaven . . . for otherwise he could not live. The things which inflow thence into his thoughts are only the ultimate effects. Thence is all his life; and thence are ruled all the endeavours of his life.

1436. Every essential living thing which is possible in that obscure state. Sig. and Ex.

—, 'Soul,' in the proper sense, = that with man which lives; thus his life itself. That which lives with man is not the body, but the soul; and through the soul the body lives. The life itself of man . . . is from celestial love; there never can be anything living unless it thence derives its origin; therefore, here, by 'soul' is signified the good which lives from celestial love, which is the essential living thing itself.

1487. That his very life may consist in use, and be a life of uses.

1506. For if anyone in the other life is abandoned by his Society . . . he first becomes as if half-dead; his life being then sustained only by the influx of Heaven into his interiors.

1555<sup>2</sup>. Wisdom is predicated solely of life . . . He is introduced to wisdom or life by knowing . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Thus does the man for the first time receive new life, and this by degrees. The light of this life is called wisdom . . .

[A.] 1568<sup>3</sup>. Let a man reflect solely upon the ends which reign . . . thus will be evident the quality of his life, and of what quality it will be after death ; for the life is formed from the ends—or, what is the same, from the loves—which reign. The life of every man is never anything else.

1589<sup>2</sup>. Nothing ever lives with the external man except affection . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. For the good of love from the Lord continually inflows . . . but the man who is in . . . cupidity perverts the good ; but still his life remains thence . . .

1603<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord was life as to the internal man, so He became life as to the external man. This is what is meant by 'glorification.'

1621<sup>0</sup>. From this, infants get the idea that all things around them are alive.

1627. The decorations (there) move themselves as if alive . . .

1628. The angels . . . call the habitations on Earth dead and not real ; but their own living and true, because from the Lord. —<sup>2</sup>.

1643. The speech of angelic Spirits is incomprehensible . . . each and all things are as it were alive . . .

1679<sup>2</sup>. It is the life itself of man which desires, that is, which loves ; and, when he confirms with himself this life, or cupidity, or love, all the things which confirm it are falsities, and are implanted in his life. Such were the Antediluvians.

1690<sup>2</sup>. In the Word of the Lord's life . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. All temptation is against the love . . . To destroy anyone's love, is to destroy his life itself ; for the love is the life. The Lord's life was love towards the universal human race . . .

1718<sup>0</sup>. The body is only . . . a shell, which is dissolved in order that the man may truly live . . .

1735<sup>2</sup>. In love . . . is the esse of all life, that is, life itself ; and as Jehovah alone is the Esse of life, or life itself, because He alone is love, each and all things have thence their esse and their life ; nor can anyone be and live from himself except Jehovah alone . . . (therefore) it is a fallacy of sense that men seem to themselves to live from themselves. The Angels manifestly perceive that they do not live from themselves, but from the Lord, because they live in the Esse of the Lord's life, being in His love ; but still there is given them, above all others, the appearance as if they live from themselves, with unutterable happiness. This, therefore, is to live in the Lord, which is never possible unless we live in His love, that is, in charity towards the neighbour.

1742. That he should give them their life, and the rest they would not care about. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The life which evil Spirits have, and desperately love, is the life of the cupidities of the love of self and of the world, and thence the life of hatreds, revenges, and cruelties ; in no other life do they suppose there is any delight. They are like men—for they have been men, and from their life when they were men they retain this—who place all life in the delight of such cupidities, not knowing otherwise than that this life is the only one, and that when they lose it they will die altogether. But the nature of the life which they love is evident from such in the other life : it is turned into a stinking and excrementitious life ; and, wonderful to say, they perceive this stench as what is most delightful. Examp.

1767. When the Word of the Lord is being read by a man who loves the Word, and lives in charity . . . it is presented by the Lord before the Angels . . . so that each thing is perceived as if it had life. This is the life which is in the Word ; and from which the Word was born when it was sent down from Heaven.

1798<sup>2</sup>. The life itself is the internal of all worship, and thus everything doctrinal which flows from the life of charity.

1799. All in the Lord's Kingdom are 'heirs,' for they live from the Lord's life, which is the life of mutual love . . . The Lord's 'sons,' or 'heirs,' are all who are in His life, because their life is from Him . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. What is doctrinal does not distinguish Churches with the Lord, but life according to doctrinals ; which all, when true, regard charity as their fundamental.

—<sup>4</sup>. They would (then) say in their hearts, that he is a true Christian when he lives as a Christian, or as the Lord teaches.

1802. The Lord's life inflows through the Third Heaven into the Second, and through this into the First . . . besides that it also inflows immediately into all the Heavens.

—<sup>2</sup>. In so far, therefore, as they have of love and charity, they are 'sons' or 'heirs,' for so far they have life from the Lord.

1803. They who are being regenerated receive the Lord's life. The Lord's life . . . is Divine love, that is, love towards the universal human race . . . They who have not the Lord's love, that is, who do not love the neighbour as themselves, never have the Lord's life, thus have never been born from Him . . . and therefore cannot be heirs of His Kingdom.

1808<sup>2</sup>. For all celestial and spiritual things which are from the Lord are living and essential . . .

1820<sup>2</sup>. For man's life consists in his loves.

1854. They who die . . . pass from an obscure life into a clear one ; for the death of the body is only a continuation, and also perfection, of life . . .

1877. Souls . . . especially the evil, at first retain those things which they had in the life of their body . . .

1880<sup>4</sup>. Man was so created that while he lived on earth among men he was at the same time to live in Heaven among the Angels ; and the reverse . . .

1900. The very life of man is from the internal man, who can have no communication with the external man, except a very obscure one, until recipient vessels have been formed . . . which is effected by means of Knowledges and knowledges . . .

1904<sup>2</sup>. Regarded in themselves, good and truth are of no life, but derive life from love or affection. They are only instrumental things of life ; and therefore, such as is the love which affects good and truth, such is the life; for everything of life is of love or affection.

1909. The conjunction of the internal man with the life which is of the affection of knowledges. Sig. For 'Hagar' = the life of the exterior or natural man; which life is the life of the affection of knowledges.

— The life itself of the internal man inflows into all the affections of the natural man, but is there varied according to the ends. When it inflows into affections which have the world as the end, this end is vivified by that life, and it becomes a worldly life; when into affections which have self as the end, this end is vivified by that life, and it becomes a corporeal life; and so with all the rest. Hence it is that cupidities and phantasies live, but a life contrary to the affection of good and truth.

—<sup>2</sup>. The influent life is not applied to any other object than the end, because everyone's end is his love, and love alone is what lives; all other objects are only derivations thence, which derive their life from the end. Everyone can see the quality of the life he has, provided he explores the quality of his end . . .

1911<sup>2</sup>. It is an intellectual truth that all life is from the Lord; but the Rational first conceived . . . supposes that if it did not live from itself it would have nothing of life . . . 1936.

1928. 'Shnur' = such a Scientific . . . as has not as yet acquired life. . . The life itself of truths is from (the Celestial of love) . . . Things, or truths, which are not conjoined together according to the form of the heavenly Societies, have not as yet acquired life; for before this the Celestial of love from the Lord cannot inflow suitably. They first receive life when the form is alike on both sides . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Besides, the truths of faith never have any life, unless the man lives in charity . . . for there is life in charity . . .

1937<sup>6</sup>. In all freedom is the life of man, because it is his love.

— Thus is appropriated to them the life of celestial love.

1944. The life of the rational man. Sig.

1957. See FOUNTAIN, here.

1964. When the life of the affection of knowledges brought forth the Rational. Sig.

— Scientifics and Knowledges must have use as the end, and when they have use, they have life as the end; for all life is of uses, because of ends. Unless they are learned for the sake of a life of uses, they are of no moment . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But when they have use as the end, they then receive life from uses; but such a life as is the use. They who learn Knowledges in order to be perfected in the faith of love . . . receive from the Lord spiritual and celestial life; and, when they are in this life, they are in the faculty of perceiving all things which are of the Lord's Kingdom. In this life are all the Angels; and, because they are in this life, they are in intelligence and wisdom itself.

1999<sup>2</sup>. By means of this Internal, man lives after death, and to eternity.

—<sup>4</sup>. These Internals of men have not life in themselves, but are forms recipient of the Lord's life . . . 2004<sup>2</sup>.

2021<sup>2</sup>. For . . . the Lord is life, and His Human Essence was also made life . . . and there is union of life with life: but man is not life, but a recipient of life . . . When life inflows into a recipient of life, there is conjunction; for it is adapted to it as an active to a passive, or as what is alive in itself to what is dead in itself, which thence lives. . . From himself man is not alive, but the Lord from mercy adjoins him to Himself, and thus causes him to live to eternity . . .

2025. As man acquires for himself life especially by means of instruction in scientifics, doctrinals, and the Knowledges of faith, 'sojourning' = the life thus acquired. As applied to the Lord, it = the life which He acquired for Himself by means of Knowledges, combats of temptations, and victories in them . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. It is this life (of charity) which saves after death, and never any life of faith without charity; for without charity the life of faith is impossible. They who are in the life of love and charity are in the Lord's life.

— To receive the life of charity . . . in the other life, when they have had none in the life of the body, is never possible; but their life in the world remains with them after death . . .

2116<sup>2</sup>. The life contracted (from hatreds, etc.) remains with them after death; nay, each and all things of this life, which successively return . . . With those who have lived in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour, the evils of life also all remain, but they are tempered with the goods which they have received from the Lord through the life of charity, while they lived in the world, and thus they are elevated into Heaven . . .

2119<sup>2</sup>. But, as the desires of everyone follow him, he who has led an evil life cannot stay long with the Angels and good Spirits, but successively separates himself from them . . . until he comes to Spirits of like life to that which he had in the world. It then appears to him as if he were in the life of his body; in itself, moreover, it is a continuation of the life. From this life his Judgment begins. They who have led an evil life, in process of time descend into Hell; they who have led a good life, are by degrees elevated by the Lord into Heaven. Such is the Last Judgment of each one.

2121. They are not cast down into the Hells in a moment, because it is according to the laws of order that every such person should return into his own life which he had in the body, and thence by degrees be carried down into Hell.

2173<sup>2</sup>. The things which are not in such a marriage do not live.

2189<sup>3</sup>. In truth there is not life, but in good; truth is only a recipient of life, that is, of good.

2196<sup>2</sup>. For example: That man has no life except what is from the Lord. The Rational from appear-ancees supposes that in that case a man could not live as of himself; when yet he truly lives for the first time when he perceives that he does so from the Lord.

[A.] 2209<sup>2</sup>. Each affection of a man, nay, each idea of his thought, is his image, and such that in it a marvellous way there are all things of his life.

2219<sup>3</sup>. Love to God and love towards the neighbour should be the life of man, by which he should be distinguished from brute animals . . .

2249<sup>2</sup>. These things are presented to the life . . .

2253. With the Lord, when He was in the world, there was no other life than the life of love towards the universal human race . . . This life is the veriest celestial life by which He united Himself to the Divine, and the Divine to Himself . . . This life was one of pure love, which is never possible with any man. They who do not know what life is, and that the life is such as is the love, do not apprehend it. Hence it is evident, that in proportion as anyone loves the neighbour, he has the Lord's life.

2261<sup>2</sup>. Regarded in themselves, truths do not give life, but goods. Truths are only recipients of life, that is, of good . . .

— . With those who live in things contrary to charity, there can never be acknowledgment, but some persuasion, to which is adjoined the life of the love of self or of the world. Thus in this acknowledgment there is not the life of faith, which is of charity.

—<sup>3</sup>. The life of truths, thus of faith, is from the Lord alone, who is life itself. The Lord's life is mercy, which is of love towards the universal human race. Those can never have of the Lord's life, who, although they profess the truths of faith, despise others in comparison with themselves; and, when their life of the love of self and of the world is touched, bear hatred against the neighbour, and perceive delight in the loss of his wealth, honour, reputation, and life.

2268<sup>e</sup>. The Angels as it were dwell in the truths of a man, and insinuate affections of good from the Lord, when the man lives in love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour; for they are delighted thus to dwell, that is, to live, with such men . . .

2280<sup>e</sup>. Not so with those who . . . have led a life in things contrary to good.

2284<sup>3</sup>. Therefore it is never allowable for a man to judge concerning another as to the quality of his spiritual life; for the Lord alone . . . knows this: but every one is allowed to judge concerning another, of his quality as to moral and civil life.

— . See CHARITY, here. —<sup>5</sup>.

2297<sup>e</sup>. From this (the infants) get that heavenly idea, that each and all things around them are alive; and that they are in the Lord's life, which affects their inmosts with happiness.

2298. There was shown me . . . the nature of the ideas of the infants when they see any objects. They were as if each and all things were alive; so that they had life in each idea of their thought; and it was perceived that the ideas are almost the same with infants on Earth, when they are at play.

2305. The innocence of intelligence and wisdom is such, that they acknowledge that they have life from the Lord alone . . .

2311<sup>e</sup>. As the body lives through the soul, so does the literal sense through the internal sense; through the latter the Lord's life inflows into the former, according to the affection of him who is reading it.

2357<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the life of evil are admitted no further than to the Knowledge of good and of the Lord, but not as far as to the veriest acknowledgment and faith . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. This is the reason why at this day it is granted to so few to believe from the heart . . . for they are in the life of evil.

2363. When they are shown that life itself . . . begins when (the delight of the love of self and of the world is taken away) they feel a certain sadness . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Heaven, that is, angelic life, consists in this . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. For, after death there remains with everyone the life, or, what is the same, the affection; according to this, then, is all the thought . . .

2367<sup>2</sup>. (For) a man who has been in the good of love and of charity, when he passes into the other life, comes from an obscure life into a clearer one, as from a kind of night into day; and, in proportion as he comes into the Lord's Heaven, into a still clearer one . . .

2383<sup>4</sup>. It would be better that they should be in Falsities than in truths, because they are in the life of evil . . . Sig. and Ex.

2454<sup>e</sup>. When yet life according to doctrine makes the man of the Church, and not doctrine separated from life; for when doctrine is separated from life, then, because there is vastated good, which is of life, there is also vastated truth, which is of doctrine, that is, it becomes a statue of salt . . .

2475<sup>e</sup>. So that after death he leaves nothing whatever behind, except the mere bones and flesh, which, while he lived in the world, were not animated of themselves, but by the life of his spirit . . .

2480<sup>e</sup>. It is the affection itself which gives life; the affection of evil which gives life to falsities, and the affection of good which gives life to truths.

2531<sup>r</sup>. 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life' (John xiv.6); where 'the Way'=doctrine; 'the Truth,' everything which is of doctrine; 'the Life,' good itself, which is the life of truth.

2556<sup>e</sup>. As to his spirit, man is so conjoined with those who are outside of him, that if he were deprived of the connection thence, he would not live even for a moment.

2649<sup>e</sup>. They do not know that such as is the life, such is the man; and that the Divine Esse of life, or Jehovah, was in the Lord from conception; and that the like Esse of life came forth in His Human by the union.

2658. That the merely human Rational could not have a common life with the Divine Rational itself, neither as to truth, nor as to good. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. (For) the Divine is life itself, and thus has life in Itself; but what is merely human is an organ of life, and thus has not life in itself. When the Human of the Lord had been made Divine, it was no longer an organ of life, or a recipient of life, but was life itself, such as is that of Jehovah Himself. It first had this from the very conception from Jehovah, as is clearly evident from the words of the Lord Himself: 'As the Father has life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself' (John v.26). In the same: 'In Him was life, and the life was the light of men' (i.4). In the same: 'Jesus said, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life' (xiv.6). In the same: 'Jesus said, I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in Me, although he were dead, shall live' (xi.25). In the same: 'The Bread of God is He who cometh down from Heaven, and giveth life to the world' (vi.33).

— . But that man is not life; but an organ or recipient of life. Ref.

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'to inherit,' when predicated of the Lord, =to have the life of the Father, thus in Himself; and, when predicated of men, =to have the Lord's life, that is, to receive life from the Lord, is evident from many passages of the Word.

— . To have life in Himself is the Esse itself of life, that is, Jehovah; but to have the Lord's life, or to receive life from the Lord, is to receive the Lord in love and faith; and, because these are in the Lord, and are the Lord's, they are called His 'heirs,' and 'sons.'

—<sup>5</sup>. Heaven is here called 'life eternal,' elsewhere, simply 'life' (Ill.); for the reason that the Lord is life itself; and he who receives His life is in Heaven.

2689<sup>e</sup>. The life of everyone is nothing else than affection or love.

—<sup>4</sup>. The real reason they admit things doubtful, and afterwards things negative, originates from the life of evil. They who are in the life of evil can never do otherwise. The life of everyone . . . is affection or love; and such as is the affection or love such is the thought . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. It is otherwise with those who are in the life of good; truth itself has its ground there, and its heart, and its life from the Lord.

2697. The good of truth manifests itself only in the affection of truth, and afterwards in a life according to truth. . . (But) truth without good is of no life; and therefore by truth separated from good there is not any new life.

2702<sup>e</sup>. 'Streams of living water,' and 'living fountains of waters'=the truths which are from the Lord, or from His Word . . . The good of love and of charity, which is from the Lord alone, is the life of truth.

2706. The Lord is indeed present with everyone; for life is from no other source; and rules his most singular things . . . but diversely according to the reception of life. With those who receive His life of the love of good and truth wrongly, and pervert it into the loves of evil and of falsity, the Lord is present, and rules their ends so far as possible to good; but His presence with them is called absence . . . But with those who receive the Lord's life of the love of good and truth, there is predicated presence . . .

2708. With the celestial, the good of love is implanted in their voluntary part, where is the principal life of man; but with the spiritual in their intellectual part, where is the secondary life of man . . .

2715. The voluntary part is what principally lives with man; but the intellectual part lives thence.

—<sup>e</sup>. The spiritual man . . . debates whether it is so, unless he has been confirmed by much life.

2718. In this verse is described the spiritual man, of what quality he is as to good, that is, as to the essence of his life. . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Thus that in the good of love from the Lord there is heavenly life, but not in the truth of faith separated thence.

2776<sup>e</sup>. Believe themselves . . . saved . . . however they have lived through the whole course of their life.

2826<sup>3</sup>. But still they do not come into internal worship, or into holy fear, unless they are in the good of life . . .

2839<sup>e</sup>. But faith becomes intelligence and wisdom when it is implanted in charity, that is, in life.

2871. In the freedom (which is of the loves of self and of the world) consists the life (of infernal Spirits), inasmuch that if it is taken away from them, they have no more life left than a newly born infant. . . A certain evil Spirit was in the persuasion that such things could be taken away from him . . . thus that his life could be miraculously transcribed into heavenly life; and therefore these loves with their cupidities were taken away from him . . . and he was then seen like an infant swimming with his hands . . . From which it was evident that it is impossible for one who has acquired a life from the love of self and of the world . . . to come into Heaven; for if such a life were taken away, he would not have anything of thought and will left.

2873<sup>e</sup>. Hence all in the other life are distinguished according to freedoms, or, what is the same, according to loves and affections, consequently according to the delights of life, which is the same as according to lives; for lives are nothing else than delights; and these are nothing else than affections, which are of loves.

[A.] 2875°. To receive anything contrary to the affection, is to receive it contrary to the life . . .

2878°. The Lord alone disposes and rules in application to the genius and life of each one . . .

2880. For all affection, which is of love, is man's veriest life; and to act from the affection is to act from the life, that is, from self . . .

2887. If these Spirits and Angels were taken away from man, he would be instantly devoid of will and thought, thus of no life.

2888. The case with the life of everyone, whether man, Spirit, or Angel, is this: that it inflows solely from the Lord, who is life itself; and diffuses itself through the universal Heaven, and even through Hell; thus into each one; and this in an incomprehensible series and order. But the life which inflows is received by each one according to his nature; good and truth are received by the good as good and truth, but good and truth are received by the evil as evil and falsity, and are also with them turned into evil and falsity . . .

2889. Evil Spirits can scarcely at all apprehend that they do not live from themselves, and that they are only organs of life; still less that there is no life except what is from good and truth; and still less that they do not begin to live until the life of the cupidities of evil and of the persuasions of falsity in which they are has been extinguished. They believe that if they were deprived of these things, nothing of life could be left: when yet the case is, that when they should have lost the life of the cupidities of evil and of the persuasions of falsity, they would then for the first time begin to live; and that before this the Lord is not received with the good and truth in which alone life consists; and that then intelligence and wisdom, thus the veriest life, inflows, and is afterwards immensely increased, and this with . . . inmost joy; and this with unutterable variety to eternity.

2904. 'The lives of Sarah were' (Gen. xxiii. 1) = the Church's times and states as to Divine truths, which preceded. . . 'Lives,' here, because they have regard to age and the periods of age . . . = states . . . and as it treats in what follows about the Church, therefore 'lives' = the times and states of the Church. 2906.

2913. All the doctrinal things (of the Ancient Church) were of charity, or life.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Heth' = exterior Knowledges which regard life.

2916. 'A sepnulchre' . . . = life, or Heaven; and, in the opposite sense, death, or Hell. Ex. . .

— . Through regeneration, man, from dead, becomes alive.

3001. There is but one only life, which is the Lord's, and which inflows and causes man to live . . . To this life correspond the recipients, which are vivified through this Divine influx, and indeed so that they appear to themselves to live from themselves. This correspondence is that of life with the recipients of life. As the recipients are, so do they live. Those men who are in love and charity, are in correspondence; for they agree, and the life is received by them adaptedly. But those who are in things contrary to love and charity, are not in the correspondence, because the life itself is not received adaptedly; thence they have such an appearance of life as they are. This may be illustrated by many things, as by the motory and sensory organs of the body, into which life inflows through the soul; such as these are, such are their actions and sensations . . . But, in the Spiritual World, all the modifications which come forth from the influx of life, are spiritual; hence such are the differences of intelligence and wisdom. 3484.

3103. 'The nose' = the life of good, from the respiration which is therein, which, in the internal sense, is life; and also from the odour . . .

3158<sup>2</sup>. For the things which are of the will constitute the esse of a man's life; but the things which are of the understanding constitute the derivative existence of his life.

3161<sup>2</sup>. Truths are first appropriated to the man when he begins to love them for the sake of life; and still more when he applies them to life . . .

3175°. Man first begins to live, when that perishes which in the world he believes to be the all of life; and the life which then succeeds is relatively unutterable and indefinite.

—<sup>3</sup>. For good is life.

3241°. They form together one Church . . . when they regard life as the end of doctrine; that is, they inquire how the man of the Church lives, and not so much what his opinion is; for everyone is endowed by the Lord with a lot in the other life according to the good of life, and not according to the truth of doctrine separated from the good of life.

3242. No one is admitted into the Lord's Kingdom except him who is in the good of faith; for the good of faith is of life. The life of faith remains, but not the doctrine of faith, except in so far as this makes one with the life . . .

— . They fear to speak of the good of life, because the life condemns them.

3248. 'While he was yet living' (Gen.xxv.6) = to whom he could give life . . . For by Abraham is here represented the Lord as to the Divine Human, (from which) the spiritual have life; and, as they have life thence, the Lord is said to live with them . . . Life is given to the spiritual by means of the good of faith. Sig.

3249. Charity towards the neighbour is nothing else than a life according to the Lord's precepts.

3251. 'These are the days of the years of the lives of Abraham which he lived' (ver.7)= a state representative of the Lord as to the Divine Itself. . . 'Lives,' here, also=states.

3263<sup>2</sup>. 'Ishmael,' and also 'the Ishmaelites' . . . = those of the Lord's Spiritual Church who as to life are in simple good, and therefore as to doctrine are in natural truth.

3267<sup>2</sup>. He who is in charity . . . excuses his neighbour for dissenting from him in matters of belief, provided he lives in good and truth . . . For he who lives in charity, that is, in good, receives truths from the Lord such as agree with his good . . . Whereas he who does not live in charity, that is, in good, can never receive any truth. He can indeed know truth, but it is not implanted in his life . . . and therefore they who know truths . . . and do not live in charity, or in good, although they are in the Church, because born therein, are nevertheless not of the Church . . .

3293. From the delight therein the Natural has its life . . . In order that the Natural may be human, it must consist of both (good and truth) . . . but it has its life itself from good.

—<sup>2</sup>. This good . . . is twofold . . . interiorly it communicates with the . . . Rational, exteriorly with . . . the things of the body, and makes the life in the external senses, and also in the actions. Without a communication both ways, man cannot live either with the reason or the body. It is the interior communication which remains with man after death, and there makes his natural life; for a Spirit also has a natural life; for his spiritual life is terminated in his natural life as in an ultimate plane; for a man after death cannot think immediately, except from those things which are of his Natural . . .

3299<sup>2</sup>. Good is what gives life, but through truth . . .

3305. That which is of life is of the will; that which is of doctrine is of the understanding; the former is called good, and the latter truth . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. 'Jacob,' and 'Israel' . . . = the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom and Church, which is the Church from the doctrine of truth and the life of good . . .

3318<sup>2</sup>. Man is nothing else than an organ or vessel which receives life from the Lord; for man does not live from himself. Refs. The life which inflows with man from the Lord is from His Divine love; this, or the life thence, inflows and applies itself to the vessels which are in the Rational, and which are in the Natural of man. These vessels . . . are in a contrary position relatively to the life, in consequence of the hereditary evil into which man is born, and in consequence of the actual evil which he himself acquires; but in proportion as the life which inflows can dispose the vessels to receive it, it does dispose them. These vessels in the Rational of man, and in his Natural, are those which are called truths, and in themselves are nothing else than perceptions of the variations of the forms of these vessels, and of the changes of state according to which the variations come forth in different ways, which take place in the most subtle substances, in inexpressible ways. The good itself, which has life from the Lord, or which is life, is that which inflows and disposes. As, therefore, these vessels, which are to be varied as to their forms, are in a contrary position and turning, relatively to the life, it may be evident that they must be reduced into a position according to the life, or in compliance with the life. This cannot possibly be done so long as man is in that state into which he was born, and into which he has reduced himself, for they are not obedient, because they are stiffly resistant, and harden themselves against the heavenly order according to which the life acts; for the good which moves them, and to which they are compliant, is of the love of self and of the world . . . and therefore, before they can become compliant, and be fit for receiving anything of the life of the Lord's love, they have to be softened. This softening is effected by no other means than temptations . . . When, therefore, they have been a little tempered and mastered through temptations, these vessels then begin to become yielding and compliant to the life of the Lord's love, which continually inflows with the man. Hence, then, it is, that the good, first in the rational man, and afterwards in the natural, begins to be conjoined with the truths there; for the truths . . . are nothing else than perceptions of the variations of the form according to the states which are continually changing; and the perceptions are from the life which inflows.

3324. It treats in these verses . . . concerning the right of priority, whether it belongs to truth or to good; or, what is the same, whether it belongs to the doctrine of truth or to the life of good . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. That the affection of good is of life, and the affection of truth for the sake of life. Ref.

3325<sup>4</sup>. (For) in good there is life, but not in truth except what it has from good; and good inflows into truths and causes them to live.

—<sup>11</sup>. The Church . . . then no longer studies life, but doctrine; and when it does this, it casts itself into shades, and falls into falsities and evils . . . Sig.

3335. 'He went'=life. 'To go'=to progress into the things which are of good, that is, into the things which are of life, for all good is of life. Almost the same is signified by 'to journey,' 'to sojourn,' and 'to progress.'

3337<sup>2</sup>. The things which come forth (from man's interior imagination, or from his thought) are in themselves inanimate, but they become animate from the influx of life from the Lord.

3338. The heat of Heaven . . . makes the life of the internal man; and (the heat of the world) the life of the external man; for without love and affection man cannot live at all. . . These heats become loves and affections from the influx of the Lord's life, and thence appear to man as if they were not heats, but still they are . . . It is this heat from which the will of man lives ; but the light treated of above is that from which his understanding lives.

[A.] 3344<sup>2</sup>. In a word, by representatives adjoined to ideas, speech as it were is alive ; least of all with man . . . more so with the Angels of the First Heaven ; still more so with the Angels of the Second ; and the most of all with the Angels of the Third Heaven ; for these are proximately in the Lord's life. Whatever is from the Lord is in itself alive.

3347<sup>2</sup>. (The Angels said) that the faculty (of acting) is not of the fibres, but of the life in the fibres ; just as the faculty of thinking is not of the mind, but of the life from the Lord which inflows into it.

3387<sup>2</sup>. Without vessels, or receptacles, good does not find a place . . . and therefore where there are no truths . . . there is no rational or human good, consequently the man has no spiritual life. In order, therefore, that man may still have truths, and thence spiritual life, appearances of truth are given . . .

3416<sup>2</sup>. Not that the Lord leaves them, but that they remove themselves from the Lord, because from the things which are of life.

3417. That the Lord disposed truths so that they might be adapted to the apprehension and genius of those who are not so much in life, but are in the doctrinal things of faith. Sig. and Examp.

3420<sup>2</sup>. He, therefore, who teaches what is to be done, and does not do it, does not want to know truths ; for they are against his life ; and the things which are against his life he also denies.

3424. 'A well of living waters' (Gen.xxvi.19)=the Word, in which are Divine truths ; thus the Word as to the literal sense in which is the internal sense. . . As in this sense the Word is . . . heavenly and Divine, its waters are called 'living.' Ill.

—'. 'The waters which make everything to live' (Ezek.xlvii.9)=the Divine truths which are in the Word.

—<sup>2</sup>. That the Word of the Lord is such that it gives life to him that thirsteth, that is, to him who longs for life ; and that it is a fountain whose waters are living, the Lord teaches in John iv.10,14. . . That the Word is alive, and thus gives life, is from this,—that in the supreme sense it treats of the Lord, and in the inmost of His Kingdom, in which the Lord is the all ; and this being the case, it is life itself which is in the Word, and which inflows into the minds of those who read the Word in holiness . . .

3451<sup>3</sup>. For example : if anyone acknowledges as a doctrinal that charity is from faith, and lives in charity towards the neighbour, then indeed he is not in truth as to doctrine, but still he is in truth as to life ; consequently he is in . . . the Lord's Kingdom. Again : if anyone says that good works are to be done in order that we may have a reward in Heaven . . . and yet when he does good works never thinks of merit ; he in like manner is in the Lord's Kingdom, because as to life he is in truth ; and as he is such as to life, he suffers himself to be easily instructed . . .

3459. Abimelech . . . represents those who make faith the essential of the Church, and set it before charity. They who are such are not in any good, except the good of truth ; for they elicit and imbibe nothing else from the Word than the things . . . of truth ; but those which are of good, thus which are of life, they scarcely sec . . .

3485. The representations which come forth in the other life are appearances, but living ones, because they are from the light of life. The light of life is the Divine wisdom.

3498. Life in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

—'. The life of the Rational or of the internal man is distinct from the life of the Natural or of the external man, and indeed so distinct that the life of (the former) exists beyond the life of (the latter) ; but the life of (the latter) cannot exist without the life of (the former) ; for the External lives from the Internal, inasmuch that if the life of the internal man were to cease, the life of the external man would at once become none . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But when man lives in the body . . . the life of the Rational appears in the Natural, inasmuch that there does not appear to be any life in the Rational, if it is not at the same time in the Natural . . . Hence it may be evident that it is a life in the Natural which corresponds, which is signified by these words which Isaac said to Esau, 'I know not the day of my death' . . .

3528<sup>2</sup>. All the Perceptive . . . comes forth from good . . . For the Lord's Divine life inflows into good, and through it into truth, and thus presents perception.

3539<sup>4</sup>. (Some) who are in no love . . . or charity . . . well apprehend this . . . that love is the life itself of man ; and that the life is such as is the love.

—'. From the understanding a man can also apprehend this, although his will dissents . . . that the happiest life is from love to the Lord and from love towards the neighbour, because the Divine Itself inflows into it ; and on the other hand, that the most unhappy life is from the love of self and the love of the world, because Hell inflows into it.

—<sup>3</sup>. Hence also it can be perceptible before the understanding, but not before the will, that love to the Lord is the life of Heaven, and that mutual love is the soul from that life . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. With the evil there is not any affection of truth for the sake of life, that is, for the sake of the good of life from truth ; and therefore they cannot be reformed ; whereas with the good there is the affection of truth for the sake of life, that is, for the sake of the good of life, and therefore these can be reformed. But the first state of the reformation of these is that the truth of doctrine appears to them to be in the first place, and the good of life in the second, for they act good from truth ; whereas their second state is that the good of life is in the first place, and the truth of doctrine in the second ; for they act good from good, that is, from the will of good . . .

3570<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the man who lives only a natural life cannot know anything about the things which are going on with him in his internal man . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. As a man's ends are of his loves, they are his inmost life. Refs.

3579. Almost as the life builds up the fibres in man, and disposes them into forms according to uses . . .

3600. Life from Divine good . . . and from Divine truth. Sig.

3603<sup>2</sup>. All those do not know what good is who pass a life of the love of self and of the world . . . and as they do not know what good is, they do not know what truth is; for truth is of good . . . 3612.

3607. The inversion and privation of the life of truth from itself. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For truth has no life from itself, but from good . . . and in good there is life, but not in truth except what it has from good. Refs. And therefore the privation of the life of truth from itself is not the extinction of truth, but its vivification; for when truth appears to have life from itself, it then has no life, except such as in itself is not life; whereas when it is deprived of this, then it is endowed with life itself, namely, through good from the Lord, who is life itself . . . 3610, Ex.

3610. For in the love of self and of the world . . . there is not life, but in celestial and spiritual love . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. (But) they who are in the affection of self and of the world believe that no other life can be possible, consequently that if they were deprived of this life, they would not live at all. For they who are in this life cannot possibly know what spiritual and celestial life is; when yet the case is that when they are deprived of this life . . . then life inflows from the Lord . . . with wisdom and happiness unutterable; and when their prior life is regarded from this life it appears as no life, or like the sordid life of brute animals; for there is nothing of what is Divine in it beyond that they can think and speak, and thus appear like others in the external form.

3623. 'Wherefore have I lives?' (Gen. xxvii. 46) = that thus there is no conjunction; (for) 'lives' = conjunction through truths and goods . . .

— The reason here and elsewhere 'lives' are mentioned, in the plural, is that there are two faculties of life in man; one which is called the understanding, and is of truth; and the other which is called the will, and is of good. These two lives, or faculties of life, make one, when the understanding is of the will, or, what is the same, when truth is of good. Hence it is that in the Hebrew language, 'life' is sometimes mentioned, and sometimes 'lives.' (The latter ill.)

—<sup>e</sup>. As regards 'lives,' these in the plural = both that which is of the will and that which is of the understanding; consequently, what is of good and what is of truth. For the life of man is nothing except good and truth in which there is life from the Lord; for man, without good and truth, and the life in them, is no man; for without them man could will nothing, and think nothing: all his will is from good or non-good, and his thought from truth or non-truth; hence man has lives, which are one life, when the thought is from the will, that is, when the truth which is of faith is from the good which is of love.

3628<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is evident that there must always be two forces, for anything to come forth and subsist. The forces which inflow and act inwardly are from Heaven, and through Heaven from the Lord, and have life in them. . . Unless there were interior modifications, which are of life, to which corresponded the exterior modifications which are of the air, there would be no hearing . . . and unless there were an interior light, which is of life, to which corresponded the exterior light which is of the sun, there would be no sight.

3646. With brute animals the case is the same as to influxes and correspondences as it is with men, namely, that with them there is an influx from the Spiritual World, and an afflux from the natural world, by means of which they are held together and live; but the operation itself presents itself diversely according to the forms of their souls and thence of their bodies . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. It is the ends which show the nature of the life which man has; and the nature of that which a beast has . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason very many men do not know how to distinguish between their own life and the life of beasts, is that they are in like manner in external things . . .

3647. It has been given to see . . . some . . . who in the life of their body had looked solely to earthly things. . . They had been of the sailor and rustic crowd. They appeared . . . to have so little of life, that I supposed that they could not be allotted life eternal, like other Spirits. They were like machines, but little animated. But the Angels had care of them solicitously; and, by means of the faculty which they had as men, insinuated into them the life of good and truth; and thus they were led on from a life like that of animals into human life.

3648. There is also an influx from the Lord, through Heaven, into the subjects of the vegetable kingdom . . . But the forms there are such that they do not receive anything of life . . .

3672. The life of instructions. Sig.

— 'To inherit' = to have another's life; here, life from the Divine.

— 'The Land' = where the life is.

—<sup>a</sup>. The life of instructions . . . is the life of good from truth . . . for when a man lives according to the truths in which he is being instructed, he is then in the life of instructions.

3679<sup>2</sup>. But the external man is in the light of the world, in which there is no intelligence, and not even life.

—<sup>3</sup>. The like is the case with all the life which appears in the external man, in that it is the life of the internal man in him, as in its material and corporeal organ.

—<sup>5</sup>. (The quality of Spirits) is entirely according to the affections, and the derivative thought of things, in the life of the body; that is, according to the state of life which they have acquired in the world. Ex.

3690. Life more remote from Divine doctrinal things. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. When (anyone) is delighted with this historical alone, he is in the life of external truth, remote from Divine doctrinal things. Afterwards, when he begins to be delighted and affected with the commands or precepts which are therein, and lives according to them, he is then in the life of truth, but is still remote from Divine doctrinal things themselves; for the life according to those things is only moral life, the precepts of which are known to all who are in human society, from the civil life and the laws there; as that the Deity is to be worshipped, parents to be honoured, murder not to be committed, nor adultery, nor theft.

[A. 3690]<sup>1</sup>. But he who is being regenerated, is by degrees led on from this more remote life, into a life nearer to Divine doctrinal things, that is, into spiritual life . . .

3696. Moreover, every man is in a state of tranquillity in the beginning of his life, or in his infancy; but in proportion as a man advances in life . . . he removes himself from that state . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The case is nearly the same with the new life, with the man who is being regenerated . . .

3701<sup>4</sup>. These and the like (imperfect) Knowledges are of the infancy of man's new life; and are such . . . as derive something from his former life, or from the nature of his former life, and also something from the new life, into which he is thus introduced . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. But they who are being regenerated, do not learn such things barely as knowledges, but as life; for they do these truths . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. This state is that of infancy and childhood as to the new life, which is to succeed in place of the former life. But the state of the adolescence and young manhood of his life, is that no respect is had to any person such as he appears in the external form, but such as he is as to good; first in civil life; next in moral life; and at last in spiritual life . . .

3702. And thus, through man as the uniting medium, the ultimate of nature itself would live from the Divine; which would be, if man had lived according to Divine order.

—<sup>2</sup>. Besides that the things (in nature) which are still more hidden would be perceived in his interior organs, if his life were according to order.

3742. That there is one only life, and that from the Lord alone, and that Angels, Spirits, and men are only recipients of life, has been made known to me by experience so manifold, that not even the slightest doubt is left. Heaven itself is in the perception that it is so, inasmuch that the Angels manifestly perceive the influx; and also how it inflows, and how much and in what way they receive it. When they are in a fuller state of reception, they are in their peace and happiness . . . But still the Lord's life is so appropriated to them that they perceive as if they live from themselves, but still they know that it is not from themselves. The appropriation of the Lord's life comes from His love and mercy towards the universal human race, in that He wants to give Himself and what is His to everyone; and actually does give in so far as they receive; that is, in so far as they are His likenesses and images in the life of good and in the life of truth. And as there is such a Divine endeavour continually from the Lord, His life . . . is appropriated.

3743. Those, however, who are not in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour, consequently who are not in the life of good and truth, cannot acknowledge that there is one only life which inflows, and still less that this life is from the Lord; but they are all indignant, and even feel aversion, when it is said that they do not live of themselves. The love of self is what does this; and, what is surprising, although they are shown by living experiences in the other life that they do not live of themselves, and then, on being convinced, say that it is so, still they afterwards persist in the same opinion, and suppose that if they lived from another, and not of themselves, all their delight of life would perish; not knowing that the exact contrary is the fact. Hence it is that the evil appropriate to themselves . . . and that good cannot be appropriated to them . . . But still the evil, and also the infernals, are forms recipient of life from the Lord; but such forms that they either reject, suffocate, or pervert, good and truth; and thus, with them, the goods and truths which are from the Lord's life, become evils and falsities . . .

3748. Such as they have been in the life of the body, such are they in the other life; for all things which are of anyone's life, that is, which are of love and affection, follow him, and are in him, as the soul is in its body, because he has formed his soul from them as to its quality.

3762<sup>2</sup>. But still (these truths) are not acknowledged, believed, and imbued, unless there is a life according to them; for then the man comes into affection, and in proportion as he comes into affection from life, they are implanted in his Natural . . .

3824<sup>o</sup>. (Truths) are not conjoined, until the man is affected with them for the sake of the use of life, or until they are loved for the sake of life; for then good is coupled with them, through which they are conjoined with the Rational . . . Through this way there is an influx of life into them from the Lord. 3843.

3849. For in affections there is life; but not in the truths of doctrine . . . without them . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. For the life of the understanding is from the will; from which it is evident . . . that truths . . . derive their life from good . . . The reason truths still appear animate, although it is not from the good of charity, is from the affections of the love of self and of the world, which have no other life than that which in the spiritual sense is called 'death,' and is infernal life.

3865. The good of truth . . . is the affection of truth for the sake of life; for life is the good which is regarded in truth by those who are afterwards regenerated. Without life according to truth there is no conjunction of truth with good, and consequently no appropriation. This may be plainly evident to everyone, if he pays attention to those who live evilly, and to those who live well; namely, in that those who live evilly, although in their childhood and young manhood they have been skilled in the doctrinal things of the Church . . . still if they are explored as to what they believe concerning the Lord, faith in Him, and concerning the truths of the Church, you will find that they do not believe one whit; whereas they who live well, will be found, everyone of them, to have faith in truths, which they believe to be truths. But those who teach truths . . . and live evilly, do indeed say that they believe, but still at heart they do not believe . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident that the life teaches what is the quality of the acknowledgment of truth . . . and that faith separated from the good of life says that however a man lives still he can be saved of grace ; and that it reasons against this matter of doctrine, that the life of everyone remains after death.

3869<sup>d</sup>. They who have faith of the will receive life, and therefore it is said, 'They who hear shall live' (John v.25).

3887. Whatever is (in the Celestial Kingdom) is as it were alive before them ; for that which comes immediately from the Lord is alive.

3905<sup>e</sup>. For not anything is acknowledged in faith until we have lived according to it.

3906. At first they do not acknowledge (internal truth) with such faith as to live according to it . . .

3913<sup>3</sup>. A natural man seems to himself to have life when he is raised to dignities . . . But a spiritual man seems to himself to have life in humiliation . . .

3915<sup>2</sup>. For without affection truths have no life. Examp.

—<sup>e</sup>. He does not love the neighbour, but himself in preference, and is in natural life, and not in spiritual life . . . So long as natural affection is dominant, the man is called 'dead ;' for he has a life contrary to heavenly life. Heavenly life is the veriest life.

3916. That thus there is life for it. Sig.

3934<sup>8</sup>. It is to be known, besides, that the Lord's Kingdom with man begins from the life which is of works ; for then he is in the beginning of regeneration . . .

3938<sup>2</sup>. There are two things which make man, namely, esse and existere ; the esse of man is nothing else than what is recipient of the Eternal which proceeds from the Lord ; for men, Spirits, and Angels are nothing else than recipients, or recipient forms, of the life from the Lord ; the reception of life is that of which is predicated existere . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That which proceeds from the Lord is that which appears as existere in Him, but it is not in Him, but is from Him, and causes that men, Spirits, and Angels come forth, that is, live. Existere with man, Spirit, and Angel is to live, and to live is his eternal happiness . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. I have sometimes spoken to those in the other life who had been in the delights of evil and falsity ; and it was given to say to them that they have no life until they are deprived of their delights. But they said, as do such in the world, that if they were deprived of them they would no longer have anything of life. But it was given to reply that then life first begins, and, together with that life, happiness such as there is in Heaven . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. The man of this age believes that . . . in whatever affection he may have lived through the whole course of his life, he can come into Heaven. With those who have so lived . . . I have also sometimes spoken. When they come into the other life, they at first think of nothing else than that they can come into Heaven, not attending to their past life, namely, that by that life they have put on the delight of the affection of evil and falsity from the loves of self and of the world . . . It was given to say to them that everyone can be admitted into Heaven . . . but whether they can live there, they could know if they were admitted. Some . . . were admitted ; but as, there, it is the life of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour which makes all the sphere and happiness of life, when they came thither they began to be tortured ; for they could not breathe in such a sphere . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. It is this Continuous of love which is called affection ; and it is this Continuous which reigns in the life of man, and which makes all the delight with him ; and, as it makes this, it makes his life itself ; for the life of man is nothing else than the delight which is of his affection ; thus is nothing else than the affection which is of his love. Love is the will of man ; and thence it is his thought ; and thus it is his action.

3957. As they had not been solicitous about the life after death, but only about the life in the world . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The second thing which they are able to know, provided they merely use their reason, is that the life which a man has acquired in the world follows him ; or, that he is in such a one after death. For they are able to know that no one can put off the life acquired from infancy, unless he were to die altogether ; and that this life cannot be instantaneously transmuted into another one, still less into an opposite one. As, for example, he who has acquired a life of deceit, and in this has had the delight of his life, cannot put off the life of deceit, but is in that life also after death. Or, they who are in the love of self, and are thence in hatreds and revenges against those who are not subservient to them ; or in other like things ; that they remain in them after the life of the body ; for these are the things which they love, and which make the delights of their life ; consequently, their veriest life ; and that thus such things cannot be taken away from them, without at the same time extinguishing the whole of their life. In like manner in all other things.

—<sup>8</sup>. The seventh thing which a man is able to know of himself, is that love to God, and love towards the neighbour, are what cause man to be man . . . and that they constitute heavenly life, or Heaven ; and that the opposite things constitute infernal life, or Hell.

—<sup>e</sup>. But the reason why man does not know these things, is that he does not want to know them, for he lives an opposite life ; and also because he does not believe that there is a life after death ; and also because he has caught principles of faith, and none of charity ; and thence believes . . . that if there is a life after death, he can be saved from faith, however he has lived . . .

3969<sup>16</sup>. But in the celestial heat and spiritual light which proceed from the Lord as a Sun . . . there are the good of love and the truth of faith, thus wisdom and intelligence . . . for the things which proceed from the Lord are alive. Refs.

3986<sup>2</sup>. The varieties (of good) also come forth from the affections which are of everyone's love, which are rooted and appropriated in the man through his life.

3993<sup>3</sup>. Unless the correspondence of the internal man with the external has been effected in time, or in the life of the body, it is not effected afterwards.

[A. 3993]<sup>9</sup>. If evil were taken away from man suddenly, it would be to extinguish the fire of his first life.

—<sup>10</sup>. For example: if anyone believes himself to be pure from sins . . . when he has once performed repentance . . . or after confession . . . or after he has attended the Holy Supper; if he lives a new life, in the affection of good and truth; this falsity is that with which good can be mixed; whereas, if he lives a life of the flesh and of the world, as before, then it is falsity with which good cannot be mixed.

—<sup>11</sup>. Again: if anyone is ignorant that man rises again after death, and thence does not believe in the resurrection; and also if anyone knows, but still doubts, and almost denies; and yet lives in truth and good; with this falsity also good and truth can be mixed; whereas if he lives in falsity and evil, then they cannot be mixed with that falsity, because they are contrary; and falsity destroys truth, and evil destroys good.

4063<sup>3</sup>. When a man is being regenerated, it is not effected in a moment . . . but . . . through the whole life of the man . . . for . . . the man is to be endowed with a life which he had not before; nay, of which he before knew scarcely anything . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. Hence it is evident that the former things are always left behind when a new state of life is put on.

4136<sup>3</sup>. He was a certain leading man, who . . . because he had led an evil life, was in such stupid ignorance about good and freedom, and about the delight and bliss thence derived, that he did not know the least difference between infernal delight and freedom, and heavenly delight and freedom . . .

4149<sup>2</sup>. The operation (of an organ of the body) is effected by means of the life which inflows through the soul; and the life is from the good which is from the Lord.

4151<sup>4</sup>. Very few believe that (all good and all truth are from the Lord), as may be evident from the fact that they suppose the whole of life to be in themselves; and scarcely any, that life inflows. The whole of the life of man consists in the faculty that he can think, and that he can will; for if the faculty of thinking and willing is taken away, nothing of life remains; and the veriest life consists in thinking good and willing good, and also in thinking truth, and in willing that which he thinks to be truth . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. They who are evil . . . when shown that everything inflows, come into anxiety, and are exceedingly importunate to be allowed to live in their own proprium; and [declare] that if that were taken away from them, they could live no longer. Thus do even those believe who know.

4156<sup>2</sup>. To those who are in a life of good, scientifics are a means of being wise; but to those who are in a life of evil, they are a means of being insane . . .

4171<sup>2</sup>. For example: if one who has led a life of good . . . suffers himself to be persuaded that a life of good effects nothing towards salvation . . . and if afterwards does not care for life, and also contemns it, he is called 'turn.'

4175. For the life itself of man is nothing but love; for without love man can have nothing whatever of life; nay, if a man reflects, he can know that all the vital fire and heat which are in the body are thence.

4205<sup>2</sup>. Without affection, or without the delight which is of love, nothing can enter into man, because in these is his life.

4206<sup>2</sup>. This is circumstanced as is the life with man, which inflows and acts into the various sensory and motory organs of the body, and into the various members and viscera, and everywhere presents variety . . . but still it is one life which acts all things so variously: it is not that the life itself acts differently, but that it is differently received; for it is the form of each according to which the action is determined.

4225<sup>2</sup>. They who are outside the Grand Man . . . cannot enter into it; for the lives are contrary . . . because, there, is the life of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour; and as nothing there corresponds to their life, they can scarcely breathe . . . For the respiration is according to the freedom of life . . . and, what is wonderful, they can scarcely move themselves . . . and therefore they cast themselves . . . down to Hell, where they have respiration and mobility. Hence it is that life, in the Word, is represented by mobility.

—<sup>e</sup>. Therefore there are so many Heavens . . . and every one, in his own Heaven, is in his own life, and has an influx from the universal Heaven . . .

4227. They who have been such in the life of the body, are also such in the other life; for everyone is followed by his own life . . .

4247<sup>3</sup>. But it is to be known that this is the circle (namely, from knowledge to act), but still it is good which produces this circle; for the life which is from the Lord inflows solely into good, thus through good, and this from the inmosts. That the life which inflows through the inmosts produces this circle, may be known to everyone; for without life nothing is produced; and as the life which is from the Lord does not inflow except into good, and through good, it follows that it is good which produces it, and which inflows into truths, and appropriates them to itself . . .

4249<sup>e</sup>. (The man of the Church at this day) would say that he feels the life in himself, and that he thinks . . . and wills from himself . . .

4258. That even then life would be gained. Sig. and Ex.

4274. Nothing else makes the intellectual life of man than that which he believes to be truth; and his voluntary life, than that which he has impressed on himself to be good; and therefore when that is assaulted which he believes to be truth, the life of his understanding is assaulted; and when that is assaulted which he has impressed on himself to be good, the life of his will is assaulted ; so that when a man is being tempted, his life is at stake.

4318. The chief thing of the intelligence which the Angels have, is to know and perceive that all life is from the Lord . . .

4320. The reason the life which is from the Lord alone appears with everyone as if it were in him, is from the love or mercy of the Lord towards the universal human race, in that He wills to appropriate to everyone that which is His own, and to give to everyone eternal happiness . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That the evil also receive the life which is from the Lord, is circumstanced like the objects of the world, which all receive light from the sun, and thence their colours, but according to their forms . . . So is the light or life from the Lord with the evil ; but this life is not life, but is . . . spiritual death.

4321. If all things were to be denied of which the causes are not known, innumerable things would be denied which come forth in nature . . . and how much more the arcana which come forth . . . in the Spiritual World ; as these : that there is one only life, and from it all live ; and everyone differently from another ; that even the evil live from the same life, and also the Hells ; and that the influent life acts according to the reception . . .

4330. Inasmuch that there are few who believe anything else than that the External of man is the all of man, and that when it recedes, which takes place when a man dies, there is scarcely anything left which lives ; still less that the Internal is that which lives in the External ; and that when the latter recedes, the former especially lives.

4352<sup>2</sup>. For the truths of faith regarded without love are only words without life : but through love, thus through conjunction with the good of love, they receive life. 4368<sup>2</sup>. 4373.

4390<sup>2</sup>. These two (truth and good) include in general all things which are of doctrine, and which are of life ; truths, the things which are of doctrine ; and goods, the things which are of life.

4406<sup>2</sup>. The spirit is that which lives in the body.

4416. They who have known truths, and also have confirmed them in themselves, and yet have lived a life of evil, appear in a snowy light, but cold . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it was evident why those who lead a life of evil can never have faith in Divine truths from a sincere heart ; for they are in that smoky light, which becomes darksome to them when heavenly light falls into it, so that they see neither with their eyes nor with their mind ; and moreover they then fall into anguish, and some as it were into swoons. Hence it is that the evil can never receive truth, but only the good.

—<sup>3</sup>. The man who leads a life of evil cannot believe that he is in such a lumen, because he does not see the lumen in which his spirit is . . . but if he saw the lumen of his spirit, and were to experience what it would become if the light of truth and good from Heaven were to inflow into it, he would know manifestly how far he was from receiving the things which are of light, that is, which are of faith ; and still more from imbuing the things which are of charity ; and thus how far he was from Heaven.

4417. There was once a discourse with Spirits about life, namely, that no one has anything of life from himself, but from the Lord, although he seems to live of himself ; and then at first the discourse was what life is, namely, that it is to understand and to will, and as all understanding has relation to truth, and all willing to good, that the intelligence of truth and the will of good are life. But the reasoner Spirits said . . . that those who are in no intelligence of truth and will of good nevertheless live ; nay, they believe that they live more than others. But it was given to reply to them, that the life of the evil does indeed appear to them as life, but still it is the life which is called spiritual death ; which they could know from the fact that as to understand truth and to will good are life from the Lord, to understand falsity and to will evil cannot be life, because evils and falsities are contrary to real life. In order that they might be convinced, the quality of their life was shown, which when seen appeared like the lumen from a charcoal fire which had a smokiness intermingled with it ; and when they are in this lumen, they can be of no other opinion than that the life of their thought and of their will is the one only life ; and this still more from the fact that the light of the intelligence of truth, which is that of real life, cannot at all appear to them ; for as soon as they come into that light, their lumen becomes darksome, inasmuch that they can see nothing whatever, and therefore perceive nothing. The quality of the state of their life was also shown by the abstraction of their delight from falsity . . . When this was done, they appeared with ghastly faces, like corpses, and might be called effigies of death.

4459<sup>2</sup>. Unless they are to rise with the body they do not believe that there can be a resurrection . . . for they place all life in the body, not knowing that the life of their body is from the life of their spirit, which lives after death.

—<sup>7</sup>. The use itself which a man loves determines his life, and distinguishes it from others . . . not indeed the use itself, but the love of the use, for in love is the life of everyone.

4464<sup>2</sup>. Man does not know that a certain spiritual sphere encompasses him according to the life of his affections . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The spheres which are perceived in the other life all originate from the loves and derivative affections in which they had been, consequently from the life ; for the loves and derivative affections make the life itself ; and (therefore) they originate from . . . the ends . . . for everyone has as an end that which he loves ; and therefore the ends determine the life of a man . . .

4468. There are two things which conjoin the men of the Church, namely life and doctrine. When life conjoins, doctrine does not separate ; but if only doctrine conjoins . . . then they separate from each other . . .

when yet doctrine is for the sake of life, and life is from doctrine . . . But that doctrine does not separate if life conjoins, is evident from the fact, that he who is in goodness of life does not condemn another who is of a different opinion, but leaves it to his faith and conscience . . . for he says in his heart, that ignorance can condemn no one, if they live in innocence and mutual love . . .

[A.] 4472. Condescension as to life. Sig. and Ex.

4502<sup>2</sup>. Disjunction as to life and doctrine. Sig.

4524. As there cannot be more than one only fountain of life . . . it is evident that all life is from the Lord, who is the First of life; and, as it is so, each and all things which are in the Spiritual World correspond to Him, and consequently each and all things which are in man . . .

4622<sup>3</sup>. (That Spirits have senses) may be concluded by him who believes in the life after death, from the fact, that there can be no life without sense; and that the quality of the life is according to the quality of the sense . . .

4623. But it is to be known that the sensitive life of Spirits is twofold; namely, real, and not real: the one is distinguished from the other by this, that all that is real which appears to those who are in Heaven, but all that is not real which appears to those who are in Hell; for whatever comes from the . . . Lord is real, for it comes from . . . life in itself; but whatever comes from the proprium of a Spirit is not real, because it does not come from . . . life in itself. They who are in the affection of good and truth are in the Lord's life, thus in real life; for the Lord is present in good and truth through affection; but they who are in evil and falsity through affection, are in their Own life, thus in life not real; for the Lord is not present in evil and falsity. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. They who are in Hell equally have sensations . . . but when they are inspected by the Angels, they . . . disappear . . . and they themselves, so far as they are in cupidities of evil and in the persuasions of falsity, are nothing but phantasies as to their thoughts; and to see anything from phantasies, is to see real things as not real, and not real things as real; and unless, by the Divine mercy of the Lord, it were granted them so to feel, they would have no sensitive life, consequently no life; for the Sensitive makes everything of life:

4633. From the things which have been said about perceptions and odours, it is evident that the life of everyone, and consequently the affection of everyone, is manifestly evident in the other life . . .

4638<sup>10</sup>. The study of the life according to the precepts of faith. Sig.

4656<sup>2</sup>. Thus there was little of life in his speech.

4663. That everyone receives a reward in the other life according to his life in the world. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. The fruits of faith are nothing else than a life according to the precepts of faith; consequently, a life according to them saves; but not faith without life; for after death man carries with him all the states of his life. Examps. . . Everyone retains in the other life the nature which he had put on in the life of the body . . . If the nature be expelled nothing of life remains.

—<sup>3</sup>. For he who is . . . in the life of faith is in the faculty of receiving faith . . . But he who is not in . . . the life of faith is never in any faculty of receiving faith . . .

4674<sup>3</sup>. When they (are admitted into Heaven), the life of their thought and will labours, the life of the thought from principles of falsity, and the life of the will from the life of evil in the world.

4676. His own life in him. Sig.

—<sup>1</sup>. As the body or external man grows old he passes into what is new of life . . . Hence, 'old age' = life.

—<sup>e</sup>. The influx from Heaven concerning the permanence of life . . .

4683<sup>2</sup>. They are conjoined, but . . . not from life. . . They place nothing of salvation in the life of faith . . . yet they know . . . that doctrine is nothing without life . . . they (therefore) persuade that confidence . . . even at the last moment of life, is saving, without any regard for the past life; although they know that everyone's life remains after death, and that everyone will be judged according to the works of his life.

4721<sup>2</sup>. If the Church would acknowledge the life of faith as the beginning (or principle), it would acknowledge charity . . . and love to the Lord, and hence the works of charity and love . . . and that regeneration is effected by the life of faith . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The reception of the influx (of happiness) is impossible with anyone who has not lived the life of faith . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. That the life of faith saves. (Proved from the Word and the Athanasian Creed.)

4724<sup>4</sup>. Those extinguish (the Divine Human) in themselves, who . . . do not live the life of faith. . . But they who live the life of faith, adore the Lord . . . as God the Saviour . . .

4733. That it is not to be extinguished, because it is the life of religion. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>1</sup>. The acknowledgment and adoration of the Lord's Divine Human is the life of religion.

4735<sup>3</sup>. The appropriation (of the Divine good and Divine truth) is effected by a life of love and charity, which is also a life of faith.

4744<sup>3</sup>. 'The unclean Spirit' = the uncleanness of life with man . . . For unclean Spirits dwell in the uncleanness of a man's life.

4747. Those who are in simple good as to life, and thence in natural truths as to doctrine. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. Those who have confirmed themselves against Divine truths . . . not only in doctrine, but also in life . . . so remain to eternity. . . For that which is confirmed . . . in life imbues the Voluntary; and that which has been inrooted in both lives of man, namely, in the life of his understanding and in the life of his will, cannot be eradicated; the very soul of man which lives after death is formed from these things, and is such that it never recedes from them. —<sup>3</sup>.

4769<sup>4</sup>. Those who set doctrine before life, and at last do not care for life. Sig. When yet life makes the man . . . and the life remains after death; but not doctrine except in so far as it derives from life.

4776. For those who are in the life of cupidities cannot be in the life of love and charity, because they are complete opposites. Ex.

4793. As . . . in the affection (of knowing; understanding, and being wise) is the life of man, no Spirit or Angel is permitted to inflow into man's taste; for this would be to inflow into the life which is proper to him. Nevertheless, there are wandering Spirits who . . . study to enter into the taste with man; and, when they have entered into it, they possess his interiors, namely, his life of thoughts and affections . . . Very many are at this day possessed by them; for, at this day, there are interior obsessions. Ex.

4802. Still, truths are not appropriated to them, unless they live according to them.

—<sup>2</sup>. Those who have understood truths, and yet have lived a life of evil, are also such in the other life . . . But as they have a life of evil, they are in Hell. (Two such des.)

—<sup>3</sup>. They were called serpents of the tree of knowledge, because when they reason from the life, they then speak against truths.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it may be evident what faith is without the life of faith.

4805. They had believed that they alone were alive and in light; and that those outside their society were relatively as it were not alive and not in light.

—<sup>2</sup>. It was shown . . . that if they aspired further than to those things which correspond to their life, they could not have Heaven . . . For in that case their society is a society of interior friendship . . . for they regard others as . . . not alive; which thought, when communicated, induces sadness, and this . . . returns to them.

4807<sup>e</sup>. That everyone will be judged according to his life. Sig. Thus everyone carries his judgment with him, because he carries his life with him. 4809<sup>2</sup>. 4810.

4809<sup>2</sup>. For the Angels are recipients of the life of the truth which proceeds from the Lord's Divine good . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. To be ordained according to the life. Sig.

4837<sup>3</sup>. If Heaven were distinguished according to truths (only) . . . they could not have from the Lord oneness of life, or one soul; for this is possible solely in good . . .

4839. For in the end is the life of man . . . the life of his soul is nothing else. 6571.

4844<sup>6</sup>. Truth without good . . . becomes the truth of intelligence through a life of good.

4868<sup>4</sup>. Moreover, the life of everyone, without distinction, remains with him after death. 5718<sup>e</sup>.

4882. 'She went'=life. Ex.

— . It appears to (Spirits and Angels) equally as to men, that they live from themselves; when yet they do not live from themselves, but from the Divine of the Lord, from whom is everything of life.

—<sup>2</sup>. Those who are not in good . . . do not want to hear that it is an appearance that they live from themselves; for they want to live from themselves. But besides its being shown them by living experience that they do not live from themselves; and that progressions from place to place are changes . . . of the state of the life; they are also told that it may be sufficient for them to know no otherwise than that they have life from themselves; and that they could not have more even if it were in themselves from themselves; but that still it is better to know how the case really is, because then they are in the truth, and (thus) in the light of Heaven . . . (Shown by experience.) 5605<sup>2</sup>. Ex.

4899<sup>3</sup>. The Church is not in those . . . who acknowledge the Lord from doctrine, and not from life.

—<sup>e</sup>. In Heaven, the things of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour are everything of life, consequently everything of wisdom and intelligence.

4906<sup>2</sup>. Man's vital fire and heat (are) from love . . . (otherwise) he could not possibly have life. But this spiritual fire, or heat, which makes life, becomes with the evil a burning and consuming fire . . . With animals devoid of reason, spiritual heat also inflows and makes the life, but a life which is according to the reception in their organic forms . . .

4925<sup>2</sup>. (These errors) have infected not only doctrine, but life; as that a man is saved however he lives . . . 6353<sup>2</sup>. 7272<sup>2</sup>.

4928<sup>e</sup>. When a man has been regenerated . . . he studies life more than doctrine.

4943<sup>e</sup>. But as they have led a pious life . . . Angels are sent to them . . .

4984<sup>e</sup>. The truth of faith makes no one happy, but the good of faith; for this affects that thing itself which is of the life of man, namely, his will . . .

5006<sup>2</sup>. For the Christian Church at this day preaches faith alone . . . but not life; and, when life is not preached, man comes into no affection of good, (consequently) into none of truth . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. When yet . . . man's life in the world is scarcely as a moment relatively to his life after death . . . But there are few who believe that they will live after death . . . But . . . immediately after death, man is in the other life, and his life in the world is altogether continued . . . It has been granted me to know by living experience, that the lot which awaits everyone is according to his life.

5034<sup>e</sup>. When anything is contrary to anyone's love . . . he is angry, as if something were lost from the delight of his life, consequently from his life.

5054<sup>e</sup>. Those who are in the province of the womb and the surrounding organs . . . are in a very sweet and agreeable life . . .

5057<sup>2</sup>. (From the example of the Israelites) many confirm themselves in this—that the life effects nothing; but that it is . . . reception into Heaven from mercy alone, whatever the life may have been.

5058<sup>e</sup>. From (the example of this Spirit) it is evident that reception is not from mercy, but that it is the life which makes Heaven . . .

5060. For these had been such in the life of the body; and (therefore) they are such also in the other life; for everyone is followed by his life.

5068<sup>e</sup>. To receive Divine truth is . . . to make what is of doctrine become of life.

5070. Eternal life . . . is life from good. Good has life in it, because it is from the Lord, who is life itself.

In the life which is from the Lord are wisdom and intelligence; for . . . those who have this wisdom and intelligence have life; and as happiness is adjoined to such life, eternal happiness is signified by 'life.' (Whereas) those who are in evil appear as if they have life, but it is such life as in the Word is called 'death' . . . As there is life in good and the derivative truth, there cannot be life in evil and the derivative falsity; for these are contrary, and extinguish life; and therefore in these there is no other life than such as is in the insane. 5407<sup>e</sup>.

[A.] 5071<sup>2</sup>. For those who have had no conscience in the life of the body, cannot have any in the other life.

— All the vital fire is from the loves with man . . .

5079<sup>2</sup>. The things there . . . have what is alive in them, which those have not which are properly of the natural world.

5084<sup>6</sup>. Hence is the fallacy that the ipsum vivum with man, which is called the soul, is a something ethereal . . .

— It is a fallacy of sense that man believes he lives from himself, or that life has been implanted in him. . . That it is the Divine alone which has life from itself; and thus that there is only one life; and that the lives in the world are only recipient forms, the Sensuous does not at all apprehend. Refs.

—<sup>4</sup>. The life of man, which is from the Divine of the Lord, passes through these (three) degrees, from the inmost to the ultimate; and is everywhere derived; and becomes more and more general; and, in the ultimate, most general.

—<sup>6</sup>. (Therefore) the recipient forms of the life (of brute animals) cannot be otherwise than dissipated . . .

5115. Because, when man is being reborn, spiritual life inflows into him, just as, when a tree is germinating, its life [inflows] through the heat from the sun.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Man finally produces) such things as are of life; namely, the goods of love and of charity in act; which are signified by 'fruits.'

5128<sup>2</sup>. For the life of the thought, which is in the speech, and the life of the will, which is in the action, do not appear . . . But in the other life, those who are in good distinctly perceive . . . the quality of the life; and also whence is the life in the speech and actions.

—<sup>4</sup>. The principal indication as to whether a man is solely sensuous, or whether he is rational, is from his life. By his life is not meant such life as appears in his discourse and works, but such as is in them; for the life of the discourse is from the thought, and the life of the works is from the will . . . Such as is the intention or end in the discourse and works, such is the life . . .

It is this life which is meant when it is said that the life remains after death . . .

— For a life of evil closes up all . . . communication with the Rational, and causes the man to be merely natural and sensuous. Examps.

5130<sup>2</sup>. That which reigns universally with anyone (there), produces that sphere, and manifests his life before others.

5138<sup>e</sup>. Hence the quality of the faith can be known from the life; for good is of life and truth is of faith; and, on the other hand, evil and falsity.

5141<sup>e</sup>. Man's life is then in external things, or in the body . . .

5164<sup>3</sup>. The reason they are servants more than others, is that they know, acknowledge, and perceive, that everything of life . . . is from the Lord, and nothing whatever from self . . .

5188<sup>e</sup>. Such lie there face downwards, with but little of human life; being thus deprived of their clear-sightedness, which had been a ferine life.

5198<sup>2</sup>. The lives of beasts are nothing else than affections . . .

5199. The good itself which is from the Divine in Heaven is that from which the Angels have life; but the form of their life is through the truths which are from that good.

5215<sup>2</sup>. Spiritual heat is alive, but natural heat is not alive . . .

5232. Because there are two faculties in man which constitute his life; namely, the will and the understanding; (for) there are two things which make life in Heaven, namely, good and truth . . .

5256. Regarded in itself, the human is nothing else than a form recipient of life from the Divine; whereas the Lord's glorified Human . . . is not a form recipient of life from the Divine, but is the Esse itself of life; and that which thence proceeds is life.

5259<sup>e</sup>. Thus in man the life from the Divine produces diverse thoughts and actions according to the forms.

5276<sup>e</sup>. These truths are not appropriated to man until he lives according to them; for nothing is appropriated to man except that which becomes of the life; for thus he himself is in them, because his life is in them.

5293<sup>2</sup>. Hence the quality of a man's life is according to the quality of his use.

5342<sup>4</sup>. For no one can be admitted into Heaven unless he has received spiritual life; and no one can receive spiritual life unless he is being regenerated; and no one can be regenerated except through the good of life conjoined with the truth of doctrine. Hence has he spiritual life. Sig.

5351<sup>2</sup>. For the will of man is the first of his life, and his understanding succeeds . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. For the life remains with everyone; but the doctrine only so far as it derives from the life.

5407. 'Let us live and not die' (Gen. xlii. 2) = spiritual life . . .

— The reason Heaven in general, and eternal happiness in special, are called 'life,' is that wisdom of good and intelligence of truth are there, and in (these) there is life from the Lord . . .

5432. (These) cause them to be no longer scientifics, but precepts of life, and finally life; for they thus enter into the life, to which they are appropriated.

5470. For as man is born in sins, he cannot possibly live, unless on the one side he communicates with Hell, and on the other with Heaven; all his life is thence, 5849. 5979. 5993.

5493. 'To go' = to live. 5605, Ex.

5552. Those things in man which have the greatest life correspond to those Societies in the Heavens which have the greatest life, and thence the greatest happiness, as are those to which correspond the external and internal sensories of man, and the things which are of the understanding and the will. Whereas those things in man which have less life correspond to such Societies as are in less life there, as are the cuticles . . . and also the cartilages and bones . . . and also the hairs . . . 5560, Ex. 5561, Ex. 5565, Ex.

5561<sup>2</sup>. By spiritual life is meant that life which the Angels in Heaven have. A man in the world is introduced to this life through those things which are of faith and charity. The affection itself of good . . . and the affection of truth . . . is spiritual life. Without this life, the life of man is natural, worldly, corporeal, earthly life, which is not spiritual life if this is not in it; but is such life as is possessed by animals in general.

5605. Spiritual life according to degrees. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'In God we are moved, we live, and are' = the external, the internal, and the inmost of life.

5614. That [there would have been] spiritual life exterior and interior. Sig. and Ex.

— For by the provision which they received the first time is signified exterior life, or life in the Natural, because they were without the medium . . . whereas by the eorn which they are receiving this time is signified interior life . . .

5627. Life from spiritual truth. Sig.

5637. Elevation to procure for themselves life from the interiors of scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

5650. The natural man . . . supposes that if these concupiscences were abolished, no more life would remain in him . . .

5660<sup>2</sup>. When (these Spirits) apperceive that everything they think and will inflows . . . they believe that their Own life would be none . . . 6325.

5664a<sup>3</sup>. Truths (which are merely known) have no life . . . With the evil . . . the love of self and of the world insufflates them, and makes a quasi life; but this life is such as there is in Hell, which is called spiritual death . . .

5679. 'To live' = spiritual life. 6140. 6173.

5680<sup>2</sup>. The Natural never has . . . any life of thought and affection, except that which comes from the Spiritual; for all things in the Natural are, from themselves, dead; but they are vivified through influx from the Spiritual World . . . In the Spiritual World all things are alive from the light which is from the Lord; for in that light are wisdom and intelligence.

5804. The truths the man had known before had little life, whereas those which he afterwards receives have life from good.

5820<sup>2</sup>. He is (there) left to his will, that is, to his life.

5826<sup>2</sup>. When . . . a man is affected with truth . . . that he may live according to it . . .

— Is truth anything unless it has life as its end? . . . What are the precepts of the decalogue without life according to them? . . . It is the same with the doctrinal things of faith from the Word, which are the precepts of Christian life, for they are spiritual laws; neither do these conduce to anything, unless they become of the life. Let a man consider whether there is anything with him which is anything, except that which enters into his life itself; and whether the life of man, which is life, is elsewhere than in his will. Hence then it is, that it has been said by the Lord . . . that all the Law and all the Prophets are founded in love to God and in love towards the neighbour, thus in the life itself, and not in faith without life . . .

5835. The life of the one in the life of the other. Sig. and Ex.

5847. No man, Spirit, or Angel ever has life from himself; thus neither can he think and will from himself; for in thinking and willing is the life of man; to speak and act is the derivative life. For there is one only life—that of the Lord—which inflows into all, but it is variously received; and, in fact, according to the quality which a man, through his life, has induced on his soul. Ex. . . During his life in the world, man induces a form on the purest substances which belong to his interiors . . . and according to this form is received the Lord's life, which is that of His love towards the universal human race.

—<sup>2</sup>. That there is one only life; and that men, Spirits, and Angels are recipients of life. Refs.

5854<sup>2</sup>. The Lord . . . could lead man into good ends by omnipotent force, but this would be to take life away from him; for his life is one of completely contrary loves . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (If the Lord did this) man would be miserably deprived of his life; for man's life is from cupidities and phantasies . . . and unless this life were sustained by means of evil Spirits, and were thus amended, or at least led, he would not survive a minute.

5865. This (inanimate blackness) was the corporeal life of that man . . . The corporeal life of a man who is in the good of faith appears . . . woody, and of the colour of wood. A certain Spirit (also) was let into the state of the body . . . and was then seen by me as a black mass devoid of life.

5881<sup>2</sup>. This commotion manifests itself also by anxiety concerning the past life.

5883. (The distinct life of the internal man. Ex.)

5890. Spiritual life in them from Providence. Sig. and Ex.

— There is natural life, and there is spiritual life:

natural life is meant in the sense of the letter . . . and spiritual life in the internal sense; and, in many places, by 'to vivify,' and by 'life,' is meant spiritual life, even in the sense of the letter. Ill.

[A.] 5915. The continual influx of spiritual life from the Celestial Internal. Sig. and Ex.

5949<sup>3</sup>. That which a man has as the end . . . makes his interior life. Examps.

5967. 'Joseph is yet alive' (Gen.xlv.26)=that the Internal had not been rejected. Ex. 5974.

5969. A deficiency of the life of the Natural and of the understanding thence. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>1</sup>. The reason it is said thence, is that the life which is of the will always precedes, and the life of the understanding follows. The reason is, that there is life solely in the will, and not in the understanding except from the will. This is evident from (the fact), that in good there is life, but not in truth except from good; for it is manifest that that is always prior which lives, and that that is posterior which lives thence.

5972. 'The spirit of Jacob their father revived'=new life . . . for natural good. There is new life when the Spiritual from the Internal inflows, and acts, from the interior, into those things which are in the Natural . . .

5986. Everything of thought and will inflows, because there is one only life, from which are these faculties of life; and this life inflows from the Lord by a wonderful form, which is the heavenly form; not only generally, into all; but also particularly into each; and it is everywhere varied, according to the form of each subject . . .

6024<sup>3</sup>. The state of spiritual life, and its quality. Sig.

6032. It is to be known that there are two things with man which make his life, namely, spiritual light, and spiritual heat; spiritual light makes the life of his understanding, and spiritual heat the life of his will . . . These two things constitute all the life of man. Ex.

6036. 'This time let me die'=new life. (Ex. under DIE, here.)

6038. 'That thou art yet alive' (Gen.xlvi.30)=the perception of life thence in himself. Ex.

6054. For the life after death is a continuation of the life in the world.

—<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord lives in everyone in Heaven . . .

6063<sup>2</sup>. Without influx (from the internal) the Natural has no life, because it is in the nature of the world, (which) is entirely devoid of life; and therefore in order that the Natural with man may live, there must be influx from the Lord, not only immediately from Him, but also mediately through the Spiritual World . . . The Natural of man has been formed to receive life thence . . .

6071<sup>6</sup>. If evil were taken away from them, they would have no life . . .

6077. To seek life in scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>1</sup>. All things . . . seek something more ultimate in which to be . . . Good seeks to live in truths; truths seek to live in scientifics; scientifics in sensuous things, and sensuous things in the world.

—<sup>2</sup>. Interior truths can be insinuated into scientifics, but they have no life therein until good is in them; in good there is life, and in truths from good, and thus in scientifics from good through truths . . .

6078. 'Pasture'=that which supports spiritual life, which is especially scientific truth . . . But there must be in them life from the goods of truth; (otherwise) scientifics do indeed support the interior life of man, but (only) his natural life. Ill.

6093. 'How many are the days of the years of thy life?' (Gen.xlvii.8)=concerning the state of life of the Natural from the Spiritual. . . 'Life'=spiritual life. 6097.

6110. Truths and goods, and their Knowledges, make the spiritual life of those who are in Heaven. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Let such know, that life from (riches, honours, and pleasures) is the life of the body, not the life of the soul; and that the former life perishes with the body, whereas the latter one remains to eternity . . .

6118. [Supplication] concerning the support of the spiritual life. Sig.

—<sup>6</sup>. These two things (the good of love and the truth of faith) are what make the spiritual life. 6136<sup>6</sup>.

6119. Spiritual life consists in exercises according to truths, consequently in uses; for those who are in spiritual life long for truths for the end of life; that is, in order that they may live according to them; thus for the end of uses. In proportion, therefore, as they can imbibe truths . . . they are in spiritual life, because in the same proportion they are in intelligence and wisdom. When, therefore, truths are deficient . . . their spiritual life labours.

6128. All the support of spiritual life in the Natural is effected through influx from the Internal . . . Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence comes vegetative life.

—<sup>4</sup>. Hence can be comprehended what is the influx of life from the Lord . . .

6135<sup>2</sup>. For the body, or the whole man, who is meant by the body, is a receptacle of life from the Lord; thus a receptacle of good; for the good of love makes the life itself in man; for the vital heat, which is love, is the vital heat itself; and, unless this heat is in man, he is a something dead . . . Even if there is no heavenly love with a man . . . still the inmost of his life is from heavenly love; for this love continually inflows from the Lord, and makes the vital heat with him in its beginning; but it is perverted by the man in its progress . . .

6136. That if they were desolated, there would no longer be spiritual life from the Internal. Sig.

6138. Men are nothing but forms recipient of life from the Lord; and, from heredity and actuality, these forms are such that they repel the spiritual life which is from the Lord . . .

6161. 'Thou hast vivified us'=spiritual life no otherwise and from no other source.

6171. A fixed state—statio—of spiritual life. Sig.

6182. 'I will lie with my fathers'=life such as the Ancients had. Ex.

6183. The regeneration of the Natural is effected through the insinuation of spiritual life from the Lord through the internal man into the scientifics there. Tr. . . . If the man cannot (be further regenerated) his spiritual life is in the exterior Natural.

6193<sup>e</sup>. Whereas evil Spirits are angry . . . when it is said that life is not in them, but that it inflows. When this is shown them by living experience . . . they confess that it is so . . . but after a while they deny it . . .

6208. When (those who enjoy hereditary natural good) come into the other life, they wonder that they are not received into Heaven, saying that they have led a good life. But they are told that a good life from what is natural or hereditary is not a good life; but from those things which are of the doctrine of good and truth, and of the life thence . . .

6221. See DIE, here.

6272<sup>e</sup>. For life makes the Church with man, and not doctrine without life.

6302. Perception . . . concerning new life. Sig. and Ex.

6317. They had placed life in the body, and had confirmed themselves against the life of the spirit . . .

6325. It is an eternal Truth . . . that no one lives from himself except the Lord; consequently that everything of life inflows, the good of life from the Lord, and the evil of life from Hell . . . When a man is in this faith . . . evil cannot be appropriated to him . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. The man is then a recipient of the Lord's life.

— . As man is a form recipient of the Lord's life, he is an instrumental cause; but the life from the Lord is the principal cause; and this life is felt in the instrumental as its own, (because the principal and the instrumental cause act together as one cause).

6326. I spoke concerning the degrees of life in man, saying, that man consists of mere forms for receiving life, and that one form is more interior than another . . .

6371<sup>2</sup>. Before the Advent of the Lord into the world, the influx of life with men and Spirits was from Jehovah . . . through the Celestial Kingdom . . .

6384. Life where there is the conclusion of truth from scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

— . This life is in the external man; and, with some, in the lowest Natural. Des.

6389. 'Bone'=that which has little spiritual life. Tr.

6390. Life among works. . . Thus obscure life. Sig. and Ex.

6396. The good with them lies concealed . . . and impels them to live according to the truth.

6405<sup>e</sup>. 'The sons of Ammon'=those who falsify truths, and live according to them when falsified.

6451<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that life inflows through the inmost into the interiors, and through the interiors into the exteriors . . . and that it does not quiesce except in the ultimate . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Therefore there is the appearance as if life were in the ultimate; that is, in the body; when yet it is in the interiors; and neither is it there, but is in the Highest . . . Hence, too, it is that life in the exteriors is obscure relatively to life in the interiors; for in the exteriors life is general, coming forth from the influx of . . . innumerable things from the interiors . . .

6464. 'Jacob' expired'=new life there, namely, in the goods and truths of the Lower Natural . . . 6465.

6465. Thus in the posterior are all the priors in their order; and the case is the same with . . . those things which are of life with man. Ex.

6466. It has been shown that both lives with man, namely, the life of his thought and the life of his will, inflow from Heaven, and this through the Angels and Spirits who are with him. But it is to be understood that that which inflows from Heaven, inflows through Heaven from the Lord, for everything of life with the Angels is from the Lord . . . and they are also in the perception that it is so. And as everything of life with the Angels is from the Lord, everything of life with man is also from the Lord; for man is ruled through Angels and Spirits in particular; and through Heaven by the Lord in general.

6467. From this it is evident that no man ever has life from himself; and thus that he cannot think and will from himself; for the life of man consists in thinking and willing. For there is one only life, namely, the Lord's, which inflows into all, but is variously received, according to the quality which a man has induced on his soul through his life in the world. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. It is to be known that the life from the Lord is the life of love towards the universal human race.

6468. Spirits recently from the world . . . believe that everything of life is in man himself, and that nothing inflows . . . Spirits who are not good do not want to be instructed in these things, for they want to live from themselves. They said that I had no life, because they had heard me saying that I do not live from myself . . . I said, further, that everyone has life according to the form of his interiors which he has acquired by willing and acting, thinking and speaking.

—<sup>2</sup>. I afterwards spoke with good Spirits concerning the influx of life from the Lord—that this inflows into all; and that this is evident from Heaven, because it relates to a man . . . and that this would be impossible, unless life from the Lord inflowed into Heaven in general, and into each one there in particular. And also that it is evident from the fact that the universal Heaven relates to the Lord; and that the Lord is the centre of all the mental looks . . . I said, further, that the fact of everything of life being from the Lord is evident also from this—that the soul of man in the womb can so marvellously form the body and all its manifold members and organs in such a series, and its interiors according to the image of Heaven, which would be impossible unless all life were from the Lord, and unless Heaven were such.

[A.] 6469. (This was) a sign that (the Angels) are in the Lord's life.

6471. A certain Spirit . . . was brought into such a state that he did not think and will from himself . . . he then said that thus he could not live, but that life was grievous to him. He was then told that he had not loved to live in the Truth which he had taught; and that the Angels are in that state, and are in happiness when they perceive that they do not live from themselves . . . From this it was evident how difficult it is to live the life of faith, unless one lives in the good of charity.

6475. I heard it said to certain evil Spirits . . . that they should show one in Heaven who does not acknowledge . . . that the Lord is the life of all . . . but they could not.

—<sup>e</sup>. The Lord is present also where there is what is contrary, but merely to give them life . . .

6484. He continued there his former life, as all are wont to do.

—<sup>2</sup>. It was shown . . . what would be the quality of his future life, which had been foreseen, and that each thing of his life had been led by the Lord . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. He was amazed to find himself living after death.

6553. The life of the Celestial Internal and of the truths of faith, in scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

6571<sup>2</sup>. If anyone who is an evil end comes into Heaven, his life labours like one who lies in the death agony . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Their sphere is like a spiritual evaporation from each thing of their life.

6574. That thence is life to those who are in the truths of good. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. When the infernals are . . . infusing falsities and evils, they are in their life, and the delight of their life.

—<sup>3</sup>. This is the means by which spiritual life is bestowed. Ex. —<sup>3</sup>.

6576. That they should live through the Internal from the Divine through truth . . . and good. Sig. and Ex.

6601<sup>e</sup>. From these things it may be evident that the quality of man's life is circumstanced entirely according to the Societies into which his thought and affection extend themselves, and according to the quality and the quantity of the extension. (From experience.)

6625<sup>e</sup>. These and such other things are in the ideas of those who live evilly, and thence think evilly. Des.

6637<sup>2</sup>. The Church is the Church from this—that they live according to the Word, or according to doctrine from the Word; so that doctrine is the rule of life . . . Those who live evilly . . . are further from the Church than the Gentiles . . . It is to be known that whoever lives in the good of charity and of faith is the Church . . .

6666<sup>2</sup>. For all the delight of life, thus the life itself (of the infernals), consists in doing evilly . . .

6677. 'If a daughter, she shall live' (Ex. i. 16) = that if it is good they shall not destroy it. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that in good there is life; for good is of love; and love is the life of man. If evil . . . assaults good . . . the life of the one fights against the life of the other. And as the life from the good of celestial love is from the Divine, if the life from the love of self and of the world comes into collision with it, it begins to be extinguished; for it is suffocated; and thus they are tortured like those in the death agony . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. The case is different with truth; this has not life in itself; but from good; that is, through good from the Lord.

6685. 'Because they are living' (ver. 19) = that spiritual life is in them. 'To live' = spiritual life; here, spiritual life in those things which are of the Church, which are signified by 'the Hebrew women.' What spiritual life is . . . may be further expounded. The Spiritual in its first origin is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord's Divine Human . . . This Divine truth, in which is Divine good, is . . . the life itself which infills Heaven; nay, which infills the universe; and, where there is a subject, there it inflows; but it is varied in the subjects according to their form. In the subjects which are in agreement with good, it presents spiritual life; but in subjects which are in disagreement with good, it presents a life contrary to spiritual life, which in the Word is called 'death.' Hence it is evident . . . that spiritual life is to be in the truths from good which proceed from the Lord.

6704. It is the part of Christian prudence to examine well what is the quality of a man's life, and to exercise charity according thereto.

6705. Thus (the Ancients) reduced doctrine into order, and the life according to that doctrine. Hence the doctrine of their Church contained the laws of life.

—<sup>e</sup>. For everyone . . . defends his own life, and therefore either explains or changes the laws of doctrine in his own favour.

6706<sup>e</sup>. Nor does the Lord require more from the man of the Church, than that he live according to what he knows.

6716<sup>2</sup>. The Lord was conceived from Jehovah; hence the inmost of His life was Jehovah Himself; for the inmost of the life of every man, which is called the soul, is from the father . . . That the inmost of life . . . is continually inflowing and operating upon the external which is from the mother, and striving to make it like itself, even in the womb, may be evident from . . .

6717<sup>2</sup>. When a man has been regenerated, good manifests itself, especially by this—that he loves to live according to the truth . . .

6775. Those are said to be in simple good who . . . live according to the things which they believe . . .

6779<sup>2</sup>. For they who are in evils never acknowledge that charity and its works contribute to salvation; for they cannot acknowledge things which are against their life; for this would be to acknowledge things which are against themselves.

6832<sup>2</sup>. It is the fire . . . of that Sun which gives the esse of life to every man; and it is the vital fire itself which infls the interiors of man with heat.

—<sup>9</sup>. They who do not know that the vital fire with man is from a different origin than elementary fire . . .

6872<sup>2</sup>. The quality of every man is Known from his love; for love is the esse of the life of everyone; the veriest life comes forth thence.

— . Thus His Human was made Divine when He received into it His Father's love, which was the Esse of His Life.

—<sup>8</sup>. So that you would say that (the Angels) are nothing but loves all through. The reason is that all the interiors of an Angel—as also of a man—are nothing but forms recipient of life; and, as they are forms recipient of life, they are forms recipient of loves; for loves make the life of man.

6904<sup>9</sup>. The life of truth is the life which is lived by those of the Spiritual Church. Sig. and Ex.

6948<sup>3</sup>. As, for instance, the fallacy concerning the life of man, that it is of the body; when yet it is of the spirit in the body. . . [Also] the fallacy that life is permanent in man, when yet it inflows.

6949<sup>2</sup>. All those think from a separated Sensuous . . . who are in evil of life, and are thence in no faith; for he who lives evilly believes nothing.

6959<sup>2</sup>. If a man has faith . . . and afterwards recedes, and denies that which he had formerly believed; and especially if he lives contrary to the truth which he had confirmed . . . he profanes the truth . . . In the other life such become like skeletons, and have as little life left as have the bones . . .

6977. While a man lives in the world he is kept in a (reformable) state . . . whereas after death his life follows him, and he remains in the state which he has acquired by the whole course of his life in the world . . .

7016. Elevation to interior and more spiritual life in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

7017. 'See whether they yet live' (Ex.iv.18)=the perception of that life. Ex. . . 'To live'=spiritual life.

7081. The life itself of man is his love; and such as his love is, such is his life . . . N.54.

7082. There are two things in the natural world which make life there, namely, heat and light; and there are two things in the Spiritual World which make the life there, namely, love and faith. . . Moreover, love is actually the vital heat of man . . . and faith is actually the light of man . . .

7085. As love is the source of man's life . . . all in the other life are consociated according to loves; for his life—that is, his love—follows everyone . . .

7186<sup>3</sup>. It is according to order that everyone carries with him his life which he has lived in the world; and according to it is his state in the other life. . . (Thus) those who have lived in good—but with whom there are also gross and impure things which belong to the loves of self and of the world—cannot be associated with those who are in the Heavens, until those things have been removed.

7197<sup>2</sup>. When it is said that charity and faith make Heaven, there is meant the life of charity and faith. But it is well to be known that the life to which belongs Heaven is a life according to the truths and goods of faith concerning which the man has been instructed. Unless these are the rules and principles (or beginnings) of his life, in vain does he expect Heaven, however he has lived; for without them a man is like a reed which bends according to every wind. . . In a word, the life of Christian good is that which makes Heaven; not the life of natural good.

7212. The Lord's life (possessed by them) to eternity. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason the Lord's life is in Heaven, consequently that those there are in His life, is that they are in the truth and good which proceed from the Lord; and the good which is in the truth is the Lord Himself; and the truth in which is the good is the life from the Lord from which all live. From these things it is evident that those who are in good and thence in truth . . . are in the Lord's life.

7295<sup>2</sup>. For even evil men have Angels with them . . . Hence it is that as everything of the life follows, they are at first associated with Angels. But when, from their life in the world, such cannot receive the influx of truth and good from Heaven, the Angels and good Spirits by degrees recede from them; and, as these recede, they become less and less rational . . .

7317. Those who infest are those within the Church who had professed faith . . . and yet had lived contrary to the precepts of faith; in a word, who had been in persuasive faith, and in a life of evil. When these come into the other life, they carry with them the principle that they are to be introduced into Heaven . . . and they do not want to know anything about the life of faith and of charity . . . for they say that . . . all evils of life have been washed away. (This idea shown from the Word to be false.)

—<sup>3</sup>. After some time they begin to know that no others are intromitted into Heaven than those who have lived the life of faith . . . and then they begin to despise their faith . . . and soon they cast themselves into the falsities which are against the truths of faith. Into this state is turned the life of those who have confessed faith, and have lived a life contrary to faith. These are they who infest the upright there, and who are meant in special by 'Pharaoh.'

7342<sup>2</sup>. For the affection of love is man's life. If his affection is the love of self and of the world, then his whole life is nothing else; nor can he strive against it, for this would be to strive against his own life itself . . .

7408. This fasciculation is presented to view especially in the brain . . . and not unlike is it in the purer, and, at last, in the purest substances, where the forms . . . are the very forms of life.

—<sup>2</sup>. That forms or substances are recipient of life, may be evident from each thing which appears in living things; and also that the recipient forms or substances are disposed most suitably for the influx of life. Without the reception of life in substances, which are forms, there would not be anything alive in the natural world, nor in the Spiritual World. (Continued under FORM.) The reason the learned have perceived the things of man's life . . . as being devoid of recipient substances or forms, has been that they have believed the life or soul to be a something flamy or ethereal, thus such a thing as would be dissipated after death; whence the insanity of many of them that after death there is no life.

[A] 7418<sup>2</sup>. Those who are within the Church and do not live the life of faith. Sig.

7419. The Sensitive of those who have been in the knowledge of faith, but in a life of evil (corresponds to lice and their habitat).

7437<sup>2</sup>. The reason those who are in evils think to falsities . . . is that evils are the very delights of their life, insomuch that they are their very lives . . .

7439<sup>2</sup>. (Such) do not believe that everyone's life awaits him; nor that man is to be prepared for Heaven by his whole life in the world; and that this is done of the Lord's mercy . . . Hence, too, they believe . . . that man can be instantaneously transmitted into the life of good . . . not knowing that if the life of evil were taken away from the evil, they would have nothing whatever of life; nor that if those who are in a life of evil were admitted into Heaven, they would feel Hell in themselves . . .

7494. Therefore, those who either pervert, extinguish, or reject with themselves the good of love and the truth of faith, have no life in them; for the life which is from the Divine is to will good and believe truth; and those who . . . will evil and believe . . . falsity have what is contrary to life. This contrary to life is Hell, and is called 'death' . . . That the life of love and faith is called 'life,' and also 'eternal life,' and those who have it in them 'living men;' and that the contrary of life is called 'death,' and also 'eternal death,' and that they are called 'dead men.' Ill.

7506<sup>3</sup>. See IDEA, here.

7554. (The terrible vastation of) those who have filled the memory . . . with such things as are of faith . . . and yet have lived contrary to them. Sig. and Des.

7748. Those who love Knowledges only, and not a life according to them, relate to the interior membrane of the skull. But those who accustom themselves to speak without affection, and to draw the thought to themselves, and withdraw it from others, relate to the same membrane ossified; because, from having some spiritual life, they come to have no life. 7749. 7750.

7750. Those only have spiritual life who are in heavenly love, and are thence in Knowledges. Ex.

7778<sup>3</sup>. It is an arcanum that everyone's faith is such as is his life. If, therefore, the life is damnable, so is the faith; for there is a faith of falsity when the life is evil . . .

7779<sup>3</sup>. For who does not know . . . that the life of faith causes a man to be spiritual, and not faith except in so far as it has been implanted in life? The life of man is his love, and that which he loves he wills and intends . . .

7796<sup>2</sup>. For without the influx of (good and truth from the Divine) there is no life.

7847. As angelic ideas are such, they are also alive; and thus the things in the natural world which are dead objects, when they pass into the Spiritual World, become living objects; for everything spiritual is alive, because it proceeds from the Lord.

7950<sup>2</sup>. He who believes that those who are in evil of life can be in illustration as to the truths of faith, is very much mistaken. They can be in a state of confirmation, that is, they can confirm the doctrinal things of their Church . . . but they cannot see whether the things they confirm are true, or not. . . He, therefore, who is in evil as to life, is in the falsity of his evil, and does not believe the truth, however well he knows it . . .

8013. That he who when instructed receives the truth and good of the Church, and lives according to them, shall be as he who had been instructed before within the Church, and had lived a life conformable to the precepts of faith and charity. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For before regeneration the life is according to the precepts of faith; whereas after regeneration it is according to the precepts of charity. Ex.

8034. For the sake of life. (See FAITH, here.)

8043. For the man's life is then (from the faith of charity).

8148<sup>2</sup>. In persuasive faith . . . yet in a life of evil. (See FAITH, here.)

8152<sup>2</sup>. When life makes the Church, and not doctrine separated from life, the Church is one; but when doctrine makes the Church, there are many.

8206<sup>2</sup>. The life of good, or a life according to the truths of faith, effects this [spiritual safety]. (See EVIL, here.)

8252. With the man of the Church there must be the life of piety, and there must be the life of charity. They must be conjoined. The life of piety without the life of charity conduces to nothing; but the former together with the latter, to all things.

8253. The life of piety is to think and speak piously, to devote one's self much to prayers, to conduct one's self humbly then, to frequent temples, and to hearken devoutly to the preachings then, and to approach the sacrament of the Supper often every year, and in like manner [to observe] all other things of worship according to the ordinances of the Church. But the life of charity is to will well and to do well to the neighbour; in every work to act from what is just and fair, and from what is good and true; in like manner in every employment -funcione: in a word, the life of charity consists in the performance of uses.

8254. The veriest worship of the Lord consists in the life of charity, but not in the life of piety without it. The life of piety without the life of charity is to want to look out for one's self only, and not for the neighbour; whereas the life of piety together with the life of charity is to want to look out for one's self for the sake of the neighbour. The former life is from love towards self, but the latter is from love towards the neighbour.

8256. A man is such as is his life of charity, but not such as is his life of piety without the former. Hence a life of charity awaits a man to eternity, but not a life of piety, except in so far as the latter is in accord with the former. That a life of charity awaits a man to eternity. III.

8257. By the life through which the Lord is principally worshipped, is meant a life according to His precepts in the Word ; for through these man knows what faith and what charity are. This is Christian life ; and is called spiritual life. But life according to the laws of what is just and honourable, without the former one, is civil and moral life. This life makes a man a citizen of the world ; but the former one makes him a citizen of Heaven.

8293°. This delight (of doing evil) then makes their life, which life is infernal life.

8311. Those in heresies and in a life of good. (See CHURCH, and FALSITY, here.)

8313°. For every one in the other life retains the principles of his faith which he had had in the life of the body ; and no others change them into truths except those who have been in the good of life ; for good longs for truth . . . But those who have been in evil of life do not change ; they are as it were hard, and reject truths ; and are also in obscurity, so that they even cannot see them . . .

8314. The like (despair of enlarging their dominion) with those who are in a life of evil from the love of self. Sig. and Ex.

8315. That those who are in a life of falsity from that love (dare not do anything). Sig. and Ex.

8321°. No others are in the faculty (of receiving the truth of good and the good of truth) than those who have lived a life of charity. This life gives that faculty . . .

8346. For spiritual life is acquired through temptations.

8349°. The genuine affection of truth is to want to know what is true for the sake of life in the world, and for the sake of eternal life. These come into temptation when the truths with them begin to be deficient . . . Tr.

8358. In the things which follow it treats concerning the instruction as to how they should live, in order not to yield in temptations.

8361. 'If thou wilt do what is right in His eyes' = life according to (the Lord's precepts). Ex.

—°. For the Lord is in His precepts when one lives according to them.

8362. 'And wilt hearken to His precepts' = obedience, and a life according to the goods of faith, which are the interior things of the Church. Ex.

8363. 'And wilt keep all His statutes' = a life according to the truths of faith, which are the exterior things of the Church. Ex.

8364. That they should be withheld from the evils which are with those who are in faith separated and in a life of evil. Sig. and Ex.

—°. For, in the internal sense, such things are signified as affect the spiritual life. The diseases which affect that life are evils . . . Faith and charity make spiritual life, and this life is sick when falsity is in place of the truth of faith, and evil in the place of the good of charity ; for these bring that life to the death which is called spiritual death, and is damnation ; as diseases bring the natural life to its death.

—°. By all the 'diseases' here mentioned are signified spiritual diseases, which are evils destroying the life of the will of good, and falsities destroying the life of the understanding of truth ; in a word, destroying the spiritual life which is of faith and charity . . . Every disease corresponds to its own evil. The reason is that everything of man's life is from the Spiritual World ; and therefore if his spiritual life sickens, there is also evil derived thence into his natural life, which there becomes disease. (Continued under DISEASE.)

8389. To perform repentance is . . . to desist from sins, and to lead a new life according to the precepts of faith. N.161.

8390. He who only acknowledges universally that he is a sinner . . . and does not explore himself . . . does not make the confession of repentance ; for he lives afterwards as he had done before.

8391. He who leads a life of faith performs repentance daily ; for he reflects upon the evils which are with him, acknowledges them, bewares of them, and supplicates the Lord for aid. For, of himself, man is continually falling . . .

8392°. He who is evil, and who in a state of compulsion promises repentance, and also does what is good, when he comes into a free state, returns into his former life of evil. It is otherwise with a good man . . .

8393. The repentance of the mouth and not of the life is not repentance. Sins are not remitted through repentance of the mouth, but through repentance of the life. Sins . . . are not removed from man except through a life according to the precepts of faith. In proportion as a man lives according to these, his sins are removed ; and in proportion as they are removed they are remitted . . . In the other life a man can be withheld from evil in proportion as he had resisted evil in the life of the body ; and he can then be kept in good, in proportion as in the life of the body he had done what is good from affection.

8394. After a man has . . . performed repentance, he must remain constant in good up to the end of life. If he afterwards relapses to the former life of evil, and embraces it, he then profanes . . .

8400. What is new of life. Sig. . . For the manna = the good of truth, which is the life of the spiritual man.

8403°. The reason (for temptations) is that regeneration takes place to the end that the life of the old man may die, and that the new life which is heavenly may be insinuated. Hence it may be evident that there must necessarily be a combat ; for the life of the old man resists, and does not want to be extinguished ; and the life of the new man cannot enter except when the life of the old man has been extinguished. Hence it is evident that there is a combat on both sides, and an ardent one, because it is for the life.

—°. Moreover (many temptations are necessary) for there are very many kinds of evil which have made the delight of the former life, that is, which have made the old life . . . All these evils are diametrically opposite to the heavenly good which is to be insinuated, and which is to make the new life.

[A.] 8408. A life according to their own pleasure, and such as they lusted for. Sig. and Ex. . . For this life is the life of the proprium.

8409<sup>2</sup>. 'Flesh'=what is dead ; 'spirit,' what is alive. For spiritual death is from evil ; and what is alive is so called from good ; for spiritual life is from good. Ill.

—<sup>4</sup>. For the life of the flesh, which is proper to the body, is nothing but the pleasure of the senses, the delight of the appetites, and concupiscence. (See FLESH, here.)

8410. 'Bread'=the good of heavenly life ; and, in the opposite sense, the good of natural life separated from that which is heavenly ; thus the good of pleasures ; for 'bread'=that which . . . preserves the spiritual life of the soul ; and that this is the good of love, is evident from the life of Heaven, which consists solely of that good. Whereas in the opposite sense 'bread'=that which . . . supports the life of those who are in Hell ; and that this is the evil of the love of self and of the world, is evident from the life of Hell, which consists solely therein.

8413. 'To kill'=to deprive of life, here, of that which is from delight and good, for in these consists the life of man. Refs.

—'. 'Hunger'=a lack of good . . . for when that which nourishes the spiritual life, or the life of the spirit, is taken away, hunger ensues.

—<sup>2</sup>. When the good of charity, which makes spiritual life, is to be insinuated, there is then removed the delight of pleasures which had made the natural life ; and (then) the man comes into temptation. For he believes that if he is deprived of the delight of pleasures, he is deprived of all life ; for his natural life consists in that delight, or good, as he calls it ; for he is unaware that when this of life is removed, the Lord insinuates spiritual delight and good in its place. This good is that which is signified by the manna, and the former by the flesh and bread in Egypt . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Before regeneration, the delight of pleasures was everything of his life ; whereas after regeneration the good of charity makes everything of life ; and then the delight of pleasures serves as a medium, and as the ultimate plane.

8417. Life from (celestial good). Sig.

—'. 'To go'=life. Refs.

8420. Whether they are able to live the life of truth and good. Sig.

—'. 'To walk'=to live. Refs. and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. 'To journey,' 'to progress,' and 'to sojourn'=to live. Ex.

8453. For without goods and truths the Natural is not alive.

8456. For no truth of doctrine or of the Word becomes truth with man until it has received life from the Divine ; and it receives life through the insinuation of the truth which proceeds from the Lord, which is called the truth of peace. This truth is not the truth of faith, but it is the life or soul of the truth of faith . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. It is to be known that the lower or exterior things with a man who is being regenerated receive life successively from the higher or interior things. Thus the truth of faith [receives life] from the truth of peace, and this [receives life] from the Lord Himself. The insinuation of life from the Lord with those who are being regenerated takes place in successive order from Himself, thus through the inmost, and so through interiors to exteriors ; so that with the regenerate there is what is open down from the Lord . . .

8459<sup>e</sup>. Truth is the form of good, and good is the life and as it were the soul of that form.

8464. That this is the good which shall be appropriated and make their life. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. For the good which is from the Lord makes the life of Heaven with man, and afterwards nourishes and supports it.

8495<sup>b</sup>. 'Fire'=everything which is of life ; and 'to kindle a fire'=that which is of life from proprium.

8512. The appearance of the Divine obscured . . . happens when men do not live according to the Divine precepts ; for when they live according to them, they live according to Divine order . . . and when they live according to order they live in the Lord, for the Lord is order itself. Hence it follows, that he who does not live according to the precepts and laws which are of Divine order, does not live in the Lord, consequently that the Divine is then obscured with him. By to live according to order is here meant to be led by the Lord through good ; whereas by to live not as yet according to order is meant to be led through truth, and (in this case) the Lord does not appear . . . Tr. 8513<sup>3</sup>, Ex.

8530<sup>2</sup>. (Truth is to good) as is every organic form of the body to the life therein.

8548. He who does not receive spiritual life, that is, who is not generated anew by the Lord, cannot come into Heaven. Ill.

8549. From his parents, man is not born into spiritual life, but into natural life. Spiritual life is to love God above all things, and to love the neighbour as one's self, and this according to the precepts of faith which the Lord has taught in the Word ; but natural life is to love self and the world more than the neighbour, nay, more than God Himself.

8550. Hence the derivation of evil has at last become so great, that everything of the proper life of man is nothing but evil. This . . . is not broken and altered, except through the life of faith and charity from the Lord.

8552. These evils are entirely contrary to spiritual life; they destroy it; and therefore unless a man, as to the spiritual life, is conceived, born, and educated anew . . . he is condemned.

8553. As man is such, the order of life with him is inverted . . . and must be [again] inverted.

8557. What is progressive of spiritual life. Sig.

8559. According to the order of life to receive the life of Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

— For man is endowed by the Lord with this life through temptations, which are described by the journeyings of the sons of Israel in the wilderness. The life of Heaven is to be led by the Lord through good; and in order that man may come to this life, good must be implanted through truth . . .

8567. For the most part the spiritual life is brought to this extremity in temptations; for the natural life is thus extinguished . . . This despair is presently dissipated . . . for after every spiritual temptation [there is] consolation, and as it were what is new of life.

8571. That from the lack of truth all spiritual life is expiring. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For spiritual life consists of the good of charity and of faith, and of the truth of faith internal and external.

8584. That (truths of faith from the Lord) will . . . give them spiritual life. Sig.

8603<sup>4</sup>. The forms in the animal kingdom (as distinguished from those in the vegetable kingdom) have been created to receive life. Hence, as the forms recipient of life are in successive order, so also are the lives which thence result; for the forms or substances recipient of life are subjects, and the things which result from their changes and modifications are forces which are to be called lives, because they are living forces.

—<sup>5</sup>. For all the things which are of life relate to truth, and their perfection to good; and, in the opposite sense, to falsity, and their imperfection to evil.

8604<sup>3</sup>. For the Lord inflows with every man through the truth which is from Himself; through this He gives life to man; for the light which is from the Lord is Divine truth, and is 'life' (John i.4). This Divine truth . . . inflows into the good with a man, and through it draws the man to the Lord; for the life which is from the Lord is attractive, because it is from love . . .

8635. No one can be regenerated unless he knows such things as are of the new life, that is, of the spiritual life; for man is introduced into that life through regeneration. The things which belong to the new life, or to the spiritual life, are the truths which are to be believed, and the goods which are to be done.

8638. For he who knows these things can think them, afterwards will them, and finally do them, and thus have new life.

8639. (Whereas) he who does not know (these truths) cannot live from Him . . .

8640. From these things it may be evident of what quality is the life of one who has been regenerated, and that it is the life of faith; and also that this life cannot be given to man until he is in such a state that he is able to acknowledge the truths of faith; and, in proportion as he acknowledges, to will them.

8643<sup>e</sup>. Thus truths become of the life, and are called goods.

8665. To ask concerning the life, and its prosperity and happiness. Sig.

8674<sup>e</sup>. These goods make eternal life with man.

8700<sup>2</sup>. It is according to order that those are saved who have lived well, and that those are condemned who have lived evilly. Hence it is impossible for those who have lived well to be sent into Hell, and for those who have lived evilly to be elevated into Heaven . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. It is according to order that in the other life all are consociated according to the life which they had acquired for themselves in the world . . .

8701<sup>2</sup>. Man has not been regenerated until he acts from the affection of good . . . When he is in this state, then his life is the life of good . . .

— For in the other life all are consociated according to the life of the will, and not according to the life of the understanding . . .

— Those who are evil are not sent into Hell until they are in the evil of their life; for when they are in this they are also in the falsity of their evil . . .

8707. The light of intelligence and the derivative life. Sig. and Ex.

8708. The reception of the truths of faith is not effected through acknowledgment alone, but through acknowledgment conjoined with life . . .

8746. The internal man is regenerated through thinking the things of faith, and willing them; but the external man through a life according to them. The life of faith is charity.

8747. The man who has been regenerated is in Heaven as to his internal man . . . and is then able to live the life of Heaven; to love the Lord, to love the neighbour, to understand truth, to relish good, and to perceive the bliss thence. These things are the happiness of eternal life.

8750<sup>3</sup>. There are in general two states of life; namely, a state of thought . . . and a state of affection . . .

8754<sup>2</sup>. Afterwards, when the man receives new life, which he receives for the first time when he is in good, the truths of faith are implanted . . .

8755. 'They journeyed from Rephidim' = what is continuous of life from the former state. 'To journey' = what is continuous of life. Refs.

8762. Those who at the same time believe that such things are to be observed, but that still the essential of worship is the life of faith—that is, charity towards the neighbour and love to the Lord—these are of the Internal Church.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is that those who think concerning eternal salvation place it in a life of piety, and nothing of it in a life of charity.

8767. 'If ye will keep My covenant' = life in good, and thence conjunction. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. For he who lives according to the precepts is conjoined with the Lord; for these teach life, and also give life, and thus open the way to Heaven, and the sight to the Lord.

[A.] 8772. The good which has not its quality from the truths of faith is . . . natural good, which does not give eternal life. The reason is that natural good has in it only natural life, which life is not unlike the life of beasts . . . But beasts cannot receive spiritual life. Hence it is evident that spiritual life is acquired solely through the truths of faith.

—<sup>2</sup>. This life, namely, spiritual life, is first acquired through knowing the truths which are of faith; afterwards through acknowledging them; and finally through believing them . . .

8781<sup>2</sup>. For the Divine can appear to anyone no otherwise than according to the state of his life and of the derivative apperception . . .

8794<sup>2</sup>. Sometimes the communication with some of the Societies has been taken away, and then there remained so much of life and such a kind of life as there was of extension into the remaining Societies; and when many Societies were taken away, then the life laboured and began to be as it were extinguished . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason these arcana are unknown to man is that at this day he believes that he has life in himself, and thus that he lives without consociation with Spirits and Angels . . . But in this he is completely mistaken, for all the life of man is from the Lord through Societies.

—<sup>4</sup>. It is to be known, further, that the extension of life of those who are of the Spiritual Church is to the angelic spheres in the Second Heaven . . . and not to the third Heaven . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. And further—that everyone in the other life comes among those with whom he had communicated in the life of the body: his dominant love determines it; for this is what constitutes the sphere of everyone's life, and extends itself according to its quality, and according to its quantity.

8801. 'Whether beast or man, he shall not live' (Ex. xix. 13) = that good and truth would lose spiritual life. . . . 'To live' = spiritual life . . . Good and truth lose life when the influx from the Lord is no longer perceived; for thence they have life . . . They then do indeed appear like good and truth; but no otherwise than as a painting, which in itself is not alive.

8806<sup>2</sup>. Those of the Spiritual Church who live the life of truth, and thence the life of good, are withheld from evils and are kept in good by the Lord . . . And they receive good from the Lord, that is, they are holy, in so far as they live a life of good according to the genuine truths of faith . . .

8812<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the heat and light from the sun of the world are devoid of life; but the heat and light from the Sun of Heaven are [attended] with life; and the latter . . . are therefore called spiritual, because they have life in them, and the former . . . are called natural, and have no life in them. The life which is apperceived in living things, in heat and from heat, is not from the heat of the sun of the world, but it is from the heat of the Sun of Heaven. (Continued under HEAT.)

8834. For the Lord inflows through good into truth, and thus gives life to man. This life appears in man as his, but it is the Lord's in the truth from good with him . . .

8853. Every man has a proprium which he loves above all things . . . It is constantly present in his thought and also in his will; and it makes his veriest life.

8854<sup>2</sup>. (For example) he who loves himself above all things recollects himself in every single thing . . . for his life is a life of self.

8856. When a man is being regenerated, charity is implanted through faith, until the former is dominant, and (then) he has new life; for it is then constantly in his thought, and constantly in his will . . .

8857. The like is the case with love to the Lord: when this love is dominant, it is present in every single thing of his life . . .

8858. A man is entirely such as is the dominant of his life. By this he is distinguished from others. According to this is his Heaven if he is good, or his Hell if he is evil. For this is his veriest will; and thus it is the very esse of his life, which cannot be changed after death. From these things it is evident what is the quality of the life with one who is regenerate; and what is the quality of the life with one who is not regenerate.

8865. Hence it is that the life of the Angels is the life of the Lord in them. The life of their will is the life of love from the Lord, and the life of their understanding is the life of faith from the Lord . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. There are such Spirits and Angels with a man as is that which universally reigns with him, because (this) is the life of everyone. All the cheerfulness and content which a man has, even when he is thinking about other things, is thence . . . That they are the source of it does not come to the perception of the man, because the man does not know that his life inflows, nor that that which is universally regnant makes his life; nor that when this of his life is touched, it is as if the pupil of his eye were touched . . .

8868<sup>2</sup>. In order that truth may be [truth], there must be life in it; for truth without life is not the truth of faith with man; and life is from no other source than good, that is, through good from the Lord . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The truths in which is the Lord are truths which are alive, and the truths in which the Lord is not are truths which are not alive; those which are alive are truths of faith, from love to the Lord and from charity towards the neighbour; those which are not alive are not truths, because within them there is the love of self and the love of the world. Thus can Spirits and Angels . . . be discriminated; for everyone's truths are according to his life, that is, according to that which universally reigns with him.

8873. For life from the Lord inflows only into a humble and submissive heart, because this is fitted to receive it . . .

8878<sup>2</sup>. The Divine love is the esse of all life.

8879. 'Mercy' = the influx of good and truth from the Lord, and the derivative spiritual life, which is bestowed through regeneration.

888<sup>1</sup>. In order that (truths) may live with man, they must inflow from the Lord. They are indeed learned by man . . . but so long as he does not do them, they do not become alive. But when they are . . . insinuated into the will . . . and thence into act, they become alive, and are of faith.

888<sup>2</sup>. 'To take the name of God in vain'=to turn truth into evil, that is, to believe that it is truth, and still to live in evil; and it also=to turn good into falsity, that is, to live holily and yet not to believe. Both are profanation. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'The house swept'=a life contrary to truths.

888<sup>7</sup>. For if these things are violated, spiritual life perishes with that man, and becomes merely natural life, and afterwards sensuous life . . .

889<sup>3</sup>. Before a man has been regenerated . . . he is in disquiet and unrest; for his natural life then fights with his spiritual life, and wants to dominate over it . . .

889<sup>8</sup>. The derivative state of life in Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

890<sup>2</sup>. That spiritual life is not to be taken away from anyone. Sig. and Ex.

— . As spiritual life, or the life of Heaven with man, is the life of faith and of charity . . .

891<sup>0</sup>. It is believed in the world that thought is the man; but there are two things which constitute the life of man—the understanding and the will. . . Thought, without the affection which is of love, does not make anything of life with man; but thought which is from the affection of love . . .

891<sup>2</sup>. To be judged according to the will, is the same as to be judged according to the love, and also the same as to be judged according to the ends of life, and also to be judged according to the life; for the will of man is his love, and is his end of life, and is his veriest life. III.

892<sup>2</sup>. That thus the life of Heaven with them would perish. Sig. and Ex.

892<sup>4</sup>. That the life of Heaven will not perish; but merely that its existence and quality may be known. Sig. and Ex.

892<sup>5</sup>. A holy fear of the Divine, and the consequent preservation of spiritual life. Sig. and Ex.

893<sup>6</sup>. Worship in special according to the state of everyone's spiritual life. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>0</sup>. The various goods which are of the spiritual life. Sig.

894<sup>1</sup>. For the things which are hatched from the proprium . . . have life from man, which life is no life . . . Whereas that which is . . . from the Divine has life in it; for all life is from the Divine.

894<sup>8</sup>. For the appearance of everyone there is according to his . . . life.

897<sup>1</sup>. They had lived wholly at their pleasure . . . and had therefore at heart denied the Divine . . . and all other things of faith, and this was the reason they had not acknowledged the holiness of the Word. (Whereas) all who have been in the truths of faith, and in a life according to them, have held the Word to be holy . . . For with those who are in the life of good, the interiors are open into Heaven . . . whereas with those who are in a life of evil, the interiors are . . . open into Hell . . . —<sup>2</sup>.

898<sup>7</sup>. They do not consider that the confidence of faith is impossible except with those who live the life of charity.

898<sup>8</sup>. For the will is the esse of man's life.

899<sup>1</sup>. For his life awaits everyone after death. Such as a man is when he dies, such he remains . . . (that is) such as he is from the whole course of his life . . .

899<sup>3</sup>. The uses themselves make the spiritual life with men.

— . For that which with a man is regarded as the end, makes his veriest life.

—<sup>4</sup>. For the end, which is the love, alone lives with man; the means to the end do not of themselves live, but receive life from the end . . .

900<sup>2</sup>. For matrimony . . . in the spiritual sense, is the conjunction of the life of the one with that of the other. According to Divine order there is a conjunction of the life from the truths of faith with the life from the good of charity . . .

900<sup>3</sup>. The non-deprivation of the interior life which is 'food,' and of the exterior life which is 'clothing.' Sig. and Ex.

900<sup>7</sup>. The injuring of the truth of faith, and the consequent loss of spiritual life. Sig. and Ex.

— . The reason spiritual life perishes through the injuring of the truth of faith, is that good united to truth makes that life; and therefore when truth is secretly taken away, good falls, and so does spiritual life.

900<sup>8</sup>. 'Death'=damnation, because with (such) the truths of faith and the goods of love have been extinguished; for these are what constitute the veriest life of man; for they are from the Lord, from whom alone is life . . . The reason why those who are in evils and falsities . . . still live, is that they have been born men, and thence are in the faculty of receiving life from the Lord; and they also do receive from the Lord so much of life as enables them to think, to reason, and to speak; and thereby to present the evil with them so that it appears as good, and the falsity as truth, and thus to act semblances of life.

901<sup>1</sup>. (Those who extinguish the spiritual life of others unintentionally.) Tr.

901<sup>2</sup>. Hypocrisy cannot be remitted; because deceit is like poison which . . . destroys the remains, (and then) nothing of spiritual life is left. Tr.

—<sup>3</sup>. The Lord remits everyone's sins . . . but still they are not therefore remitted unless the man performs serious repentance, and desists from evils, and afterwards lives a life of faith and charity, and thus up to the end of his life. When this is done, the man then receives from the Lord spiritual life, which is called new life; and when, from this life, he looks at the evils of his former life, and holds them in aversion and horror, then first are they remitted . . .

—<sup>0</sup>. 'Wanting bread'=those who are deprived of all spiritual life; for 'bread' = the sustentation of the spiritual life through good.

[A]. 9020. Those who want to dispense the things . . . which are of the heavenly life with man, to the end that they may dominate . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. They thus deprive themselves of all spiritual life . . .

9026<sup>e</sup>. After the internal things of the Church had been opened by the Lord, man was to live the internal life which is of faith and charity, and that external life in which internal things make the life.

9028. 'If he shall . . . walk abroad upon his crutch' = the forces of life in him. . . 'To walk' = to live. Refs.

9030. That truth is called spiritual truth which together with good makes the life of the internal man; whereas scientific truth is that truth which makes the life of the external man . . .

9031<sup>3</sup>. (The sickening and death of the spiritual life. See DISEASE, here.)

—<sup>4</sup>. (The nutrition, recreation, and restoration of the spiritual life.) Sig.

—<sup>5</sup>. As (these things) are not said in the Word of the natural life, but of another life which is distinct from the natural life, it is evident . . . that man has another life, which is that of his internal man. Those who think grossly concerning the life of man, believe that he has no other life than that which is of the body, which is the life of the external or natural man. They wonder what the life of the internal man is . . . If they are told that this life is the life of faith and charity, and that the internal man is man's spirit which lives after death . . . they wonder still more; and those of them who live solely to the body and not to the soul . . . apprehend nothing of what is said about the life of faith and charity; for they have thought only from natural light . . . and therefore after death . . . they live in the shade of death, that is, in falsities from evil.

9033. If faith in the Word perishes, the man cannot spiritually live; for man has spiritual life through faith from the Word.

9034<sup>3</sup>. Spiritual good formed through truths is that which makes the spiritual life of man.

—<sup>4</sup>. From these things it is evident how the truths of the literal sense of the Word serve for forming spiritual truths; in general, for forming faith and charity, which make the spiritual life; which life consists in being affected with truths for the sake of good, and in being affected with good from truths, and finally in being affected with truths from good.

9042<sup>e</sup>. He who is in the life of faith in act. Sig.

9043<sup>e</sup>. When good is in the Natural, then the man is new; his life is then from good, and his form from truths from good; and he is like an Angel; for the Angels have life from good, and form from truths . . .

9049<sup>3</sup>. For every man carries with him into the other life that which through his life in the world he has implanted in his heart . . .

9050. That 'soul' = spiritual life, is evident from the signification of 'soul,' which is, the life of man, that is, the life of his faith, which is spiritual life. In the Word, 'heart' and 'soul' are mentioned passim, and by 'heart' is there signified the life of love, and by 'soul' the life of faith. Man has two faculties recipient of life from the Lord . . . to the faculty called the will pertains love, for the good of love makes its life; and to the faculty called the understanding pertains faith, for the truths of faith make its life. But these two lives with man are still one; and, when they are one, then the things which are of faith are also of love . . . and the things which are of love are also of faith . . . Such is the life with all in Heaven.

—<sup>6</sup>. Love has its quality from faith, and faith has its life from love . . .

9051. Man has an exterior and an interior understanding . . . It is the latter which is illustrated by the Lord when the man receives faith; for it is in the light of Heaven, and in it is the spiritual life of man, which is not so much manifested to him in the world, but in the other life . . . Meanwhile that life lies concealed interiorly in the thought of the exterior understanding, and produces what is holy and reverential there for the Lord, the Word, etc.

9061. The internal man cannot live the spiritual life unless the external is in agreement . . .

9086<sup>3</sup>. Men might apprehend the Word according to the internal sense if they lived the angelic life, namely, the life of faith and love . . . They who live this life are illustrated by the Lord, and see the holy things of the Word; and by no means any others.

9094<sup>2</sup>. Man comes into such wisdom after . . . death; but only that man who had received in the world the life of faith and charity from the Lord . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. All the truths with man have life from the affections which are of some love. Truth without life thence is like sound . . . without an idea . . . Hence it is evident that the life of man's understanding is from the life of his will; consequently, the life of truth is from the life of good . . . If, therefore, there are two truths which do not live from the same general affection . . . they cannot but be dissipated . . .

9103<sup>2</sup>. The reason interior good is to be restored to the full, is that this good makes the spiritual life of man; and unless the spiritual life is restored to the full, the exterior good which makes the natural life cannot be restored; for the latter life is restored through the former. Tr. —<sup>3</sup>, Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. That the external man is regenerated . . . through the internal, may be evident. . . For the things which are in the external or natural man live from the light of Heaven; for this light is alive, because it proceeds from the Lord, who is life itself: but they do not live from natural light, for this light in itself is dead. In order, therefore, that the things which are in this light may live, there must be an influx of the living light through the internal man from the Lord . . .

9117. As faith and charity, which are from the Lord, make the spiritual life of man . . . to act against conscience is to act against that life.

9127<sup>4</sup>. For these are elevated by the Lord from the life of the sensuous things of the body towards the life of their spirit; thus from the light of the world into the light of Heaven . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. 'To shed blood' . . . does not signify to deprive a man of the life of the body, but to . . . deprive him of the life of the soul, that is, to destroy his spiritual life, which is from faith and love to the Lord.

9128<sup>2</sup>. Those who see (the good and evil in themselves) are those who have received from the Lord the life of faith and charity ; for this life is internal life, or the life of the internal man.

—<sup>3</sup>. Nothing comes forth from itself, but from what is prior to itself, thus at last from . . . the Lord. He who apprehends this can also apprehend that everything of life with man is from the Lord ; and as charity and faith make the veriest life of man, that everything of charity and faith is from the Lord . . .

9136. 'Which are alive' (Ex.xxii.4)=in which there is spiritual life . . . which is the life of faith and charity.

9141<sup>2</sup>. There is with man the fire of life, and the light of life ; the fire of life is his love, and the light of life is his faith . . .

9152. It treats (here) of the loss of the truth of faith with man, thus of the loss of spiritual life ; and of its restoration . . . But these things . . . are for the most part unknown to man, because it is not known what spiritual life is, thus neither that this life is an interior life, which is distinct from natural life, which is exterior ; nor is it known that the former life is given to man by the Lord through the reception of the truth of faith in the good of charity.

9182<sup>3</sup>. For good and truth make the life of man, moral and civil good and truth the life of the external man, and spiritual good and truth the life of the internal man. It is to be known that the life of man is from no other source than good and truth ; for all that which a man loves is called good, and all that which he believes is called truth . . .

9188. There are two things which make Heaven, thus spiritual life with man : the truth of faith in the Lord, and the good of love to Him . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident that with such spiritual life is null, because it has been destroyed through the falsities of evil ; and in so far as they have conjoined these falsities with truths, so far they have extinguished spiritual life with themselves. Therefore . . . it is said, 'Thou shalt not vivify them.' 9189.

—<sup>4</sup>. The extinction of their spiritual life is described by 'widowhood,' and 'bereavement' . . .

— That everything of spiritual life has been extinguished. Sig.

9192<sup>3</sup>. The reason the former were in Hell, was that they had indeed been in truths as to doctrine, but in evils as to life ; and the reason the latter were in Heaven, was that they had not indeed been in truths as to doctrine, but still they had been in good as to life . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. They who are learned as to doctrine, but evil as to life, are they who are meant by the Lord in Matt. vii. 22, 23 ; xxv. 11, 12 ; and Luke xiii. 26, 27.

9193<sup>2</sup>. To acknowledge and worship the Lord is to live according to His precepts, that is, to live the life of faith and charity. The life of faith is to do the precepts from obedience ; and the life of charity is to do them from love.

9212<sup>2</sup>. That the Sensuous is the ultimate of life with man. Refs.

9216<sup>2</sup>. The case is similar with all things which are of man's life itself . . . These also succeed in order from interiors to exteriors . . .

9224<sup>2</sup>. The good of charity inflows through an internal way . . . and therefore does not come to the apperception until truths . . . begin to be loved . . . for the sake of life . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. (The error) that faith can make the life of Heaven with a man whose life is infernal, consequently that the one life can be transcribed into the other ; and thus that those in Hell can be elevated into Heaven, and live among the Angels a life contrary to their former life ; not considering that to live a life contrary to the life which the man had imbued in the world is to be deprived of life ; and that those who attempt this are like those who are in the death agony . . .

9229. The state of life then from good. Sig. and Ex.

9245. That those only are in faith who live according to the precepts of faith. III.

9256<sup>2</sup>. They who have confirmed themselves against the truths and goods of faith, as do all those who live evilly, close the internal man above and open it below . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. With such the internal man cannot be opened towards Heaven unless the negatives of truth or affirmatives of falsity . . . are dispelled . . . which cannot be done except by a total inversion of the life, thus during many years . . .

— Hence it is evident that to destroy falsities with such is to destroy the life itself . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. But those who . . . have lived in some kind of faith and charity according to their religiosity, could not close the internal man. (Their lot in the other life des.)

9269. The longing and life of those (who long to be instructed in the truths of the Church). Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. Longing is the very activity of life ; for it is from the affection of good ; and the truth of faith lives from the affection of good.

9272<sup>5</sup>. To be instructed concerning the good of life, but still not to live in it. Sig.

9273. Appropriation takes place, when the truths which had been of doctrine become of life . . .

9276<sup>6</sup>. There are with man two fountains of life, namely the heart and the lungs. It is known that the heart is the first of his life, and that the lungs are the second of his life ; and that each and all things which are in man live from these two fountains . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. That everything of man's life inflows through Heaven from the Lord. Refs.

9279<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident what and of what quality are the things which open man's life.

9281. The state of life of those outside the Church who are in truths and goods. Sig. and Ex.

9282. The things which were of life were called 'precepts.' Tr.

—<sup>2</sup>. Thus (these things) do not contribute anything to the eternal life of man. For such things, if not made of life, are dissipated in the other life . . .

[A.] 9294. 'First-fruits'=those things which are the last of instruction, and the first of life.

9296<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) these two things (truth and good) make the life of man; and the truth of faith and the good of charity make his new life; and a man has no new life unless both have been implanted in him.

9300. For goods and truths have their life from the Lord; and they have life from the Lord when they are ascribed to Him.

—<sup>2</sup>. Truths make the life of the understanding, and good the life of the will. —<sup>6</sup>.

— . Hence it is that by 'the heart' is signified the life of the will; and by 'the soul,' the life of faith.

9311<sup>4</sup>. 'They that hear shall live' (John v.25) . . . 'To live'=to be endowed with spiritual life through (the truths of faith).

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The deaf'=those who do not know the truths of faith, and who therefore cannot live according to them.

—<sup>e</sup>. 'To do them'=to live according to them.

9312. 'To do the things which I speak'=to live according to those things which the Lord has taught in the Word. . . . To live according to them is to comply with them from faith and love. Compliance from faith and love is living compliance, because it has in it life from faith and love; (for) in all that is done by man nothing lives except love and faith. All the other things which belong to life have life from them and according to them; for the life of love and faith is life from the Lord, who is life itself. This life is the life of Heaven, and of all who become Angels.

9315. 'When Mine Angel shall go before thee'=life according to the precepts of the Lord. Ex. . . 'To go,' and 'to journey'=to live. Refs.

9324<sup>6</sup>. For the spiritual life comes forth and subsists through the truths which are of faith and the goods which are of love.

9333<sup>2</sup>. For whatever a man from his first infancy thinks, wills, speaks, and does, adds itself to his life, and makes it. These things cannot be exterminated, but only removed.

—<sup>3</sup>. Everyone carries with him thither . . . all things of his life, that is, whatever he has thought, willed, spoken, and done; nay, whatever he has seen and heard, from infancy to the end of his life in the world. . . . Those who in the world have lived a life of faith and charity, can be withheld from evils and kept in good, and thus can be elevated into Heaven. But those who in the world have led a life not of faith and charity, but a life of the love of self and of the world, as they cannot be withheld from evils and kept in good, they sink down into Hell.

9334. That there would be little of spiritual life if the removal (of falsities and evils) were hasty. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. That regeneration, or the implantation of the life of Heaven with man, begins from his infancy, and lasts to the end of his life in the world . . . Refs.

9336<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident that the former life, which is of Hell, must be completely destroyed—that is, evils and falsities must be removed—in order that the new life, which is the life of Heaven, may be implanted; and this cannot be done hastily. Ex.

9348. The loves of self and of the world are born with man, and thence does he feel the delight of his life from his birth; nay, thence he has his life . . .

9363. To believe the things the Word teaches . . . and not to live according to them . . . is persuasive faith. 9369, Ill.

9378<sup>2</sup>. The good which inflows from the Lord is never wanting, for it is in the very life which man has from the Lord; but good together with life is received in proportion as evils are removed.

9380<sup>2</sup>. Those who perfectly know the doctrine of their own Church as to every particular, and yet do not apply these things to life, (are) also in externals without an internal. Tr.

— . The Lord enters through a man's life into his truths of faith.

9383. The things in the Word which belong to life in the spiritual and in the natural state. Sig. and Ex.

— . For all the heat of life is love.

—<sup>2</sup>. That all things which are in the Word are of life is from (the fact that) the Divine truth therein proceeds from the Lord, who is life itself). Also that all things therein relate to life, as may be evident from the two precepts upon which all things of the Word are founded . . .

9386. 'Moses wrote all the words of Jehovah'= . . . truths Divine imprinted on the life by the Lord. Ex. 9416<sup>3</sup>, Ill.

9391<sup>5</sup>. Those who are in abundance of Knowledges . . . and still live evilly. Sig.

9393. Divine truth which has been made of life and of worship. Sig. and Ex.

— . For the life of man is his will.

9394<sup>6</sup>. That which has been made the life of man, which is that which has been made of his will or love . . . 9434<sup>2</sup>.

— . Thus do scientifics become of the life.

9400<sup>2</sup>. For that which makes the interior life of man is the influx of truth Divine from the Lord; for it is that light itself which illuminates the sight of the internal man . . . and it is the heavenly heat which is in that light—which is love—which kindles and vivifies the Voluntary of the internal man . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That the life of man is not in himself, but that it inflows from the Lord. Refs.

9434<sup>2</sup>. Hence . . . such as is the love, such is the life . . .

9444. The sins a man does are inrooted in his very life, and make it; and therefore no one is delivered from them unless he receives new life from the Lord . . .

9448. But these things are possible only with those who have received new life from the Lord through regeneration . . .

9457<sup>6</sup>. Without conjunction with the Lord through Heaven, man would perish; for man has his life from that conjunction. 9481<sup>2</sup>.

9585<sup>e</sup>. And the will is the esse of man's life.

9637<sup>a</sup>. The flame or fire of life is love, and the light of life is faith.

9642<sup>a</sup>. The tribe of Simeon = the truth of faith in the life.

9683. With all the good which makes heavenly life, thus eternal life with man and with Angels, the case is this . . .

— . The reception (of goods) is according to everyone's spiritual and moral life in the world ; for his life in the world awaits everyone to eternity.

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore, order itself with man is that he shall live in the good which is from the Lord, which is that he shall live from the Lord.

9715. For with every man there are Spirits from Hell and Angels from Heaven. Without these man cannot live at all.

—<sup>6</sup>. Thus on the one side man's life is joined to the Hells, and on the other to the Heavens . . .

9780<sup>2</sup>. No one knows what good is unless he lives in good according to the Word ; for when he lives in good according to the Word, then the Lord insinuates good into his life . . .

9818<sup>3</sup>. 'Spirit' . . . = the life of the intellectual part ; for there is a life of the intellectual part, and a life of the voluntary part ; the life of the intellectual part is to know, to see, and to understand truth to be truth, and good to be good ; and the life of the voluntary part is to will and love truth for the sake of truth, and good for the sake of good ; the latter life is called in the Word 'the heart,' and the former 'the spirit.' III.

—<sup>8</sup>. That 'spirit' . . . = the intellectual life, or the life of truth. Ex. —<sup>10</sup>.

—<sup>11</sup>. 'Flesh' = the proprium of man, in which there is nothing of spiritual life. III.

—<sup>13</sup>. The reason the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord is signified by 'the Spirit of God,' is that all the life of man is thence, and heavenly life with those who receive that Divine truth in faith and love. III.

—<sup>14</sup>. (Thus) . . . the 'Holy Spirit' = the life from the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord, which life is called . . . the life of faith and love, and is the very spiritual and celestial life with man. III.

—<sup>16</sup>. 'Breathing' = the life of faith ; hence (the breathing of the Lord upon His disciples) = the faculty given them of perceiving Divine truths, and thus of receiving that life.

— . That the breathing which is of the lungs corresponds to the life of faith, and the pulsation which is of the heart to the life of love. Refs. and III.

—<sup>24</sup>. 'To give the Holy Spirit' = to illustrate with Divine truth, and to endow with life thence, which is the life of intelligence and wisdom.

9841<sup>3</sup>. (For) the truths of the exterior memory . . . have no life unless they are at the same time in the interior memory ; for those which are in the latter have been made of the life ; for the interior memory is man's book of life ; and the things which are of the life are represented in Heaven by gardens, olive-yards, vineyards, and by beds of roses and lawns . . . But those things which are not of the life are represented by rocky places and thickets . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. For the things which a man loves and thence does are of his life.

9918. See DOCTRINE, here.

9954. They knew that the good of love is the essential thing itself from which all things of the Church . . . are alive, for it is the esse of life ; for the Divine inflows through the good of love with man, and makes his life ; and, where truths are received in good, it makes the heavenly life. Hence it is evident what anointing represented . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. And truths without good have not in them the life of Heaven, that is, life from the Divine.

9995<sup>2</sup>. Therefore man does not know what is the esse of his life, and that it is good, and that it is not truth except in so far as it comes forth from good. Good pertains to the will . . . and therefore truth cannot become of the life of a man until he loves it . . . 10110<sup>2</sup>.

10011. (Thus) the Divine, because it is the inmost of all things . . . is the one only thing from which is the life of all things ; and therefore in proportion as a man receives of the Divine, he lives.

10021<sup>2</sup>. This state (of external innocence) is the plane of the new life when a man is being regenerated. Ex.

10038<sup>2</sup>. For there are two fires of life with man ; one is the love of self, and the other is love to God . . . That everyone's love is the fire of his life may be known to everyone who reflects ; for without love there is no life, and such as the love is such is the life . . .

10083. Hence Divine life. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. As the acknowledgment of the Lord is the first of all things of spiritual life . . . the Lord so often says that he who believes in Him has eternal life . . . III. But He also teaches at the same time that those have faith in Him who live according to His precepts, so that the life thence enters into the faith.

10110<sup>4</sup>. This good inflows from the Lord with infants, in order that in advancing age it may serve for the first of the Lord's life with man . . .

10143<sup>3</sup>. The conjunction (of good and truth) is to live from them ; for when good and truth have been conjoined with a man, he has a new will and a new understanding, consequently a new life.

10236<sup>2</sup>. By the Sensuous which is the ultimate of the Natural is properly meant that which is called 'the flesh,' and which perishes when man dies . . . That this Sensuous is the ultimate plane in which the life of man is terminated, and upon which it reposes as upon a base, may be evident. (Continued under SENSUOUS.)

10252<sup>2</sup>. (From the memory of the external man, truths) are called forth by the Lord into the internal man ; which takes place when the man lives according to them . . .

[A.] 10254. For with man there is sensuous life, and natural life, both of the external man ; but the sensuous life is exterior, drawing its truths from the objects on the Earth and in the body ; and the natural life is interior, drawing its truths from the causes of those objects. In like manner the life of the internal man is exterior and interior ; the exterior life draws its truths from those things which are in the ultimates of Heaven, and the interior from those things which are in the interiors of Heaven.

10262. The reason the Lord's Divine celestial good is the Conjunctive itself of all things, is that it is the esse itself of the life of all things ; for it vivifies all things through the Divine truth proceeding from (it), and it vivifies them according to the quality of the reception.

10264<sup>2</sup>. Each and all things with man relate to truths and their perceptions and affections, for they make his life. Ex.

10492<sup>4</sup>. It is the life itself according to truths which opens the internal man.

10578<sup>3</sup>. He who believes that he loves the Lord, and does not live according to His precepts, is very much mistaken ; for to live according to them is to love the Lord. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. To live according to the Lord's precepts is to live according to the doctrine of charity and faith, which is premised to the chapters of Exodus.

10596. The life of a man after death is the life of his love and faith. Hence such as his love and such as his faith had been when he lived in the world, such a life awaits him to eternity : the life of Hell is for those who have loved themselves and the world above all things ; and the life of Heaven is for those who have loved God above all things and the neighbour as themselves . . . The life of Heaven is that which is called eternal life ; and the life of Hell is that which is called spiritual death.

10597. That man lives after death. Ill.

10645<sup>3</sup>. By merely believing and by merely loving, the Lord is not worshipped ; but by living according to His precepts . . .

10659<sup>3</sup>. Those are illustrated when they are reading the Word . . . who acknowledge the Lord and love to live according to His precepts ; but not those who say that they believe, and do not live. For the Lord inflows into the life, and thence into the faith of man, but not into the faith separated from the life.

— That this is so the Word teaches ; and all those apprehend it who admit the Lord into their life ; who are they . . . who acknowledge Him, and love to live according to His precepts.

—<sup>4</sup>. To be withdrawn from evils, to be regenerated, and thus to be saved, are of mercy, which is . . . mediate, that is, is for those who recede from evils, and thus admit the truth of faith and the good of love from the Lord into their life . . . To receive order into one's self is to be saved, which is effected solely by living according to the Lord's precepts. Man is regenerated to the end that he may receive into himself the order of Heaven, and he is regenerated through faith and through a life of faith which is charity. . . In good there is life . . . and in evil there is death . . . And that the one cannot be transcribed into the other, the Lord teaches in Luke xvi.26.

10683<sup>4</sup>. For truth does not become of the life until it enters the will.

—<sup>6</sup>. 'A disciple' = the truth of life ; but 'a prophet,' the truth of doctrine.

10711. (In the Fourth Earth) they love to live according to the manner of living of their ancient one, even until they believe his life to be communicated to them ; but the more intelligent of them worship God.

10714. There are two things which make the life of man—love and faith ; love makes the life of his will, and faith the life of his understanding. Hence such as is the love and such as is the faith, such is the life. N.230.

10715. The love of good and the derivative faith of truth make the life of Heaven ; and the love of evil and the derivative faith of falsity make the life of Hell.

10729<sup>e</sup>. To suffer one's self to be driven or brought to good through truths is to live according to them.

10731. They say to themselves, What is the use of such (spiritual truths) ? . . . do not we still live as others do ? . . . The reason they so think, is that they think from the life of the world, and not from the life of Heaven. The life of Heaven is to them a something which is not known, and no one can think from what is unknown ; and therefore those who are such cannot be saved . . .

10740. That which anyone does from love remains inscribed on his heart ; for love is the fire of life ; thus it is the life of everyone. Hence, such as is the love, such is the life ; and such as is the life—thus such as is the love—such is the whole man as to the soul and as to the body.

10741. As love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour make the life of Heaven with man, so the love of self and the love of the world, when they reign, make the life of Hell with him . . . and therefore those with whom the loves of self and of the world reign can receive nothing from Heaven . . .

10742. Hence it is that those with whom the love of self and the love of the world make the life, will good to themselves alone . . . and as their life is from Hell they despise others in comparison with themselves, and are angry with them if they do not favour them . . . and at last these things become the delights of their life, thus their loves.

10743. These are they who . . . come into Hell, because their life agrees with the life of those who are in Hell . . .

10744. As these receive nothing from Heaven, in their hearts they deny God and the life after death, and hence also hold cheap all things of the Church. If they do what is good to their fellow-citizen, to society, to their country, and to the Church . . . it effects nothing ; for they do these things for the sake of self and the world . . .

10745. Therefore when these come into the other life . . . they rush into every wickedness according to their interiors . . . for these things are then to them the delights of life . . .

10746. In the world many do not know that such things are the delights of their life, because they hide themselves in the loves of self and of the world.

10747. As love is the fire of life, and everyone has life according to his love, it may be known from this what heavenly and infernal fire are . . .

10748. The quality of the life with those who are in Hell may be inferred from the life of such together in the world if external bonds were taken away . . .

10749. The life of a man cannot be changed after death; it then remains such as it had been. Nor can the life of Hell be transcribed into the life of Heaven, because they are opposites. Hence it is evident that those who come into Hell remain there to eternity; and that those who come into Heaven remain there to eternity.

10763. But doctrine alone in man does not make the Church in him, but life according to it. Hence it follows, that faith alone does not make the Church, but the life of faith which is charity.

10764. For the doctrine of charity and at the same time of faith is the doctrine of life; but not the doctrine of faith without the doctrine of charity.

10765. Those who are outside the Church, and still acknowledge one God, and live according to their religiosity in a certain charity towards the neighbour, are in communion with those who are of the Church; because no one who believes in God and lives well is damned . . .

10787. To love the Lord is to love the precepts which are from Him, which is from love to live according to them.

—2. Those who . . . send truths at once into the life come into interior perception concerning them.

10816. There are two things which make the life of Heaven with man—the truth of faith and the good of love; this life is in man from God . . .

H. 9. The Angels from their wisdom . . . say not only that all good and truth are from the Lord, but also all of life. They confirm it by this . . . They say, moreover, that there is one only fountain of life, and that man's life is a stream thence . . .

—3. That all of life is from the Lord, they also confirm by this—that all things in the universe relate to good and truth; the life of man's will, which is the life of his love, to good; and the life of man's understanding, which is the life of his faith, to truth; and therefore as all good and truth come from above, it follows that so does all of life.

14. Love is the very esse of everyone's life . . . 172.

25. (The celestial Angels) receive Divine truths immediately into the life . . . 26, Ex. 271. 348.

136. The veriest life of the Angels is from heat, but not from light, except in so far as there is heat in it. It is evident that life is from heat; for when it is removed life perishes.

VOL. IV.

141<sup>e</sup>. For all the origin of life is from the Lord as a Sun.

202<sup>e</sup>. Therefore in proportion as a man knows (the laws of Divine order, which are the precepts contained in the Word), and lives according to them, his Internal is opened to him, and there the order or image of Heaven is formed anew. Hence it is evident what it is to be in the form of Heaven; namely, that it is to live according to the things which are in the Word.

203<sup>e</sup>. As all thought and affection inflow, (it follows) that so does everything of life; because everything of man's life consists in this—that he can think and be affected; or, what is the same, that he can understand and will.

227. The doctrines (there) all regard life as the end . . .

236<sup>e</sup>. I have heard the Angels disclosing the life of another solely from hearing him. They also said that they know all things of another's life from a few ideas of his thought, because they thence know his reigning love . . . and that man's book of life is nothing else.

267. The three degrees of life. See DEGREE, here. 468.

293. Therefore man is kept in his life through evil Spirits, and is withheld from it through good Spirits.

—2. In so far as man has from what is hereditary . . . he would have no life if he were not allowed to be in evil; and he would also have no life if he were not in freedom.

364. Everyone is followed by his life . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. To believe is nothing else than to live.

420<sup>e</sup>. He receives the Lord who lives according to the laws of Divine order . . .

432. Therefore all the rational life which appears in the body is of the soul . . . As what is material is not alive, but only what is spiritual, it may be evident that whatever is alive with man is his spirit. Ex.

433. As everything which is alive in the body, and which acts and feels from life, is solely of the spirit . . . it follows that the spirit is the man himself . . . for whatever lives and feels in man is of his spirit, and there is nothing in man from head to foot which does not live and feel. Ex.

450<sup>e</sup>. But if the life (of the novitiate Spirit) had been such in the world that he could not be in the company of the good, he desires to be away from them, and this . . . until he associates himself with such as exactly agree with his life in the world; with whom he finds his own life; and then, wonderful to say, he leads a like life to that which he had led in the world.

462. Still, the difference between the life of man in the Spiritual World and his life in the natural world, is great; both as to the external senses and their affections, and as to the internal senses and their affections. Des.

468<sup>e</sup>. The Rational is not formed and opened by these truths merely by man's knowing them, but by his living according to them; and by living according to them is meant to love them from spiritual affection, and (this) is to love what is just and fair because it is just and fair, what is sincere and right because it is sincere and right, and what is good and true because it is good and true ; whereas to live according to them . . . from corporeal affection, is to love them for the sake of self . . . When truths become things of service, they do not . . . open any degree of his life, not even the first . . .

[H.] 470. That after death man is such as has been his life in the world. Gen. art.

476. (Thus) the life which awaits a man after death is his love and the derivative faith, not only in potency, but also in act ; thus it is the deeds or works, because these contain in them all things of the man's love and faith.

513°. (The sufferings of) those who had confirmed themselves in falsities, and still had led a good life. Des.

517. In the Heavens Knowledges are not committed to memory, but to life ; for the memory of Spirits is in their life ; for they receive and imbue all things which agree with their life ; and they do not receive, still less imbue, those which do not agree . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. When a Spirit comes into his own Society . . . he is in his own life when he is in his own use.

— (Thus) Knowledges . . . do not cause anyone to come into Heaven, but the life itself, which is the life of use, which has been implanted through Knowledges.

518°. They were then instructed that Knowledges do not make an Angel, but the life itself which is obtained through Knowledges ; because, regarded in themselves, Knowledges are outside of Heaven, but life through Knowledges is within Heaven.

521. These do not know . . . that man is entirely such as is his life, and that his life is such as is his love, not only as to the interiors which are of his will and understanding, but also as to the exteriors which are of his body . . . Nor do they know that the body does not live from itself, but from its spirit . . .

526. Most who live in evil . . . say that to come into Heaven is merely to be admitted of mercy alone . . .

527. I can testify from much experience that it is impossible to implant the life of Heaven in those who in the world have led a life opposite to the life of Heaven. Des.

— Some wanted the life of love which they had contracted in the world to be taken away from them, and the angelic life to be infused in its place . . . This was done . . . but when the life of their love was taken away they lay like dead men.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) are the simple good instructed that no one's life can possibly be changed after death ; and that an evil life cannot ever be transcribed into a good one. Ex.

528. That it is not so difficult as is believed to lead the life which leads to Heaven. Gen. art.

—<sup>2</sup>. In order that a man may receive the life of Heaven he must by all means live in the world, in its offices and business, and thus through moral and civil life receive spiritual life. No otherwise can spiritual life be formed with a man . . .

529. If the life of man is regarded from a rational view, it is found to be threefold ; namely, spiritual life, moral life, and civil life ; and these lives are found to be distinct. For there are men who live a civil life, and not a moral and spiritual one ; and there are those who live a moral life and not a spiritual one ; and there are those who live both a moral life and a civil life and at the same time a spiritual life. The latter are those who lead the life of Heaven ; but the former are those who live the life of the world separated from the life of Heaven. From these things it may be evident . . . that spiritual life is not separated from natural life or the life of the world, but that the former is conjoined with the latter as is the soul with its body ; and that if it were separated it would be like dwelling in a house which has no foundation. For moral and civil life is the Active of spiritual life, because it belongs to spiritual life to will well, and to moral and civil life to act well ; and if the latter is separated from the former, spiritual life consists solely in thought and speech, and will recede, because it has nothing to rest on ; and yet will is the Spiritual itself of man.

531. The laws of spiritual life, the laws of civil life, and the laws of moral life are delivered in the ten precepts of the decalogue ; in the first three the laws of spiritual life, in the four following ones the laws of civil life, and in the last three the laws of moral life. In the external form the merely natural man lives according to the same precepts in like manner as the spiritual man. Ex.

533. That it is not so difficult to lead the life of Heaven . . . is evident from the fact that all that is necessary is that when anything comes up which he knows to be insincere and unjust, and to which he is inclined, he should think that it is not to be done because it is contrary to the Divine precepts. If a man accustoms himself so to think, and from custom acquires some habit, he is then by little and little conjoined with Heaven . . . the higher things of his mind are opened . . . and he sees what is insincere and unjust . . . and then they can be shaken off . . .

535. It has been granted to speak with some . . . who had removed themselves from the business of the world in order to live piously and holily . . . Most of these, having thus contracted a sad life, and having removed themselves from the life of charity, which life cannot be led except in the world, cannot be consociated with the Angels ; because the life of the Angels is glad from bliss, and consists in performing goods, which are works of charity. Besides, those who have led a life abstracted from worldly things blaze with merit . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. These things have been said in order that it may be known that the life which leads to Heaven is not a life abstracted from the world, but in the world ; and that a life of piety without a life of charity—which is possible only in the world—does not lead to Heaven ; but that a life of charity [does lead there], which life is to act sincerely and justly in every function, in every business, and in every work . . . from a heavenly origin ; which origin is in that life when a man acts sincerely and justly because it is according to the Divine laws. This life is not difficult. But a life of piety abstracted from a life of charity is difficult ; and yet that life withdraws from Heaven in the same proportion as it is believed to lead to Heaven.

577°. The Lord cannot protect man unless he acknowledges the Divine, and unless he lives a life of faith and charity.

589<sup>2</sup>. In the natural world that which acts and that which reacts is called force and also endeavour; but in the Spiritual World that which acts and that which reacts is called life and will; life there is living force, and will is living endeavour . . .

N. 28. Man has two faculties which make his life, one is called the will and the other the understanding . . . All man's life is there.

35<sup>3</sup>. Thus the life of the will is the principal life of man, and the life of the understanding proceeds thence. Refs.

278. (Refs. on the subject of the influx of life with man in special.)

J. 13. Hence it is that everyone leads a life distinct from the life of another.

25<sup>2</sup>. This is the reason why the life of a beast is dissipated together with its natural life.

—<sup>6</sup>. Hence it is that every man, of whatever quality he may be, lives to eternity.

31. The natural life with man effects nothing, but his spiritual life in the natural one, because, from itself, the Natural is devoid of life; and the life which appears in it is from the life of the spiritual man, thus it is the latter who is judged. Ref.

36. When the doctrinal things of the Church are merely believed, they are not in the man's life . . . nor do they enter into his life until they enter into his will and thence into his actions. Then first are they in the man's spirit; for the spirit of man—whose life is the life itself of man—is formed from his will, and from his thought only in so far as it proceeds from his will.

38. The truths which regard only faith and not life cannot make a man spiritual; and so long as they are outside the life they are only natural . . .

C. J. 21. The Lord so conjoins the Societies that all lead as it were one life of man . . .

45. The English . . . have a twofold theology; one from the doctrine of faith, and the other from the doctrine of life . . .

L. 1<sup>2</sup>. 'In Him was life, and the life was the light of men.' 'Life'=the Divine love; and 'the light'=the Divine wisdom.

47. That by 'spirit' is meant the life of man. Gen.art.

— There are two fountains of life with man; the one is the motion of the heart, and the other is the respiration of the lungs. It is the life from the respiration of the lungs which is properly meant by 'spirit,' and also by 'soul.' Ill.

48. As the life of man is various according to his states, by 'spirit' is therefore meant the various affection of life with man; as—I. The life of wisdom. Ill. II. The excitation of life. Ill. III. The freedom of life. Ill. IV. Life in fear, pain, and anger. Ill. V. The life of various evil affections. Ill. VI. Infernal life. Ill.

50. That where 'Spirit' is said of the Lord there is meant His Divine life, thus the Lord Himself. Ill.

S. 3<sup>o</sup>. Hence man has life through the Word.

69. That in the Word alone . . . there are spirit and life. Ex. and Ill.

92. Heresies themselves do not damn men, but the evil life and also the confirmations of the Falsities which are in the heresy . . .

Life, Title. The Doctrine of Life for the New Jerusalem from the Precepts of the Decalogue.

1. That all religion is of life, and that its life is to do what is good. Gen.art.

— Every man who has religion knows and acknowledges that he who lives well is saved, and that he who lives evilly is condemned; for he knows and acknowledges that he who lives well thinks well, not only about God, but also about the neighbour; but not he who lives evilly. The life of man is his love; and that which a man loves he not only does freely, but he also thinks freely. The reason therefore it is said that life is to do what is good, is that doing what is good acts as one with thinking what is good. If these do not act as one with a man they are not of his life.

2. That religion is of life, and that life is to do what is good, is seen by everyone who reads the Word . . . Ill.

3. The reason everyone who has religion knows and acknowledges, that he who lives well is saved, and that he who lives evilly is condemned, is from the conjunction of Heaven with man . . . Hence is this common perception.

4. It is a wonderful thing that (even those who teach faith alone) acknowledge—and this is effected by common perception from Heaven—that those are saved who live well, and those condemned who live evilly. (This is evident from the Exhortation before the Holy Supper.) 7<sup>o</sup>.

8. The reason all religion is of life, is that after death everyone is his own life; for the same life awaits him as he had had in the world, and it is not changed; for an evil life cannot be converted into a good one, nor a good one into an evil one, because they are opposites, and conversion into what is opposite is extinction; and therefore, being opposites, a good life is called life, and an evil life is called death. Hence it is that religion is of life, and that life is to do what is good.

17<sup>o</sup>. 'To believe in the name of the Son of God'=to believe the Word and to live according to it.

52. (Thus) there is not a grain more of truth with a man than there is of good, thus not a grain more of faith than of life. There is thought that it is so, in the understanding; but not the acknowledgment which is of faith, unless there is a consensus in the will. Thus do faith and life walk with equal step.

F. 36. As no one can have trust except him who lives well, this latter is meant by believing in Him.

W. 1. That love is the life of man. Gen.art. (See LOVE, here.)

2. No one knows what the life of man is unless he knows that it is love. If this is not known, one person may believe that man's life is merely to feel and to act; and another that it is to think; when yet thought is the first effect of life, and sensation and action are the second effect of life. . . It is (really) the inmost thought, which is the perception of ends, which is actually the first effect of life.

[W.] 3. It is known that (the heat of the sun) is as it were the common life of all (plants) . . . which thus as it were live.

4. That God alone . . . is love itself, because He is life itself; and that Angels and men are recipients of life. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore if any man (thinks) that he is not a recipient of life, but life, he cannot be withdrawn from the thought that he is God.

— (How it is that man feels as if he were life.)

6. It follows that the conception of a man from his father is not a conception of life; but only a conception of the first and purest form receptible of life . . .

9. The Divine life, which is love and wisdom . . .

33. Affection and thought . . . are as it were the fountains of all things of man's life . . .

35. Therefore the Divine life is one. Life is the Divine Essence.

38<sup>e</sup>. 'Life and light' (John i.) = the Lord's Divine love and Divine wisdom.

45<sup>e</sup>. As this very Substance and Form is the Divine love and the Divine wisdom, it follows that it is the very and only Love, and the very and only Wisdom, consequently that it is . . . the very and only Life; for love and wisdom are life.

46. Nor can they think anything concerning life, except as of a volatile thing going away into nothing. —<sup>e</sup>.

66. All animals are recipients of life; the more perfect animals are recipients of the life of the three degrees of the natural world; the less perfect are recipients of the life of two degrees of that world; and the imperfect are recipients of one degree of it. Man alone is a recipient of the life of the three degrees, not only of the natural, but also of the Spiritual World . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) there is an ascent of all things . . . to the First, who alone is life; and the uses of all things are the very recipients of life; and therefore so are the forms of uses.

68. In every created thing there is reaction. In life alone is there action; and the reaction is excited through the action of life . . . Thus in man it appears as if the reaction were his, because he feels no otherwise than that life is his, when yet man is only a recipient of life. It is from this cause that man from his hereditary evil reacts against God. But in proportion as he believes that all his life is from God, and that all the good of life is from the action of God, and all the evil of life from the reaction of man, in the same proportion reaction becomes of action, and the man acts with God as of himself.

76<sup>e</sup>. Esse in itself is life itself, which is the Divine love of the Divine wisdom, and the Divine wisdom of the Divine love.

80. The Divine is also the same in the greatest and least things of all things which . . . do not live . . . And the reason they do not live is that they are not forms of life, but forms of uses.

89<sup>2</sup>. In itself the heat of the Spiritual World is alive, in like manner the light; but the heat of the natural world is in itself dead, and in like manner the light. For . . . love is alive, and the Divine love is life itself; but fire is dead, and the solar fire is death itself. So it may be called, because there is nothing whatever of life in it.

116. As (freedom and rationality) are inmosty conjoined with man's life, so inmosty that they may be said to be injoined into his life, they appear as if they were his Own . . .

144<sup>e</sup>. All these are sensuous natural, and some of them are such that they imagine that they alone are alive, regarding others as if they were images.

157<sup>2</sup>. The sun of the natural world is pure fire from which everything of life has been abstracted; but the Sun of the Spiritual World is fire in which there is Divine life. The angelic idea . . . is that the Divine life is inwardly in the fire of the Sun of the Spiritual World, but outwardly in the fire of the sun of the natural world. From this it may be seen that the actuality of the natural sun is . . . from the living force which proceeds from the spiritual Sun . . .

163. That without two suns, the one living and the other dead, there is no creation. Gen.art.

164. As all spiritual things in their origin are alive . . . it follows that the (spiritual) Sun is alive . . . and that the dead sun has been created through the living Sun . . .

185<sup>2</sup>. Without Knowledge of these degrees, nothing can be known . . . of any difference of life between men and beasts.

200. Perfection and imperfection . . . are predicated of life . . . Perfection of life is perfection of love and wisdom, and as the will and understanding are their receptacles, perfection of life is also perfection of will and understanding, and consequently of the affections and thoughts. And, as spiritual heat is the containant of love, and spiritual light of wisdom, the perfection of these may be referred to the perfection of life.

203<sup>e</sup>. No others are elevated into these degrees except those who in the world have been in truths, and have applied them to life.

204. Prior things are more perfect . . . because . . . they are less covered over with substances and matters devoid of life.

219. Let there be an application of these things to living endeavour, to living force, and to living motion. The living endeavour in man—who is a living subject—is his will united to his understanding. The living forces in man are the things which constitute his body within . . . And the living motion in man is action . . .

239<sup>2</sup>. (The effect on a poorly educated man of having applied the precepts of the Word to life. See COMMAND-praecepere, here.)

240<sup>2</sup>. In these two faculties is the Lord with every man . . . hence it is that every man, both good and evil, lives to eternity.

248<sup>e</sup>. It is not known that (the opening of higher degrees with man) is effected through spiritual life, which is life according to the Divine precepts; and that without a life according to them, man remains natural.

253. The spiritual degree is not opened, but still is not closed, with those who have led some life of charity, and yet have known little of genuine truth. Ex.

255. On the nature of the difference between the life of a natural man and the life of a beast . . . The difference is that man has three degrees of the mind . . . Whereas beasts have . . . only the natural degrees . . .

259. With (idiots, etc.) the Rational cannot be elevated; for the life—which is of the will and understanding—has not with them the termini or boundaries in which it ceases so disposed that it can perform ultimate acts according to order . . .

294. As the things which constitute the (spiritual) Sun are from the Lord, and are not the Lord, they are not life in itself, but are bereaved of life in itself . . .

301. From the angelic ideas, which are devoid of space, it is very evident that nothing in the created universe is alive except God Man . . . and that nothing is moved except through life from Him . . . So that it is the Truth, that in God we live, move, and are.

311. Still, all these endeavours are not alive; for they are endeavours of the ultimate forces of life . . .

358<sup>e</sup>. For love is the esse of life, and wisdom is the existence of life therefrom. 368.

363. That love and wisdom, and the derivative will and understanding, make the very life of man. Gen.art.

— Scarcely anyone knows what life is. When anyone thinks about it, it appears to be a volatile something . . . This appears because it is not known that God alone is life, and that His life is the Divine love and the Divine wisdom. Hence it is evident that the life with man is nothing else; and that life is with him in the degree in which he receives [them] . . . From these two things, therefore, which proceed from the Lord as a Sun, is life.

—<sup>2</sup>. That love and wisdom from the Lord are life, may be evident from the fact, that as love recedes from a man he becomes torpid, and as wisdom recedes he becomes stupid; and if they receded altogether he would be extinct. Ex.

365. That the life of man, in its beginnings, is in the brains, and in its derivatives—principiat—is in the body. Gen.art.

— By life in its beginnings is meant the will and the understanding . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. Where the fibres are, in their beginnings and primes, there is the life in its beginnings and primes. Will anyone undertake to deny that the origin of the life is where there is the origin of the fibres? 366<sup>2</sup>.

366. That such as the life is in its beginnings, such it is in the whole and in every part thereof. Gen.art.

367. That through these beginnings the life is from every part in the whole, and from the whole in every part. Gen.art.

390<sup>2</sup>. For so long as the heart is moved, so long the love with its vital heat remains, and conserves the life; as is evident from swoons and suffocations, and also from the state of life of the embryo in the womb. In a word, the life of man's body depends on the correspondence of its pulse and respiration with the pulse and respiration of his spirit; and when this correspondence ceases the life of the body ceases, and his spirit goes away, and continues his life in the Spiritual World, which is so like his life in the natural world that he does not know that he has deceased.

394<sup>2</sup>. From the wisdom of the Angels is this . . . that the soul (of the will and understanding) is love and wisdom from the Lord; and that these two are what make the life of man, which is from the Lord alone; and that for the sake of the reception of the Lord by man, He causes the life to appear as if it were man's; but lest man should claim life for himself as his own, and thus withdraw himself from the reception of the Lord, He has taught that everything of love, which is called good, and everything of wisdom, which is called truth, are from Him, and nothing of them from man; and that as these two are life, everything of life, which is life, is from Him.

399. That love or the will is the very life of man. Gen.art.

— As all things of the body, as to coming forth and as to motion, depend upon the heart; so all things of the mind, as to coming forth and as to life, depend upon the will . . . for the will is the receptacle of love, and love is the life itself, and the love which is the life itself is from the Lord alone.

—<sup>2</sup>. The way in which the heart acts in the body is evident from [the fact] that everything lives, or is in compliance with life, where the heart acts by means of vessels sent forth from itself; and that everything does not live where the heart does not act by means of its vessels.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it may be seen that as the subsidiary life of the body depends upon the heart alone, so in like manner the life of the mind depends upon the will alone; and that the will lives when the thought ceases, in like manner as the heart lives when the respiration ceases; as is evident from embryos, those who are dying, who are being suffocated, and who are in swoons. From which it follows that love or the will is the very life of man.

400. From this it is evident that all things of man come forth from the life of the will—which is the love—from its beginnings from the brains by means of the fibres; and that all things of his body come forth from the heart by means of the arteries and veins. From these things it is manifestly evident that the life—which is the love and the derivative will—is continually striving after the human form . . . The reason there is an endeavour and striving after the human form, is that God is a Man, and the Divine love and the Divine wisdom are His life, from which is everything of life. Anyone can see that unless the life which is Man Himself acted into that which in itself is not life, nothing of such things as there are in man could be formed, in which there are thousands of thousands of things which make one, and unanimously conspire to the image of the life from which they are . . .

406. That by means of these three conjunctions, love or the will is in its sensitive life, and in its active life. Gen.art.

[W. 406<sup>3</sup>. An act from love without understanding . . . cannot be called a living act . . .

407. This may be confirmed to the life . . .

— That a man is not in any sensitive life, nor in any active life, while the heart and lungs do not act together, may be evident from the state of an embryo . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That a man is not in any sensitive life, nor in any active life, without the co-operation of the heart and the lungs, may also be evident from swoons.

— It is similar with a man who is being suffocated . . . yet that the heart still lives, is known; for he returns into both lives, the sensitive and the active, as soon as the blockade of the lungs is removed.

410<sup>5</sup>. The reason truth is conjoined reciprocally (with good), is from the life of good.

—<sup>6</sup>. For the life of a man is his love . . . and his life is according as he has exalted his affections by means of truths . . .

418<sup>8</sup>. From these things it may be evident that no one is to be judged from wise speech, but from his life; that is, not from wise speech separated from life, but from wise speech conjoined with life. By life is meant the love.

422<sup>9</sup>. Man is not elevated (into a higher degree of life) through wisdom alone, but through life according to it; for the life of a man is his love; and therefore in proportion as he lives according to wisdom, in the same proportion he loves it; and he lives according to wisdom in the same proportion as he purifies himself from unclean things which are sins.

427<sup>3</sup>. Such have those become in that World who had immediately applied to life the Divine things which they had heard . . .

P. 13. It has been said that love makes the life of man, but there is not meant love separated from wisdom . . . because (this) is not anything; and therefore the love which makes the inmost life of man—which is from the Lord—is love together with wisdom; and so also is the love which makes the life of man in so far as he receives it.

17. Therefore, if a man has had the life of the love of evil, all truth is taken away . . . (and he then) imbues falsity which is in agreement with his evil . . .

32<sup>3</sup>. These degrees are opened by the Lord with a man, actually, according to his life in the world . . .

33. Man is more and more nearly conjoined with the Lord, not through knowledge alone, nor through intelligence alone, and not even through wisdom alone; but through life conjoined with them. The life of a man is his love and love is manifold . . .

57<sup>9</sup>. The life-vivum-of a man and an Angel is from the proceeding Divine conjoined with him by contiguity, which appears to him as if it were his own.

73<sup>3</sup>. As love is the life of man, so also is freedom of his life. Ex.

83<sup>6</sup>. With him who is being regenerated, the order of life is turned (from) natural to spiritual . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. Every man is regenerated through truths, and through a life according to them; for through truths he knows life, and through life he does them. Thus does he conjoin good and truth . . .

101<sup>8</sup>. In the Spiritual World . . . it is not asked what has thy faith been, nor what thy doctrine; but what thy life . . . For it is known that such as is the life of anyone, such is his faith; nay, his doctrine; for the life makes for itself doctrine, and it makes for itself faith.

156. The reason man is led and taught by the Lord alone, is that he lives from the Lord alone; for the will of his life is led, and the understanding of his life is taught. But this is contrary to the appearance; for it appears to man as if he lives from himself; and yet the Truth is that he lives from the Lord and not from himself. Now as while he is in the world there cannot be given to man the perception of sensation that he lives from the Lord alone—for the appearance that he lives from himself is not taken away from him, for without it man is not man—therefore it shall be evinced by reasons, which are afterwards to be confirmed by experience, and finally by the Word. 157, Ex. 159, III.

157<sup>7</sup>. That (the Divine love and the Divine wisdom) are the life from which are the life of all things, and all things of life. Ex.

— Human reason acknowledges at the first bearing that all the life of man is of his will and understanding; for if (these) are taken away, he does not live. Or, what is the same, that all the life of man is of his love and thought; for if (these) are taken away he does not live. . . It follows that everything of life is from the Lord.

158. By living perceptions . . .

— (The celestial Angels) perceive the influx of the Divine love and the Divine wisdom from the Lord; and, as they perceive it, and from their wisdom know that these things are life, they say that they live from the Lord, and not from themselves . . . and they also love and will that it should be so; and nevertheless they are in all the appearance that they live from themselves; nay, they are in this appearance more strongly than other Angels . . .

160. That the life of the evil is from the same origin. Ex.

161. The life of animals . . . is the life of merely natural affection with its mate knowledge. It is a mediate life which corresponds to the life of those who are in the Spiritual World.

164<sup>4</sup>. Every man is initiated by the Lord into his place according to his life.

176<sup>2</sup>. If man were led with a living perception and sensation, he would not be conscious of life . . .

178<sup>8</sup>. That the human mind is not its own life while it is solely in the affection of the will . . . in like manner when it is only in the effect, is evident to everyone; and therefore the mind has not any life from one of them separately, but from these three conjointly.<sup>c</sup> This life of the mind would be diminished and would recede in the case of a foretold event.

182<sup>3</sup>. He who thinks that God rules all things, thinks that He is love itself and wisdom itself, thus life itself . . . Does not what is living itself rule what is dead? . . . If you think that what is dead can give life to itself, you are insane. Life must be from life.

186. The delight of love makes man's very life; and therefore when man is kept in the delight of his life, he is in his freedom . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. To be appropriated is to become of the life.

193<sup>2</sup>. Thus there are with every man two beginnings of life, one natural and the other spiritual; and the natural beginning of life is the beating of the heart, and the spiritual beginning of life is the will of the mind . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Now as the soul of the will is love, and the soul of the understanding wisdom, both from the Lord, it follows that love is the life of everyone; and that the love is such life as is determined by its conjunction with wisdom; or, what is the same, that the will is the life of everyone, and that it is such life as is determined by its conjunction with the understanding.

194. Conjunction such as is that of the esse of life with the existence of life; which is such that one is nothing except together with the other; for what is the esse of life unless it comes forth? and what is the existence of life except from the esse of life? Further Ex.

195. Hence it follows that these delights and pleasantnesses make the life of man. Ex. —<sup>3</sup>.

205. All who lead an evil life interiorly acknowledge nature, and human prudence alone. Ex.

221. That a man is not interiorly let into the truths of faith, and into the goods of charity, except in so far as he can be kept in them up to the end of life. Gen. art.

227<sup>2</sup>. Man cannot live except in both (evil and good); for if he were in himself alone, and thus in evil alone, he would not have anything of life; and if he were in the Lord alone, and thus in good alone, he would not have anything of life. For in this latter of life he would be as it were suffocated . . . and in that former of life he would be extinct; for evil without any good is in itself dead. Therefore every man must be in both; but the difference is, that the one is interiorly in the Lord, and exteriorly as it were in self; and the other is interiorly in self, but exteriorly as it were in the Lord; and the latter is in evil, and the former is in good.

—<sup>3</sup>. With those who have first acknowledged the truths of faith, and have lived according to them; and who have afterwards . . . rejected them, and especially if they have denied them, goods and evils can no longer be separated, but they are commingled . . .

231<sup>2</sup>. The second kind of profanation is [committed] by those who understand and acknowledge Divine truths, and yet live contrary to them. Ex.

—<sup>7</sup>. The seventh kind of profanation is [committed] by those who first acknowledge Divine truths, and live according to them, and afterwards recede, and deny them. This is the worst kind of profanation. Ex.

233<sup>9</sup>. That which is received by the will comes into the man, and is appropriated to him, and becomes of his life; and in the life itself which man has from the will evil and good cannot be together, for so he would perish; but both can be in the understanding . . .

259<sup>2</sup>. Dissensions and heresies are (thus) inevitable . . . and still more so when the Church itself had assumed as essentials such things as are of the understanding alone . . . and not such things as are of the will, thus as are of life; and when the things which are of life are not essentials of the Church—then man is from the understanding in mere darkness . . . For the will must see in the understanding . . . or what is the same, the life and its love must lead the understanding to think, speak, and act, and not contrariwise . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. There are three essentials of the Church—the acknowledgment of the Lord's Divine, the acknowledgment of the holiness of the Word, and the life which is called charity. According to the life, which is charity, every man has faith. From the Word is the Knowledge of what the life must be . . .

262<sup>e</sup>. For no one can approach the Lord and at heart acknowledge Him as the God of Heaven and earth, except him who lives according to His precepts. In the Spiritual World . . . no one can even name Jesus except him who has lived in the world as a Christian . . .

277<sup>4</sup>. These affections are with everyone veiled round with things honourable, which are of moral life, and with things good, which are partly of civil life and partly of spiritual life. These things make the external of life, even with the evil. Every infant is born into this external of life . . .

277a. So also is the life of man—such as it is when he dies, such it remains . . . for death is a continuation of life, with this difference—that then the man cannot be reformed. Ex.

282. For the understanding with its thoughts is the external of man's life, and the will with its affections is the internal of his life.

292. That from the one only Fountain of life inflows all that man thinks and wills, and thence what he speaks and does, and that nevertheless the one only Fountain of life—which is the Lord—is not the cause of man's thinking evil and falsity. Ex.

308. It has been demonstrated that there is one only life, and that men are recipients of life; and also that the will is the receptacle of love, and the understanding of wisdom, which two are that one only life. It has also been demonstrated that it is from creation, and thence continually from the Divine Providence, that this life should appear in man in a likeness as if it were his, consequently as his Own; but that this is an appearance, to the end that man may be a receptacle.

—<sup>e</sup>. See PROPRIUM, here.

310<sup>3</sup>. Concerning the life of man in the world, they think no otherwise than that it is like the life of a beast; and concerning the life of man after death, that it is like a vital vapour, which, rising from the corpse or grave, falls back again, and so dies.

— They call the love of self the fire of life.

311<sup>4</sup>. The reason they are such phantoms, is that evils and falsities do not live, but only goods and truths; and as they know this . . . for otherwise they would not simulate them, they possess human vitality in their phantoms.

[P.] 314<sup>3</sup>. Concerning life they know no otherwise than that it is a certain activity of nature . . . If it is said that thus nature is alive, they deny it, but [affirm] that nature gives to live. If it is said, Then is not life dissipated when the body dies? they reply that life remains in a particle of air which is called the soul. If it is said, What then is God? is He not life itself? at this they are silent, and do not want to say what they think. If it is said, Would you allow that the Divine love and the Divine wisdom are life itself? they reply, What is love? and what is wisdom? . . . These things are adduced in order that it may be seen how man is infatuated by his own prudence . . .

324. It has been shown that with man there are three degrees of life, which are called natural, spiritual, and celestial . . . and that with beasts there is only one degree of life, which is like the ultimate degree with man, which is called natural. From which it follows that by means of the elevation of his life to the Lord man is above beasts in this state—that he can . . . receive the Divine; and he who can receive the Divine so as to see and perceive it in himself cannot be otherwise than conjoined with the Lord, and, through this conjunction, live to eternity.

325. That it is thence from the Divine Providence . . . that those are saved who acknowledge God and live well. Gen.art.

326<sup>6</sup>. Some can think about God from the understanding; but if a man does not live well, this effects nothing else than presence; for he can nevertheless turn himself away from God, and turn himself to Hell; which is done if he lives evilly. To acknowledge God at heart can be done by none except those who live well; according to the good of their life the Lord turns these away from Hell, and turns them to Himself. The reason is that these alone love God, for they love the Divine things which are from Him by doing them.

—<sup>8</sup>. For the life of everyone is in each and all things which he does . . . From which it is evident that to shun evils because they are contrary to religion . . . is to live well.

328<sup>8</sup>. In every religion there are two essentials of salvation, which are to acknowledge a God, and not to do what is evil because it is contrary to God. All the other things . . . which are called [matters] of faith, are provided for everyone according to his life, for they are accessories of life; and even if they precede, still they do not receive life before. It is also provided, that all who have lived well, and have acknowledged a God, shall be instructed after death by Angels . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. There is also given to every man after death an opportunity to amend his life, if possible . . . At first they receive truths; but those who have not acknowledged a God, and have not shunned evils as sins, in the world, after a short time loathe truths, and recede . . .

330<sup>5</sup>. Those born outside the Church . . . also have religion, from which they acknowledge that there is a God, and that men are to live well; and he who acknowledges a God, and lives well, becomes spiritual in his degree, and is saved.

—<sup>7</sup>. Yet the whole Word is nothing but the doctrine of life.

— In the Christian world there are few who place religion in life. What, therefore, is more insane than to believe that only Christians are saved? . . . and that has Heaven from birth, and not from life?

338<sup>4</sup>. It has been shown . . . that no one can live with any others than those who are in a like love; and that if he comes to others he cannot breathe his own life . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. The spiritual state is such that no one can be anywhere except where his reigning love is, for the delight of his life is there . . . and the spirit of man cannot be elsewhere, because it makes his life . . . (and this delight) he has acquired in the natural world by his life.

—<sup>7</sup>. As they desired it, the Angels removed their infernal delight. But as this was the delight of their life's love, consequently their life, they lay as it were dead . . . nor was it possible to insufflate any other life than their own, because all things of their minds and bodies had been turned backwards . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. The doctrines of all Churches, regarded interiorly, teach life . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. From these things it is evident, that the doctrines of all Churches, interiorly regarded, teach life; and, as they teach life, they teach that salvation is according to life; and the life of a man is not inspired in a moment, but is formed successively, and is reformed as the man shuns evils as sins . . .

56. Resuscitation into life. Sig. and Ex.

— A holy fear . . . supervenes when life from the Lord enters in place of man's Own life. Man's Own life is to look from himself to the Lord; but life from the Lord is to look from the Lord to the Lord, and still as if from self. When a man is in this life he sees himself not to be anything, but only the Lord.

58. 'I am He 'that liveth' (Rev.i.18)=who alone is life, and from whom alone is life. In the Word of the Old Testament, Jehovah calls Himself 'the living,' and 'He that liveth,' because He alone lives; for He is love itself and wisdom itself, and these are life. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lord as to the Divine Human also is the Life, because the Father and He are one. Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. As the Lord alone is the life, it follows that from Him alone is life; and therefore He says, 'As I am alive, ye shall also live' (John xiv.19).

320. 'Pale' = what has no vitality . . . and those are said to have no vitality who are not in goods of life from truths of doctrine. For . . . doctrine is not perceived without a life according to it, (because) a life according to doctrine from the Word opens the spiritual mind, and light inflows from Heaven, and illustrates . . . That it is so is unknown to him who knows the truths of doctrine, and yet does not live according to them.

502. The two infernal loves . . . which are in the Church where . . . men do not live according to the precepts of the decalogue. Sig. and Ex.

— These loves cannot be removed except by . . . a life according to His precepts . . . and a life according to His precepts is not possible unless man is led by Him. It is indeed possible, but not a life in which there is anything of Heaven . . . This life is given only by Him who is life. That the Lord is this life. Ill.

510. 'The spirit of life from God' (Rev.xi.11) = spiritual life; and 'to stand upon their feet' = natural life concordant with spiritual life. Ex.

634. The third degree of (faith alone) is to live according to it. Ex. and Tr.

681. 'Living soul' (Rev.xvi.3) = the truth of faith.

835. 'Cast alive into the lake of fire' (Rev.xix.20) . . . 'Alive' = as they were.

849. 'Who lived with Christ' (Rev.xx.4) = who were in conjunction with the Lord; because these live.

868. That all were judged according to their internal life in externals. Sig. and Ex. 871.

— The works of the mind . . . and of the body . . . proceed from the man's internal life, which is that of his will or love. Whatever does not cease in works, either of the mind . . . or of the body . . . is not in the life of man . . .

875<sup>2</sup>. The Angel replied that the love which originates from the Lord as a Sun is the heat of life of Angels and men, thus is their life; and that the derivations of the love are called affections . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. Man is not life in himself, but an organ recipient of life. The Lord alone is life in Himself; as He says in John: 'As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself' (v.26). Further ill. There are two things which make life—love and wisdom; or, what is the same, the good of love and the truth of wisdom. These inflow from the Lord, and are received by man, and are felt in man as if they were in him . . .

—<sup>13</sup>. The life which inflows is life proceeding from the Lord, which is also called the Spirit of God; in the Word, 'the Holy Spirit.' But this life is varied and modified according to the organization induced on a man through his love and aspect.

889. 'The fountain of the water of life' (Rev.xxi.6) = the Lord and the Word.

923<sup>2</sup>. Religion is called religion from life according to doctrine. . . Everything of life according to the things which doctrine teaches is called good . . . But where there is doctrine and not life, there cannot be said to be either the Church or religion, because doctrine regards life as one with itself . . . and therefore where there is doctrine and not life there is not the Church.

937<sup>2</sup>. Love for the Lord and the consequent conjunction with Him are given through life according to His precepts. Ill.

961<sup>5</sup>. The Itself, which is Love itself and Wisdom itself, was the Lord's soul from the Father; thus the Divine life, which is life in itself. (Whereas) in man the soul is not life, but a recipient of life. The Lord also teaches this, saying: 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life.'

M. 34<sup>2</sup>. He is quite unaware that love is his very life; not only the general life of his whole body, and the general life of all his thoughts; but also the life of all the singulars of them. . . (For) if you remove the affection of love, can you think anything? or can you do anything? Is it not the case that in proportion as the affection which is of love cools, so do thought, speech, and action; and that in proportion as it heats, so also do the latter. Therefore love is the heat of man's life, or his vital heat. . . The fire of the angelic Sun, which is pure love, effects this.

[M.] 36. From this it may be seen that love is the esse or essence of man's life, and that thought is the existere or coming forth—existentia—of his life thence derived.

203. The Conjugal of good and truth . . . is that which inflows into man from the Lord, and makes his human life. . .

315<sup>11</sup>. The soul is not life, but is the proximate receptacle of the life from God.

351. That of these—although they are polygamists—those are saved who acknowledge a God, and from religion live according to the civil laws of justice. Ex.

380<sup>5</sup>. Whether nature is of life, or life of nature. Discussed.

—<sup>6</sup>. We said . . . Do you not know that . . . when the mind is elevated it sees the things which are of life above, and the things which are of nature below? What else is life than love and wisdom? And what else is nature than the receptacle of them through which they operate their uses? Can these be one except as the principal and the instrumental? . . . What is the human body but an organ of life? Have not each and all things therein been organically formed to produce the things which the love wills and the understanding thinks? And are not the organs of the body from nature, and love and thought from life? . . . You will see that it is of life to be affected with and to think; and that to be affected with is from love, and to think from wisdom, and that both are from life; for, as has been said, love and wisdom are life. . .

—<sup>10</sup>. Concerning the centre and the expanse of nature and of life. Discussed.

—<sup>11</sup>. We instructed him . . . that the things which are of life are called spiritual things; and that the things which proceed from the (natural) sun are containants of life, and are called natural things; and also that the expanse of the centre of life is called the Spiritual World. . .

—<sup>12</sup>. The vital heat of men and of animals in general is from no other source than the love which makes their life. . .

457. (That) the Conjugal of one man with one wife is the jewel of human life. . . Gen.art. . . The reason is that the life of a man is such as is that love with him; for it makes the inmost of his life; for it is the life of wisdom cohabiting with its love, and of love cohabiting with its wisdom, and hence it is the life of the deliciousnesses of both. In a word, man is a living soul through that love.

461<sup>6</sup>. For without the permanence of delight (human beings) have no will, and no sensation, thus no life.

493. The life of man is essentially of his will, and formally of his understanding. The reason is that the will acts as one with the love, and love is the essence of the life of man, and it forms itself in the understanding through such things as agree.

495. If man views these Knowledgees rationally, and lives according to them, the love of his will is simultaneously elevated, and in the same degree his human is perfected. . . (But) if he does not live according to the Knowledgees of good and truth, the love of his will remains natural. . .

510. That the lot (of those who are in the lust of varieties) is miserable, because they have not the inmost of life. Gen.art.

524. That everyone has a life proper to himself. Ex. B.110.

—<sup>3</sup>. That his own life awaits everyone after death. Ex.

— . The works according to which it will be rendered to everyone are the life, because the life makes them, and they are according to the life.

— . I can testify for certain that everyone is explored there as to what has been the quality of his life; and that the life which he has contracted in the world awaits him to eternity. I have spoken with those who had lived ages ago, and whose life was known to me from history, and I recognized a life like the description. I have also heard from the Angels that no one's life can be changed after death, because it has been organized according to his love and the derivative works; and that if it were changed, the organization would be torn to pieces. . .

—<sup>4</sup>. That then there is imputed to an evil man the evil of his life, and to a good man the good of it. Ex.

B. 51. That from the faith of the modern Church there abounds the worship of the mouth and not of the life; when yet the worship of the mouth is acceptable to the Lord according to the worship of the life. Gen.art.

I. 7. All things have relation to good and truth. . . and hence it is that in man there are two receptacles of life. . .

8<sup>2</sup>. For the soul is not life in itself, but is a recipient of life from God, who is life in itself; and all influx is of life, thus from God. This is meant by . . . 'Jehovah God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of lives, and man became a living soul.' 'To breathe into his nostrils the breath of lives'=to implant the perception of good and truth. The Lord also says concerning Himself. . . 'So hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself.' 'Life in Himself' is God; and the life of the soul is the life which inflows from God. (Continued under INFLUX, here.)

—<sup>4</sup>. For the mind. . . has two lives—one of the will and the other of the understanding. The life of the will is the good of love, the derivations of which are called affections; and the life of the understanding is the truth of wisdom, the derivations of which are called thoughts. By means of the latter and the former does the mind live. But the life of the body is the senses, speech, and actions. . . These are from the soul through the mind. . .

10. Who . . . does not see that, regarded in itself, love is alive ; and that the appearance of its fire is life ? . . . consequently that the (spiritual) Sun is alive . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. There are two things which effect all the effects in the universe—life and nature ; and they effect them according to order when life from within actuates nature. It is otherwise when nature from within brings life to act, which is effected with those who place nature . . . above and within life . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. Damnation is the lot of those who believe life to be from nature . . .

11<sup>a</sup>. Besides, life is one only [thing], and it is not creatable ; but is in the highest degree capable of inflowing into forms organically adapted for reception. Such forms are all and each things in the created universe.

—<sup>5</sup>. It is believed by many that the soul is life, and that thus because man lives from a soul he lives from his own life, thus from himself ; consequently not through the influx of life from God ; (from which idea) come forth innumerable fallacies . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. I once heard a voice from Heaven saying that if there were a spark of his life in man, of his own, and not of God in him, there would be no Heaven . . .

12. For the soul inflows into the human mind, and through it into the body, and bears with it the life which it is continually receiving from the Lord, and transfers it thus mediately into the body ; where, by means of the closest union it makes the body as it were life. (Thus) the Spiritual united to the Material, as a living force with a dead force, causes man to speak rationally, and to act morally.

—<sup>2</sup>. It appears as if the tongue and lips speak from a certain life in themselves ; and that the arms and hands [do so] in like manner ; but it is the thought—which in itself is spiritual—which speaks ; and it is the will—which in like manner is spiritual—which acts. Ex.

13. That man is not life, but an organ recipient of the life from God ; and that love together with wisdom are life . . . has been demonstrated above. Hence it follows that in proportion as a man loves wisdom . . . he is an image of God, that is, a receptacle of life from God ; and, on the other hand, that in proportion as he is in the opposite love . . . he does not receive life from God, but from Hell, which life is called death.

—<sup>2</sup>. Love itself and wisdom itself are not life, but are the esse of life ; whereas the delights of love and the pleasantnesses of wisdom—which are affections—make life ; for the esse of life comes forth through them. The influx of life from God bears with it these delights and pleasantnesses . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. From these things it may be (dimly) perceived, that the reception of the influx of life from God is according to the state of the love and wisdom with a man.

15<sup>7</sup>. The life of a beast may be compared to a sleep-walker . . .

16<sup>a</sup>. It follows that there are three degrees of wisdom and three degrees of love, consequently three degrees of life. For they are graduated by the things through which they pass.

T. 34<sup>a</sup>. The Divine life which actuates man by influx from the (spiritual) Sun may be compared to the . . . influx of (natural) light into a transparent object. (Continued under INFLUX.)

' 39. That as God is love itself and wisdom itself He is life itself, which is life in itself. Gen.art.

— . It is said . . . 'God was the Word ; in Him was life, and the life was the light of men.' 'God,' here = the Divine love ; and 'the Word,' the Divine wisdom ; and the Divine wisdom, properly, is life ; and life, properly, is the light which proceeds from the (spiritual) Sun . . . The Divine love forms life, as fire forms light. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident that the life of man dwells in the understanding ; and that it is such as is his wisdom ; and that the love of the will modifies it.

40. 'As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself,' means that as the Divine Itself which was from eternity lives in itself, so also the Human which it took on in time lives in itself. Life in itself is the very and one only life from which all men and Angels live . . . The life which . . . is the light proceeding from the (spiritual) Sun is not creatable, but continually inflows ; and, as it illumines, so also it vivifies the understanding . . . And as light, life, and wisdom are one, therefore wisdom is not creatable . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore let everyone beware of persuading himself that he lives from himself . . . for in the same proportion that he (does this), he casts down his mind from Heaven to the earth, and from spiritual becomes natural . . . for he closes up the higher regions of his mind . . .

42. (The three degrees of life. See DEGREE, here.)

—<sup>2</sup>. The perfection of life does not consist in thought, but in the perception of truth from the light of truth. From this may be inferred the differences of life with men. Des.

63. From (the spiritual Sun) God sends forth heat and light, which pervade the universe from its primes to its ultimates, and produce the life which is possessed by man and every animal . . .

68. That man is in power against evil and falsity . . . in wisdom . . . and in God . . . in proportion as he lives according to Divine order. Gen.art.

96. The Lord enters into every man with (the Divine life, which is the Divine love and the Divine wisdom) ; but unless a man lives according to order, that life is indeed in him, but contributes nothing whatever to salvation. It merely gives the faculty of understanding truth and doing good. To live according to order is to live according to the precepts of God ; and when a man so lives and does, he procures for himself justice . . .

245. The special Church which is with a man in the singular is not . . . made by doctrine, but by a faith and life according thereto. In like manner the Word does not . . . make the Church in special with a man ; but a faith according to the truths, and a life according to the goods, which he derives thence, and applies to himself.

335<sup>7</sup>. New-born infants . . . can breathe, because they live ; for this is a universal of life.

340. That the sum of faith is that he who lives well and believes rightly is saved by the Lord. Gen.art.

— . That man has been created for eternal life, and that every man can inherit it provided he lives according to the means of salvation which have been prescribed in the Word, is admitted by every Christian and heathen who has religion and sound reason. Truly the means of salvation are many, but all and each of them relate to living well and believing rightly, thus to charity and faith, for charity is to live well, and faith is to believe rightly. These two generals of the means of salvation are not only prescribed for man in the Word, but are also commanded; and (therefore) it follows that by means of them man can provide for himself eternal life . . .

[T. 340]<sup>2</sup>. There are two things which must be together in order that it may be said that man lives well and believes rightly. These two things are called the internal man and the external man. (Continued under INTERNAL MAN.)

341. That God cannot but save those who live according to His precepts, and have faith in Him, is evident from John xiv. 21-24. . . (For God) cannot but love him who lives well and believes rightly . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. And as it is impossible for God to damn anyone who lives well and believes rightly, so on the other hand it is impossible for God to save anyone who lives evilly and thence believes falsities. Ex.

343. That man receives faith by going to the Lord, learning Truths from the Word, and living according to them. Gen.art. 347. —<sup>3</sup>. Ex. 348.

344. The esse of the faith of the New Church is . . . 2. Trust that he who lives well, and believes rightly, is saved by Him.

347<sup>3</sup>. Spiritual life is life according to Truths . . .

358. That man can procure for himself the life of faith and of charity. Gen.art. 359, Ex.

— . The reason man is allotted life by going to the Lord, is that the Lord is life itself; not only the life of faith, but also the life of charity. Ill.

—<sup>e</sup>. By the life in faith and charity is meant the spiritual life which is given by the Lord to man in his natural life.

360. The heat and light from the (spiritual) Sun have life in them. Their life is from the Lord who is in the midst of that Sun. But the heat and light from the (natural) sun have nothing of life in them . . .

362. That the Lord, charity, and faith make one, as do life, will, and understanding in man. Gen.art.

— . These are the things which have been unknown: —That man is a mere organ of life: That life with all things of it inflows from . . . the Lord: That there are two faculties of life in man, called the will and the understanding . . .

364. That the Lord . . . with all His Divine life, inflows with every man. Gen.art.

— . In (Gen.i.27; ii.7) man is described as being an organ of life, and not life. . . For God . . . could not create life . . . but He could create man a form of life; as He created the eye a form of light. . . As, therefore, God alone is life, it follows indubitably that from His life He vivifies every man . . . It also follows that God inflows with every man with all His Divine life—that is, with all His Divine love and Divine wisdom, for these two make His Divine life—for the Divine cannot be divided.

—<sup>2</sup>. The way in which God inflows with all His Divine life may be perceived from (the way in which the sun) inflows into every tree, flower, and stone . . .

366. That everyone receives life from God according to his form. Gen.art. —<sup>3</sup>.

— . The same life—because the same soul—is in each person from infancy to old age; but as his state is varied according to his age . . . so also is it perceived. The life of God is in all its fulness not only with good men, but also with evil men. (The difference ex.)

—<sup>e</sup>. Man's form, which has been induced through the states of his life, varies the operations.

373. By the animus is meant man's affection of love and the derivative thought. These form his nature; in general, his life.

384. In Christendom all those have no faith who reject the Lord and the Word, although they live morally . . . Gen.art.

393. It is a constant Truth that for man to have spiritual life . . . charity and faith cannot be separated. Who does not see it from a certain interior perception . . . when he hears anyone say that whoever lives well and believes rightly is saved? And who does not reject it . . . when he hears it said that whoever believes rightly and does not live well is also saved? inasmuch as from interior perception it then instantly comes into the thought, How can anyone believe rightly when he does not live well?

—<sup>2</sup>. So again if anyone should hear that whoever lives well is saved, although he does not believe, would not the understanding see, perceive, and think, while it turned it over and over, that neither is this consistent; since to live well is from God? for all good which in itself is good is from God. What then is living well and not believing but as clay in the hand of a potter, which cannot be formed into any useful vessel for the spiritual kingdom, but only for the natural kingdom? Moreover, who does not see contradiction in these two statements; unquestionably in this one—that he will be saved who believes and does not live well? and also in this one—that he will be saved who lives well and does not believe?

443. That moral life, when it is at the same time spiritual, is charity. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. For there are four periods of life through which man passes from infancy to old age. Enum. . . But these periods of life are the periods of the life of man's spirit, and not likewise of his body . . .

470. That man is not life, but a receptacle of life from God. Gen.art.

— . It is commonly believed that life is in man, his own; so that he is not only a receptacle of life, but also life. . . The cause of this fallacious belief—that man is also life, consequently that life has been created in man, and has afterwards been generated in him by engrafting—I have deduced from appearance; but the cause of the fallacy from appearance is that at this day most are natural . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That man is not life, but a receptacle of life from God, is evident from these facts—that all things which have been created are in themselves finite; and that man, being finite, could not have been created except from finite things; and therefore it is said . . . that Adam was made from the earth and its dust . . . and every man actually consists only of such things as are in the earth, and from the earth in the atmosphere . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. As concerns man's spirit, it also has been created from finite things. What is the spirit of man but a receptacle of the life of the mind? The finite things of which it consists are spiritual substances which are in the Spiritual World, and are also collated into our earth and stored up therein.

471. Who cannot see . . . that life is not creatable? For what is life except the inmost activity of the love and wisdom which are in God and are God? which life may also be called living force itself. He who sees this can also see that this life cannot be transcribed into any man, except together with love and wisdom. Who . . . can deny that all good of love and truth of wisdom are from God alone, and that in proportion as a man receives them from God he lives from God? . . . and that on the other hand in proportion as anyone does not receive (them) he does not receive the life, which in itself is life, from God, but from Hell, which is no other life than inverted life, and which is called spiritual death?

472. (Life enum. among the things which are not creatable.)

473. The reason man feels just as if he lived from his own life, is that the instrumental feels the principal as its own . . . The principal cause is life, and the instrumental cause is the mind of man.

— Beasts also appear to have life created in them, but it is a like fallacy; for they are organs created to receive light and heat from the natural world and at the same time from the Spiritual World . . . mediately through Heaven or Hell . . . Man alone receives light and heat—that is, wisdom and love—immediately from the Lord. This is the difference.

504<sup>5</sup>. To this I replied, Man is an organ of life, and God alone is life; and God infuses His life into an organ . . . as the sun infuses its heat into a tree . . . and God gives man to feel this life in himself as his own . . . in order that man may live as from himself according to the laws of order . . . and may dispose himself to receive the love of God. Ex.

—<sup>7</sup>. If God had not left man to feel (this), man would not be man, neither would he have eternal life; for the reciprocal conjunction with God causes man to be man and not a beast, and also causes him to live to eternity.

528. That actual repentance is . . . to begin a new life. Gen.art.

577<sup>3</sup>. Who cannot hence perceive that unless there were such action and co-operation with the influent life in the spiritual organism of the brain, thought and will could not come forth? For life inflows from the Lord into that organism, and as the latter co-operates, that which is thought is perceived . . . If only life acted, and the man did not co-operate as if of himself, he could no more think than a stock.

682. By 'the name of the Lord Jesus Christ' . . . is meant the acknowledgment of Him, and a life according to His precepts. Ill. _____

Ad. 655-664. (The subject of life treated of and fully explained.) 980. 986.

D. 167. On the life of brutes.

— They are ruled by a certain general life, which is the life of Genii and Spirits . . . Hence a general life comes forth . . . which diffuses itself, and constitutes a sphere . . .

696. On the life of Souls or Spirits, and its diversities.

— Each Spirit has his own instinct of life, which is perceived either when he is left by himself, or when he is in a Society of his like. . . Besides, the life of a Spirit is not only varied according to the kind of associates he has, but it is also exalted (and diminished, according to the number of them). Thus are the lives of Souls after death adjoined to various Societies . . . In every Society the Souls suppose that it is they alone who live from themselves.

1104. As soon as the interior corporeal things grow cold, the vital substances . . . are separated. Ex.

1313. That the Lord God alone lives.

— Spirits are exceedingly indignant when I say that the Lord God alone lives, and that no man, Spirit, or Angel lives from himself, or has life from himself, and that he is only an organ of life. As the Spirits could not comprehend it, I have demonstrated it by various things. As, first, that the sense of the body or the body does not live from itself, but from the spirit; neither does the spirit live from itself, but from its soul; and neither does the soul live from itself, but from the Lord. (Three other arguments stated.)

1314<sup>o</sup>. When I asked them whether they did not want to become Angels, they replied that they did, but that they did not want to lose anything of their own life. And when I said that they would then receive a better life, they were not able to perceive it.

1708. How life from the Lord is infused also into the evil. Gen.art. 1709, Ex.

— Spirits have often inveighed against me as having no life, because I said . . . that men, Spirits, and Angels do not live from themselves, but from the Lord, and that they are only organs of life. . . They therefore said that I was endowed with no life at all . . . They are averse to my saying such things, because they want to live from themselves . . .

1710. The Lord's life inflows into all who are in the universe; for they constitute the Grand Body . . . which lives from Him, as a man does from his soul . . . and therefore all the members and parts of the members cannot but live from Him . . . and according to (their) forms, so do they live . . .

1769. He who is in faith, knows and perceives that he does not live from himself. Gen.art.

1770. The great fallacy of sense, that man . . . lives from himself, originates from the love of self . . .

1787. How the life (which a man has lived) in the body is continued after death. Gen.art.

1828. Therefore there are three degrees of life within man, just as there are three degrees of life in the Heavens. Ex.

[D.] 1884. On a certain perception by which it is Known how much life, and what quality of life there is in . . . a Spirit or Soul. —<sup>e</sup>.

1905. For without reflection there is no life.

2102. Spirits . . . supposed that there is no life except that of cupidities . . . for they know of no other life than that which they suppose to be their own . . . But it was given to reply to them that (when removed from cupidities) I have much more life . . . They further supposed that such a life is outside a person, and not within him ; but it was given to think that they suppose the life of cupidities . . . to be within them, and therefore sins are imputed to them . . . As concerns the Lord's life, this is still more appropriated to a man, because [it is appropriated] interiorly, more interiorly, and inmostly . . .

2326. That the Lord is not in the least the cause of evil, follows from this—that when the Lord's life inflows into the Heavens, and into the World of Spirits, then the organic forms or substances receive the life each according to its own form . . . The life which inflows is supposed by them to be their own, whence come perversities.

2348. Hence it may be evident that the postdiluvian man is such that he can retain all his life, and perceive it as his own ; although it is not his life and perception, but appears as if it were his ; differently from those who were before the Flood . . .

2460. That there is no life in evil. Gen.art.

2672. The Spirits were thinking that still they are alive ; and therefore it was given to say to them that life is in wisdom . . . and that the Truths of faith are what constitute life . . . But still they were thinking that insane men are nevertheless alive . . . and have much delight in that life . . . and therefore it was given me to say to them . . . that they have such a life as is like a dim fire shining in the dark. 2673, Further ex.

2674. They still supposed that there is something of life in them, because they live . . . and that thus they do have life from themselves, because such a life is theirs. But it was given to reply that the life which is therein is not theirs ; but is the faculty of being able to reason, and to understand what is true and good, which has been given to man above the beasts . . . It is this faculty . . . from which their smoky fire derives its life.

2735. That all things of man's life inflow from the Lord.

2828. That the veriest life is not of man, but of the Lord—a subtle proposition [put forth] by certain ones.

— The proposition was [this]—That no man, Spirit, or Angel can think that anything is his own, or have anything appropriated to him . . . unless there is also life in the recipient . . . But I was kept in the persuasion that it is the Truth that life is of the Lord alone . . .

2829. But they were informed that the life of the human soul—that is, of the inmost of the mind—is not of man, but of the Lord. The things of the mind are what receive life, and through these perception and sensation are communicated to the natural mind and to the body ; and as a man and a Spirit lives in his Natural and in his Corporeal, he supposes the life which is of the Lord to be his own . . .

2835. That there are distinct faculties, or lives, one within the other. Ex.

2836<sup>e</sup>. The life of the exteriors is . . . of the interiors, and the interior life is of the things more interior, and the life of these is of the Lord alone. Thus man supposes that he lives from himself, as his interior spirit supposes that it lives in the body.

2844. That when infants are playing with objects they suppose that they are alive.

2876. It was given to reply, that it has been decreed from eternity that everyone should enjoy his own life, and should not be deprived of it ; and therefore this (deceitful Spirit) also has life from the Lord ; but that it is the same as with transparent objects when enlightened by the sun, in which the light is turned into colours (of all kinds).

2884. That the Lord's general life inflows into the universe. Ex.

2985. A demonstration that [although] they suppose that they live from themselves, still they do not live from themselves.

3014. That Spirits have no life unless those things which they desire are permitted them.

3092. The following proposition was propounded to them—Who is alive ? he who is led by the Lord, or he who is led by himself ? For such Spirits suppose that there is no life unless it comes from themselves ; and thus that he who is led by the Lord is devoid of life . . . The matter was deliberated, and as soon as anything intellectual was given them by the Lord they perceived that that is the true life which comes from the Lord, and not the life which is from self, because it is from evils and to evil ; consequently that the life to evil is spurious, and that the life to good is true . . .

3156. It was given to say to him, What more does he want than that he should seem to himself to live ? . . . And further, What more can he want than to live the Lord's life ?

3215. When it was said concerning the life of Spirits, that there is one only life, namely, the Lord's, consequently that of love ; and when it was shown that all are merely organs of life, and that the life of the Lord inflows, being varied according to the quality of the organs ; and also that love alone is life ; and that without loves and their cupidities a man or a Spirit enjoys no life—then the deceitful murderer appeared like an inanimate mass ; thus representing himself from deceit . . .

3216. He was therefore cast down . . . more deeply, and there lay as if bereaved of life, so that he supposed that all life had been taken away from him . . . Hence may be evident what is the quality of a Spirit when he is remitted into his own state . . . He, being such, said that he loves that life . . . 3217.

3254<sup>2</sup>. The Lord's life passes through Heaven, and is varied according to the forms . . .

3390. I was shown of what quality were the pre-Adamites who were regenerated by the Lord and called 'Adam.' A certain one spoke to me in such speech (as theirs). In his words there was but little life . . . I heard that he was not evil, but had little life left . . . A little interior life remained . . .

3419. The Lord alone, being life, vivifies and actuates (the organic things of the body). . . For His life is in ultimates as well as in primes. Therefore whoever wants to live or act his own life cannot be in the Grand Man . . . Therefore the whole Grand Man is a passive force . . . which is called dead in itself: and the Lord alone is an active or living force. Hence the marriage (between them).

3428. On those who reject all faith, and believe only in life.

3429. The same one, who was a Subject of such Spirits . . . seemed to me to have a bright white body, (or rather) a bright whiteness instead of a body, because life is thus represented. When he was examined as to what was the quality of the life which he perceived, it was found to be abstracted from faith, thus devoid of Knowledges; for they supposed that if there were life, there ought not to be Knowledges present. It was given to say to him . . . that life is that which does, and that [so is] the life of faith, for faith is nothing except life; and when one lives the life of faith, then Knowledge is not felt . . . As, when a man is speaking, he does not attend to the words, but remains in the sense of the words; so also when he lives, the things which are of Knowledges as it were perish . . .

3430. He said that he was nothing, supposing that life consisted chiefly in that . . . 3431.

3432. His preacher . . . had persuaded him that life is everything. He does not admit even the expression faith, nor truth and good, because they are of faith . . . he does not know what love is, consequently he does not know what life is, because he does not admit the life of faith, and scarcely the life of love. His life was therefore perceived as being cold; but still while he lived in the body he did not seem to himself to do what is evil . . .

3433. As he was thus acting life, without the Knowledge of life, he appeared vague and indistinct; for he supposes spiritual life to be so—abstracted from the body.

3437. I spoke to (his preacher) many things about the Knowledges of faith—that there cannot possibly be true life except through the Knowledges of faith. (Continued under Know-cognoscere.)

3438. It was also given to speak concerning the angelic life—that it is a life of love; and it was insinuated that a life of love is their happiness . . . (and that) such a life (as men are born into) cannot possibly be amended and reformed except through the Knowledges of truth and good . . . and that man is not born into any understanding, still less into any will; but is first . . . inaugurated into the intellectual things of truth and good . . . and thus by the Lord into life; and thus the life becomes the Lord's, which is the life of love.

3457. It was perceived by a spiritual idea that there is nothing of life in the evil. Ex.

3484<sup>2</sup>. All such forms (however perfect) are within nature, and are devoid of life; and therefore so long as the mind detains itself in such forms, it is still without life; whereas the things which are within or above them are living from the Lord; but still they are organic, because they have no life in themselves, any more than the forms within nature.

3495<sup>e</sup>. It was observed . . . that the influxes of the Lord's life thus inflow (from one Spirit to another in succession) through a form as it were perpetually spiral; which form no one except the Lord can know.

3539. On the quality of the life of the evil.

—The life of the affections or of the will of the evil is like the fire of a torch, of a wax candle, or of sulphur; for into such a life, which is one of cupidities, is turned the Lord's life of love and mercy. The life of their understanding is like the lumen thence, which is dim . . . But at the approach of heavenly love . . . it is extinguished; the fieriness is first put out, and then it is turned into cold . . . But at the approach of Truth . . . their fiery lumen is bedimmed, and finally becomes darkness.

3551. (How little life there is in the lowest of the common people when they become Spirits.)

3552. (And how assiduously good Spirits try to infuse life into them.) J. (Post.) 193.

3553. When the good and angelic Spirits had thus had care of them for some hours, they began to be as it were vivified . . . so that life was being insinuated into them in order that they could be in association; and they then said that so they were in Heaven; for the life which had been insinuated into them was their Heaven. . . There is nothing repugnant with them in so far as Knowledges are concerned; there is merely a resistance in that they want to return into their own life . . .

3554. The way in which life was successively infused into them, was represented by (a succession of) colours. Des.

—e. Life is thus successively insinuated into them, in order that they may be able to be in the associations of good Spirits.

3571. Some were therefore let into the state of persuasion of others—that they do not live from themselves, but that life inflows through other Spirits, thus from what is general. When they came into this state, they said that so they could not live . . . From this it may be concluded that if man were to come into such a state—which is a state of the Truth—that he believed that he does not live from himself, but from the life of the Lord; and that the Lord's life inflows through the Angels; and if at the same time he believed himself to be ruled through Spirits—then he could scarcely live, although he had been scientifically persuaded [of the fact] . . . In a word, his life would be in the highest degree anxious; and therefore it is permitted that man should suppose that he has his own life, although it is a mere fallacy of sense.

3694. From this it is evident what is the life of persuasions; [namely] that when a man has been persuaded concerning the Truths of faith, he then has a life of light, that is, intellectual life, which life is diverse according to the persuasions of those things which the man has conceived concerning faith. While he is in the persuasion of the Truths of faith, he is still in nothing but a life of light, and the life of light cannot enter into the life of love. . . for the life of persuasions is born from the life of love; for he who is in the life of love is in the Knowledges of faith. . . Whereas he who is only in the life of persuasion cannot on that account be in the life of love, because the nature which is his life of love is nothing but evil, and therefore this life is utterly repugnant. This is the reason why the nature—and consequently the life of cupidities—must first be destroyed before anyone can come into Heaven; for the life of light cannot introduce anyone into Heaven, where there is nothing but mutual love.

[D.] 3696. Whatever differs from true faith, and of which one is persuaded, derives a life of persuasion opposite to true life; and therefore there are innumerable species of life from persuasion, as also from nature. The life of persuasion constitutes the shell, and the life of nature constitutes the kernel, which conjoin themselves in so far as possible.

3756°. Hence it is evident that (evil Spirits) have no life, because life consists in the understanding of truth and the will of good.

3757. As to the life of the body . . . as that some know the streets of a city . . . and others know how to make shoes, the Spirits said that still these persons live. But it was given to reply that such a life is the life of brutes; for they know all these things (much better than man). Ex.

3758. But as to a life truly human, it is not such a life as is common to the beasts . . . but a life truly human is that which regards eternal life, consequently the soul; for man lives for the sake of eternal life; and from these things he is man; which life consists in the understanding of truth and the will of good; and which with evil Spirits is no life. . . This may be evident also from those who come into the other life who have had little of spiritual life, in that they are like blocks of wood, and have scarcely anything of life; which is however exsuscitated with them.

3820. If a man's ends do not regard those things which are of spiritual and celestial life . . . he cannot have any other life than that which beasts have; for the ends show what and of what quality is the life. . .

3903. How difficult it is for those who are not in faith to live the life of faith. Gen.art.

— Certain Spirits, not of the evil, but of those who wanted to be in faith . . . were in the sphere that they were not thinking and speaking from themselves . . . When they were in this perception they said that so they could not live; for their life was then as it were grievous to them. It was given to say that seeing it is true that they do not think and speak from themselves, how is it that they do not love to live in the Truth? But this availed nothing. . . It was also given to say that the Angels are in their happiness when they perceive that they do not live from themselves; but this consolation did not avail. Hence it was evident how grievous is the life even of those who are good—to live the life of faith.

3904. A certain Spirit . . . who knew better than others what faith is, and what the Knowledge of faith, came to me and said that he now knows nothing. . . It was given to say to him that he had been reduced into a state of . . . ignorance, not because he did not know what truth is . . . but because in the other life Knowledges are confirmed . . . and, as his life is repugnant to them, it follows that he knows nothing. . . For although anyone is in the light of Knowledges, if his life is repugnant, he does not love the things which are confirmatory of the Knowledges of faith against the life, but he rather loves the things confirmatory of the life against the Knowledges; and when there is such a combat, it follows that he is in . . . ignorance. . . It was given to comfort him, [by telling him] that it is a state into which those are first reduced who are in the Knowledges of true faith, and whose life is not concordant; which is a species of vastation; and that then for the first time the Lord inseminates Truths. . .

3906. I afterwards spoke to him . . . about love . . . and that the life of Heaven . . . is the life of love. . . This life was represented to him . . . and he (then) perceived that he was so far from that life that he supposed he could never come into Heaven. . . It was given to say to him that it is possible . . . and, having been let into that life, he acknowledged that it is.

3912°. (These lascivious Spirits) had little life. . . They become like skeletons . . . and afterwards life is inspired into them . . . and thus they serve as bones, into which other Spirits can inflow.

4000. The Spirits objected . . . that ideas originate from the objects of sight . . . and thus that the Lord's life does not inflow, but is excited by the objects which are seen. (Continued under IDEA, here.)

4010. From these things it is given to conclude that it is better to be ignorant of all things, and simply to believe in simplicity that the Lord's life inflows into each and all things, and that His Providence rules each and all things, than to give one's self up to the exploration of such things. Fully ex.

4050. There are two lives, namely, the life of persuasions and the life of cupidities, which at this day are distinct with the human race, who suppose that man can be saved through faith alone, and thus separate the life by which they are saved from the life of the body . . . which is a species of simulation, in that a man can think in one way, and be saved by the life of the thought, and live in another way; thus being in Heaven by the life of the thought, and in the world by the life of the will; when yet these lives are not to be separated.

4051. They who are in such a life of persuasion are vastated differently from those who are in the life of the will or of cupidities. Ex.

4052. But those who are in the life of persuasion or confirmation that faith saves, and still live mercifully, from conscience, because so it has been commanded by the Lord, and do not place merit in it . . . are saved in the other life. (The palace where they dwell described.) This signifies the life of faith.

4095. Concerning the influx of life from the Lord, and His Providence in the most singular things.

4096. On life.—For man and Spirit there ought to be one life which is true life, namely, that of love and thence of the Knowledges of faith, and thus of things confirmatory. Such a life is truly angelic; and such was that of the Most Ancient Church. But when loves were successively turned into cupidities, and thence into Falsities, there thence originated the direful persuasions of the antediluvians, and thus the life of persuasions. After the Flood, life was separated and was made two lives; namely, one of cupidities, which remained, and was hereditarily transferred and increased; while the life of faith was made a life by itself, and separate; so that there is possible a life of faith, nay, of the Knowledges of faith, which is the life of the Church after the Flood; and at last, when they did not know external rites, they were inaugurated into that life, and also into the precepts of the law . . . Therefore at this day there is also the life of faith without love, which however cannot enter Heaven until the Lord has conjoined it with the life of love.

4111. The last vastation follows . . . and as they are then in scarcely any association, they sit in darkness, and in torment, with little life . . .

4114a. On both the lives of a Spirit.—There are with a Spirit two lives which he has drawn with him from the body . . . namely, the life of persuasion, and the life of cupidities. (Their life of persuasions described.)

—e. The life of cupidities is distinct from this; but when cupidity has induced persuasion, then both lives act. Therefore it is good for a man not to be persuaded concerning falsities . . .

4115. Concerning the life of persuasion.—The life which remains after death is the life of persuasion and the life of cupidity. When a Spirit is in his life of persuasion he excites all things whatever in man's memory which are in conformity with his persuasion . . .

4116. There is also the life of cupidity, which is an altogether different life; for the life of persuasion regards what is true or false . . . whereas the life of cupidity regards what is evil and good . . . 4117, Ex.

4118. The life of cupidity remains with Spirits, and it excites with man various cupidities, and thus the confirmations . . .

4188. Concerning the life of Spirits and Angels.—There are genera and species of lives; and Societies are distinct according to the differences of life. Everyone has Societies corresponding to his own life; the genus of that life is among many Societies, each of which has its peculiar life. A man or Spirit is in these Societies according to his changes of state, but he has his general or reigning life in one Society, into which he relapses . . . Outside these Societies—his own in special—he does not find the delight of his life . . .

4213. Concerning the influx of the life of the evil, and of the good.

—e. The life of the principles (of the evil) appears like light, but it is wintry light. It is otherwise with the life of the good.

4253. (Thus) all life is from cupidity, even that of intellectual things, thus from love . . . 4273°.

4273°. Hence it was evident that the influx of life is from the Lord alone; and the life affects all, so that they suppose themselves to live.
VOL. IV.

4281. Concerning those who have been vastated until they have little life left.

4282°. For their life, although it appears human from their excelling in cleverness of converse and of decorum, is nevertheless animal life, and thus, after ages, retains little of spiritual life; and at last they can serve for the vilest uses. Examp.

4299. It has been shown in many ways that the life of evil Spirits consists in cupidities; and that in proportion as they are removed from cupidities, they are removed from their life. And therefore, in order that they may live, and be prepared for some use, it is given them sometimes to abide in their cupidities; nay, in the hope of doing evil . . .

4322. It was also said that if evil were taken away, perhaps there would remain but little life . . . The Societies were (then) removed, and he appeared like an infant swimming with his hands; and it was said that he knew nothing, neither how to speak, nor how to think . . . Thus would it be with the evil if they wanted to become good miraculously.

4349. Concerning the life of Spirits, Angels, and men.

— I perceived manifestly that there is nothing which conjoins in the other life except the life itself of man, Spirit, and Angel. Such as is the life, such is the conjunction, even in Societies. All other things which are not of the life are not regarded in the other life . . . It was therefore said to Spirits who were boasting of their various merits in the world . . . that in the other life no inquiry is made about these things, but only as to what kind of a life they have, thus what kind of life they have imbued themselves with from the ends or loves . . . Therefore the union is of lives, and not of knowledges, professions of truth, merits, or deeds devoid of charity.

4387. What intellectual life is—It is evident that there are two lives, namely, of the will, and of the understanding. . . These two lives are circumstanced as are the sun and the moon. The sun is the affection of good; the moon is the affection of truth. . . Intellectual life is of the affection of truth; but as the moon cannot shine without the sun, but has the light of the sun which it reflects, so also [is it with] intellectual life . . .

4471. Evil Souls . . . first return into their own life, and then exercise their wickednesses in the World of Spirits according to their natures; but when they go beyond the delight of their life they are punished . . . It is however provided by the Lord that they shall not inflict evils on the good . . . After they have led this life for some years, and have exercised their wickednesses, they collect their evils, and become nothing else than evils of their own kind, and goods are then taken away from them . . . and thus they precipitate themselves into the Hell where such are. There they torture one another . . . and meanwhile sit like skeletons . . . and sometimes they are tortured interiorly, and are now and then remitted into delights together, but they return to the things which have been mentioned. At this time they dare not rise up into the World of Spirits . . . At last, after many ages . . . their corporeal things can in some measure be lulled, and then they are sometimes elevated into the World of Spirits, in order that they may serve for the vilest uses, with but little life, and with scarcely any delight . . . Such is the lot of the evil.

4686. I saw how evil Spirits and Genii are around man according to his life. There appeared . . . an active form, like a vortex . . . consisting of the influx of such Spirits or Societies from Hell. Such as his life is, such does it attract. There is a general life, or one which reigns universally, together with its varieties. A man who as yet has not become actually evil appears above the earth there, but as it were covered over as with a very dense opaque skin . . . But when he acquires for himself a life of evil, he sinks down more and more below the plane of the earth there, first to the feet, afterwards to the loins, then to the breast, and finally to the head, and then he is in Hell, and he cannot be elevated thence, because he is then in adult and also in old age, and no longer receives new truths, nor can those with him be bent . . . and when the man is not far from the end of his life, his head sways to and fro, and at last his whole body is bent forward . . . and he falls.

4687. After death he comes into the Society of such Spirits. . . No one is permitted, before death, to be with half his body above the earth, and half below it. This must be either above the loins or below them; there is the love in general. . . The progression of his life appears by his descending more deeply, by degrees.

4689. All who come into the other life are by degrees remitted into the life which they had had in the world . . . But the external intellectual things are by degrees taken away from them, and they are let into their own nature . . .

4746. That the life after death is the life of the internal man . . . Ex.

4824. For if a man lives evilly, and still believes in the holy Word, he does evil to Heaven. Therefore the Epistles of Paul have been permitted . . .

4847<sup>3</sup>. This may be confirmed from the fact that the body is the existence of life from the soul, which is the esse of life.

—<sup>4</sup>. Those from the Christian world who . . . deny the Lord, have scarcely any life.

5002. Why some men live long, and others not long. Ex. 5003.

— The life of every man is foreseen by the Lord, as to how long he will live, and in what manner, and therefore from his first infancy he is directed [with regard] to his life to eternity.

5496<sup>e</sup>. (Murderers there) have very little interior life.

5507. After devastation (all) are cast into Hell, or walk with but little life.

5520. With those who are becoming celestial the doctrine of the Church passes immediately into the life. When they know it, they live in simplicity according to it . . . But with the spiritual the doctrine of the Church passes first into the memory, and thence into the understanding and into the life . . .

5540. (Rejection of the Heavenly Doctrine as soon as it is known to be a doctrine of life. See LAST JUDGMENT, here.)

5689. The reason they are first kept in externals (there), is that they may be (thus) prepared for interior life, which is the life itself of man after death . . .

5720<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident that the life of a man makes the quality of his spirit.

5734. This I can asseverate—that he who does not acknowledge the Divine, and, in the Church, the Divine of the Lord, and does not live the life of faith, which is that of charity according to doctrine, cannot be otherwise than cast into Hell; for he puts off everything human. A man is such as is his life, from head to heel. He who is black as to the life is wholly black. Let them think however they will, and persuade themselves against it however they will, it is nevertheless an eternal Truth. (Continued under LAST JUDGMENT, here.)

5793. What it is to live as a Christian; and that it is not so difficult to do so in the Heavenly Doctrine as in the destroyed Babylon. Gen.art.

— Two things are requisite; first, to believe in the Lord, that is, to believe that everything good and true is from Him; and, secondly, to live sincere, so that he may shun external evils, which are also contrary to the civil laws.

5794. In the external form a Christian lives like another. He can grow rich, but not with cunning and evil art; he can eat and drink well, but not place the life itself in them, or receive delectation from superfluity or drunkenness . . . he can dwell well, with magnificence according to his condition; he can enjoy social intercourse as others do; sport, converse about the things of the world, about various household affairs; in a word, without any difference in externals . . . Nor has he any need to appear devout . . . but glad and cheerful; nor to give to the poor, except in so far as an affection for the neighbour leads him. He must live a moral man, and a good one; but with him a moral man is a spiritual man, because he thinks that everything good and true is from the Lord . . .

5881. Concerning the life of charity with man.—No man in the Christian world can possibly be in the life of charity unless when he thinks about the Lord he thinks of His Divine . . .

5881a. Many have said that charity is the essential of the Church . . . from a mere principle, and not from the life . . . A certain one said that he had heard that as he believed in charity he had the life of charity, as he who believes in faith has the life of faith. Hence it was evident that they had believed life to be in anyone without life.

5928. Concerning those who make the Lutheran religion of life.

5933. No one can be conjoined with Heaven, thus with the Divine, except through such things as are of the Word and thence of the Church . . . however morally, that is, sincerely and justly, he lives . . . It is the life of a man according to those things which makes him spiritual . . .

6034. He was seen as without life, but yet there was perceived the flesh as of a living man. Ex.

6065. Melancthon . . . asked, What is Truth? and what is life? It was answered (from Heaven) that Truth and life are to live according to the precepts of the decalogue . . . that to live unjustly is sin, and that to live sincerely and act justly is Truth. Thus Truth and life act as one . . .

D. Min. 4599. There is little vital in such a general affection: life itself consists in the intelligence and wisdom of truth; and if this is absent, there is little of what is vital.

4718°. Hence it was evident that it is the life (which is effective there); and not any faculty of reasoning and apprehending well.

4744. That all life is from the Lord. Ex.

4759°. The life which afterwards remains is so little that . . .

4768. Life is not external, or doing good, unless it is from willing good. Life consists in willing good and in thinking good . . . and he who wills good and thinks good does good, for there cannot be life without effect.

4774°. So that their life—that is, their interior life—is diminished.

4789. On those who excel in intelligence, but have lived evilly.

E. 78. 'As dead,' when the Divine presence with man is being treated of, = a deficiency of man's Own life; for the life proper to man is that into which he is born, which in itself is nothing but evil, for it is completely inverted, because it regards only self and the world, and consequently turns itself backwards from God and Heaven. The life which is not proper to man is that into which he is brought when he is being regenerated by the Lord; and when he comes into it he regards God and Heaven as in the first place, and himself and the world in the second. This life inflows with a man when the Lord is present. Hence it is evident that in proportion as this life inflows there is effected a turning round of the life; and this turning round, when sudden, causes the man to appear as if he were dead . . . But these two states of life cannot be described to the apprehension. They are different with a man from what they are with a Spirit; and they are quite different with the evil from what they are with the good.

—<sup>2</sup>. At the presence of the Divine, man cannot live as to the body; those who do live are shut in by an angelic column, which moderates the Divine influx; for the body of no man is receptive of the Divine, and therefore it dies and is rejected. Ill.

79. 'He laid His right hand upon me' = life from Him . . . such as is with those who are in illustration, and see and hear such things as are in Heaven.

82. 'I am He who liveth' (Rev. i. 18) = Him who is from eternity . . . (for) only He who is from eternity has life in Himself. That the Lord has life in Himself both as to the Divine and as to the Human. Ill.

—<sup>o</sup>. It is believed in the world that man has life implanted in himself; thus that it does not continually inflow from Him who alone has life in Himself, and who alone is life. But that this faith is a faith of falsity, see H.9.

84. 'And behold I am alive for ages of ages' = eternal life from Him. 'To be alive,' here, = life in others; and His life in others is eternal life. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. That the life of the Lord is the life of faith and love to Him, and that this life is eternal life. Ill. —<sup>3</sup>, Ex.

93. By 'the Angel of (the Church of Ephesus)' are meant those in the Church who are in the Knowledges of truth and good . . . and yet are not, or are not as yet, in life according to them . . . For doctrinal things alone . . . do not make a man spiritual, but a life according to them. Ex. . . Therefore a man does not become spiritual until they enter the life; and they enter the life when the man wills the things which he thinks, and thence does them. Ex.

97. From Whom is life for all in the New Heaven and New Church. Sig.

—'. 'To walk' = to live; and, when said of the Lord, life itself. Ex. and Ill.

104. 'Thou hast left thy first charity' = that they do not make as the essential of Knowledges the life which is possessed by those who are in a commencing Church. Ex.

105. That life according to Knowledges is what is essential of the Church, and not Knowledges without a life according to them. (Continued under Know-cognoscere.)

—<sup>o</sup>. To live according to the Knowledges of truth and good, is to think that we are to do so, and no otherwise, because it is commanded by the Lord in the Word. When a man thinks thence, and thence wills and acts, he then becomes spiritual. But it is necessary for those who are within the Church to believe in the Lord, and, when they think about Him, to think of the Divine in His Human, because from His Divine Human proceeds everything of charity and faith.

112°. Here now (by 'the Church of Smyrna') are described those who are in the Knowledges of truth and good, and at the same time in a life according to them. These, therefore, are those who are in the affection of truth from a spiritual origin. Ex.

114. 'He who was dead and is alive' (Rev. ii. 8) = that He has been rejected, and yet that from Him is eternal life.

126. 'I will give thee the crown of life' (ver. 10) = wisdom and the consequent eternal happiness. . . 'Life' = eternal happiness, which is also called eternal life.

—'. Man is born only natural . . . but becomes spiritual through truths from the Word and through a life according to them. Who can ever become spiritual unless he knows something about the Lord, Heaven, the life after death, faith, and love, and all the other things which are means of salvation? If a man were ignorant of these things, he would remain natural. Further ex. . . This is meant by the Lord's words in John: 'Unless anyone be generated from water and the spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God' (iii. 5). By 'water' is signified the truths of faith; and by 'the spirit,' a life according to them. (Continued under Know-cognoscere.)

[E.] 131<sup>20</sup>. ('The cherubs placed to guard the way to the tree of life') = . . . that all approach to the acknowledgment of the Lord alone is closed against him who does not live the life of love.

136. There are two things which make the spiritual life of man—love and faith . . .

148. The state of the interior life, which is unknown to all except those who are in it. Sig. and Ex.

— Those are in interior life who are in love to the Lord; and no others are in love to the Lord than those who acknowledge the Divine in His Human. . . Interior life is the spiritual life in which are the Angels; but exterior life is the natural life in which are all who are not in Heaven. With those who live according to the Lord's precepts and acknowledge the Divine in His Human, the interior mind is opened, and the man then becomes spiritual; whereas those who do not so live, or acknowledge, remain natural.

152<sup>2</sup>. It is the interior life of man, which is the life of his spirit—which life is the life of his understanding and will—which feels through the organs of the body the things which are in the world, and thus perceives them naturally. . . With beasts also, their interior life—which is also called their soul—in like manner feels through the external organs of the body. (The difference ex.)

179<sup>7</sup>. That they have life from Divine truth. Sig.

182. 'To the Angel of the Church in Sardis write' = those who lead a moral life, but not a spiritual life, because they make light of the Knowledges of spiritual things, and of the derivative intelligence and wisdom. Ex.

— We must first explain what moral life is, and what spiritual life, and also what is moral life from spiritual, and what is moral life without spiritual. Moral life is to act well, sincerely, and justly with associates, in both employments and in business; in a word, it is the life which appears before men, because it is carried on with them. But this life is from a double origin, being either from the love of self and of the world, or from love to God and towards the neighbour. Moral life from the love of self and of the world is not in itself moral life, although it appears as moral. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. But spiritual life is entirely different, because it is from a different origin, being from love to God and towards the neighbour; and hence their moral life is also different, and is truly moral life. Ex.

— (Thus) moral life from spiritual life is truly moral life, which is to be called spiritual, because this is its cause and origin; whereas moral life without spiritual is not moral life, but is to be called infernal, for in proportion as there reigns in it the love of self and of the world it is fraudulent and hypocritical.

183<sup>2</sup>. For there are two things which make all the life of man, namely, good and truth. These two, united in a man, make his spiritual life. —<sup>4</sup>, III. and Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. There are two things which make the life of man—the understanding and the will; the life of the understanding is to think from truths or falsities, and the life of the will is to affect or kindle with love those things which the understanding is thinking. These two lives of man correspond to the two lives of his body, which are the life of the respiration of the lungs, and the life of the pulsation of the heart.

186. 'Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead' (Rev. iii. 1) = . . . that they suppose themselves to be alive because they lead a moral life, when yet they are dead. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. That 'to live,' or 'to be alive' = spiritual life with man. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Life' = salvation and Heaven. III.

— Heaven is called 'the Land of the living.' III.

—<sup>9</sup>. That the Lord alone has life in Himself, and that every man has life from Him. III.

—<sup>11</sup>. The reason 'life' = the Lord, and the derivative salvation and Heaven, is that everything of life is from one only Fountain . . . and Angels and men are only forms recipient of life from Him. The life itself which proceeds from the Lord, and which infills Heaven and the world, is the life of His love, and it appears in Heaven as light, which, being life, illuminates the minds of the Angels . . . Hence it is that the Lord calls Himself not only 'the Life,' but also the 'Light.' III.

187. 'Be awake' = that they should procure life for themselves. Ex. and III.

— For spiritual life is to moral life without spiritual life as wakefulness is to sleep. Ex.

—<sup>8</sup>. As 'to be awake' = to receive spiritual life, 'to sleep' = natural life without spiritual. III.

189. That otherwise the Divine is not in the moral life. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. Whether you say moral life from a spiritual origin, or from a Divine one, is the same thing, because all spiritual life is from the Divine. Ex.

193. (On Knowledges which have not attained spiritual life. See Know-cognoscere, here.)

—<sup>6</sup>. To commit the Knowledges from the Word to life, is to think from them when, being left alone, one thinks from one's spirit; and to will them and do them; for this is to love truths because they are truths; and these are they who are made spiritual through Knowledges from the Word.

195. See Know-cognoscere. 196.

198<sup>2</sup>. The spirit of a man is such as is his life . . .

209. That they have power from the Lord against evils and falsities in proportion as they make of life the truths from the Word, and acknowledge the Divine of the Lord in His Human. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. ('These two things') are the two principal things of the Church, and no one can be in one unless he is at the same time in the other; for all the truths which are made of life are from the Lord . . . Ex.

— Truths are made of life when the man loves them, thus when he wills and does them . . . In a word, they are made of life when a man lives according to them from affection . . .

231<sup>2</sup>. But when their life is explored, it appears utterly infernal. Des.

235<sup>2</sup>. When yet the life makes the man of the Church; and those things are made of his faith which are of his life.

242<sup>4</sup>. The circle of man's life is to know, to understand, to will, and to do; for the spiritual life of a man begins from knowing, is then continued into understanding, afterwards into willing, and finally into doing. From this it is evident that when Knowledges are in the memory they are only at the entrance to life. (See also KNOW—cognoscere, here.)

242<sup>8</sup>. Falsities are made of faith when evils are of life.

256. All things of the Church relate to these . . . generals—doctrine, life according to it, and faith according to life. These are treated of in the writings to the six Churches. Enum. Life according to doctrine is treated of in the writings to the Churches in Thyatira and Sardis.

289. 'To Him who liveth for ages of ages' (Rev. iv. 10)=from Whom is . . . eternal life. . . For by 'Him who liveth' is signified that He alone is life, and thence that everything of life . . . is from Him. 291. 349.

292<sup>9</sup>. Hence it is evident . . . that no conjunction of good and truth is possible unless a man lives the life of love. To live the life of love is to do the Lord's precepts. Ex.

294<sup>16</sup>. As by 'the Word' is meant the Lord as to Divine truth, it is said, 'in Him was life, and the life was the light of men' . . . 'Light'=the Divine truth; and 'life' all the intelligence and wisdom from Divine truth; for these things make the life itself of man; and also according to them is eternal life.

295<sup>9</sup>. 'To satisfy every living thing with good-pleasure' (Ps. cxlv. 16)=to enrich with Divine truth from love all who receive life from Him.

325<sup>3</sup>. Worship . . . consists . . . in the life of charity . . . Therefore such as is a man as to the life, such are his prayers. Ex.

329<sup>15</sup>. There are two things with man which make his spiritual life, namely the good of love and the truth of faith . . .

349<sup>2</sup>. As it is at this day believed in the world, that the life which everyone has is given and implanted, and thus is his Own, and that it does not continually inflow, I will say something about it. Its being believed that life is in man, insomuch that it is his, is only [the result of] an appearance which originates from the perpetual presence of the Lord, and from His Divine love, in that He wills to be conjoined with man, and to be in him, and to give His life to him . . . And as this is perpetual and continuous, man supposes that life is in him as his Own. Yet it is known that all good and truth . . . come from above . . . and in good and truth is life itself, and not elsewhere: the receptacle of the good of love is the will, and the receptacle of the truth of faith is the understanding . . . it is in these two faculties in which is all the life of man . . . whence it is evident that the life of these faculties—consequently the life of the whole man—is not in man, but inflows . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Those in Hell also live from the influx of life from the Lord; for good and truth in like manner inflow with them, but they turn good into evil and truth into falsity, and this because they have inverted their interior recipient forms by a life of evil; and all influx is varied according to the forms . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. That there is one only Fountain of life, and that all life is thence, and continually inflows, is very well known in Heaven . . . for they perceive the influx itself.

— . . . That all lives are as streams from the one only and perennial Fountain of life, has also been made evident to me by much experience, and has been seen in the Spiritual World with those who believed that they lived from themselves . . . When the influx into the thought was partly taken away from them, they lay as if they were lifeless; and presently, at the approach of the influx, they revived as it were from death; and the same afterwards confessed that their life is not in them, but inflows continually into them; and that men, Spirits, and Angels are only forms recipient of life.

—<sup>5</sup>. The wise there conclude that it is so from the fact that nothing can come forth and subsist from itself, but from what is prior to itself; and thence . . . in successive order from the First; and that thus life itself regarded in itself is solely from Him who alone is life in Himself . . . How fatuitously (therefore) do they think who derive the origin of life from nature . . . and not from . . . the very Esse of life, from Whom is all the order . . . according to which life inflows—eternal life with those who can be disposed to receive life according to Divine order; and opposite life, which is called spiritual death, with those who cannot be disposed, thus who live contrary to Divine order . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. Beware of believing that the Divine life with anyone . . . is changed; for . . . the life itself is not changed or varied; but it is presented an appearance of the recipient form through which and out of which it passes . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. These things have been said in order that it may be known that there is one only life, and that all things which live, live from it. . . It shall now be shown that the Lord is that life itself, or that He alone lives. Ex. and III. 1120<sup>4</sup>.

381<sup>2</sup>. There is then no spiritual life. By spiritual life is meant the life of Heaven, which in the Word is simply called 'life.'

387. The consequent extinction of spiritual life. Sig. and Ex.

388<sup>2</sup>. The evil life which is signified by 'the evil wild beast' exists just as much with those who lead a good moral life, if they have not spiritual life. Ex.

— . . . (Thus) an evil life . . . is not the external life . . . but it is the internal life which is of the spirit. Ex.

388<sup>22</sup>. See EVE, here.

419<sup>2</sup>. For there are two lives which with man make a one—the life of truth and the life of good; the life of truth is the life of the understanding, and the life of good is the life of the will. Sig.

—<sup>3</sup>. Hence it may be evident that 'spirit,' or 'wind,'=spiritual life. Tr.

—<sup>4</sup>. In Gen. ii. 7 . . . there is meant spiritual life, which is the life of intelligence and wisdom through Divine truth. Ex.

[E.] 423. 'Having the seal of the living God' (Rev. vii.2)=the Divine will. Ex.

—<sup>v</sup>. For the Lord is called 'the living God' from the Divine love; for love is the life itself of man; and the Divine love is that from which is the life of all.

475<sup>8</sup>. That the internal man is purified through the truths which are of faith, and the external through a life according to them, is meant by (John iii.5).

483. 'And shall lead them to living fountains of waters' (ver.17)=in Divine truths. Ex. . . By 'living' is signified living from the Divine . . . 'Living waters' are often mentioned in the Word, and by them are meant the truths which come . . . from the Lord. The reason they are living, is that the Lord is life itself . . . and that which comes from life itself is alive; whereas that which comes from man is dead. In order that the Lord may give life to truths, He inflows into them through good, and good vivifies. He also inflows from the interior, and opens the spiritual mind, and implants in it the affection of truth; and the spiritual affection of truth is the very life of Heaven with a man. This life is that which is insinuated by the Lord into a man through truths. Hence it may be evident what is meant by 'living waters.' Ill.

521<sup>2</sup>. For man has all spiritual life—which is called in the Word 'life,' and 'eternal life'—through truths . . .

546<sup>2</sup>. Man has two faculties in which all his life consists—the understanding and the will . . . 551.

572. That (they were continually in the state) of depriving themselves of all the understanding of truth, and of the derivative spiritual life. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. For man has spiritual life through the understanding, because in proportion as the understanding is opened and suffers itself to be illustrated through truths, in the same proportion the man becomes spiritual. The understanding, however, is opened through truths from good, and not through truths without good . . .

585<sup>3</sup>. For every man is such as is his life; and the life of man principally consists in willing and thence doing . . .

588. In which and from which there is nothing of the understanding of truth or of the perception of good, and thus nothing of spiritual life. Sig. and Ex.

591. That (they have not averted themselves) from snatching away the Knowledges of truth and good, and thus the means for acquiring spiritual life. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. Spiritual life is extinguished through perversions of good and falsifications of truth, and also through the deprivation of the Knowledges of truth and good, through which spiritual life is procured.

617<sup>18</sup>. That to read the Word and to be instructed from it effects nothing towards salvation, unless at the same time we live according to it. Sig.

622<sup>13</sup>. The reason 'the belly' or 'viscera'=the interiors of the thought or of the understanding, is that there are two lives with man, namely, the life of the understanding and the life of the will. All things of the body correspond to these two fountains of life . . . insomuch that the part of the body which does not suffer itself to be actuated by them is not alive. Hence it is that the universal body is subject to the commands of these two lives; for all things in the body which are moved . . . by the breathing of the lungs are subject to the command of the life of the understanding; and all things of the body which are actuated . . . by the beating of the heart are subject to the command of the life of the will. Hence it is that 'soul' and 'heart' are often mentioned in the Word, and that 'the soul'=the life of the understanding, and also the life of faith; for the soul is predicated of the respiration: and that 'the heart'=the life of the will, and also the life of love. 1012.

624<sup>19</sup>. 'Thou shalt not live' (Zech.xiii.3)=to extinguish.

629<sup>8</sup>. 'To live'=the influx of the Lord into these Knowledges through the spiritual man and his intelligence.

650<sup>60</sup>. For if evils and the derivative falsities were to be removed from a man all at once, he would have scarcely any life; for the life into which he is born is the life of evil and of the derivative falsity. (Sig. by the gradual driving out of the nations from Canaan.)

665. 'The spirit of life from God' (Rev.xi.11)=the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord. Ex.

666. New life such as is possessed by a regenerate man of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. For the ultimate of man's life is in his Natural . . .

670. For all who lead an evil life . . . in themselves think against the goods and truths of the Word . . . Ex.

707. For everyone's life's love . . . forms a sphere around him . . .

714. For everyone is formed interiorly according to his life. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For knowledge and the faculty of reasoning do not make a man spiritual, but the life itself. Ex. —<sup>3</sup>.

725<sup>2</sup>. 'The male'=doctrine, and 'the female'=life. Ex.

— The reason these two, namely, doctrine and life, taken together . . . are called 'man,' and also make the Church, is that man is man from the understanding of truth and the will of good . . . Ex.

735. See MICHAEL, here.

739<sup>4</sup>. The third degree is opened with those who at once apply Divine truths to the life . . .

750<sup>2</sup>. As all the life of man resides in these two faculties . . . 'lives' are sometimes mentioned in the plural . . .

778<sup>5</sup>. See FAITH ALONE, here.

780<sup>2</sup>. They wanted to endure (the idol) with something of life by means of their arts, but could not.

781<sup>18</sup>. 'We are . . . among the living as the dead' (Is.lix.10)=that they are able to be in spiritual life through the Word, and yet are not because they are in falsities.

790<sup>e</sup> Man has no need to operate more than to learn truths from the Word and live according to them.

792. Who cannot see . . . that a man is such as is his life? Ex.

796<sup>5</sup>. See DOCTRINE, here.

—<sup>3</sup>. The faith of the life remains, but not the faith separated from life; and every man has life in proportion as he abstains from evils and shuns and is averse to them because they are contrary to the Word . . .

797<sup>6</sup>. Therefore to impute the Lord's merit to themselves, and not to live according to His precepts . . . is blasphemy. Ex.

—<sup>7</sup>. For the life of man's thought is from the affection of his will.

—<sup>10</sup>. Life according to (false) doctrine completely closes Heaven. Ex.

799. For the Church is the Church from life according to doctrine; and life according to doctrine is worship.

799<sup>18</sup>. Those are called 'the living' who are in truths from good.

800<sup>2</sup>. Those do not falsify the Word . . . who do not separate faith from life . . . believing that faith and life make one . . . (and) affirm in themselves that no one who lives evilly can have faith, but he who lives well; and that he who lives evilly cannot receive faith unless he performs repentance of life . . . and also that he who lives evilly cannot have in his spirit any other faith than a faith of what is false . . . They who thus conjoin life and faith . . . have the life of charity . . . and their faith is spiritual in so far as they know truths from the Word, and live according to them; for faith is made spiritual from the life.

826<sup>e</sup>. Those become Angels of the Third Heaven who draw the laws of life from the Word, and live according to them, and who worship the Lord.

828<sup>3</sup>. The holy things of Heaven and the Church . . . with them are not in the memory . . . but in the life . . .

831<sup>4</sup>. (Thus) the life of every man is from his works. Ex.

832<sup>3</sup>. The things which a man thinks from his interior memory, when left by himself, are of his life, and become of his life. Ex. . . But the things which he thinks from his exterior memory, if they do not make one with the thought from the interior memory, are not of his life, nor do they become of his life . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. The love with a man, and his derivative life, are not made spiritual by merely knowing and understanding truths, unless he also wills and does them. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. These (three) degrees are opened with a man according to the reception of Divine truth in his life. Ex.

837<sup>2</sup>. That the whole life of a man is the life of his love; and that love and life with a man make one, and are one. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. There are two primary faculties of the life of man, namely, the will and the understanding. Ex.

—<sup>8</sup>. Man's love and life are entirely such as are the works of his will; and the works of the will are according to the truths which are applied to life. Knowledges . . . do not live with him . . . until he begins to be affected with truths because they are truths, and begins to will and do them. Before this they are outside the man's life.

839. It shall now be (shown) that the faith of a man is such as is his love or life . . . Works contain in themselves all things of a man's love and life . . . The life of his mind produces such things through the life of his body, and both lives . . . concur to produce them; from which it follows that they manifest themselves in them. . . . And as the will and the thought, through the life of the body, produce action, the faith manifests its quality in the works. Further ex.

842. From (what has been said above) I will make the following conclusion—that with every man, the love, the life, and the works make a one; inasmuch that whether you say the love, the life, or the works, it is the same thing. Ex.

847<sup>3</sup>. Besides, all religion has life as its end. Ex.

859<sup>2</sup>. For with everyone the Lord inflows into the life; and the life of Heaven is from love or charity . . . and love or charity is such as it is formed through truths . . . and therefore no other life receives influx . . . from the Lord . . . The life of faith separated from charity . . . is life merely natural . . . from which life there is no communication with Heaven . . .

864<sup>6</sup>. The evil which a man has hereditarily makes his life, because it is his proprium . . .

865. All the affection and derivative thought of a man is not only within him, and makes his life; but is also without him, and makes the sphere of his life . . .

866<sup>8</sup>. Everything which inflows into the internal sight of man . . . if it pleases, enters his will, and adds itself to his life.

874<sup>2</sup>. Hence it was evident to me . . . that he who does not live the life of truth does not want to be reformed; and he who does not want to be reformed successively rejects from himself all things which had been of his intelligence and wisdom, and lives his own love, which is contrary to these things . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. The glory of the Lord is to illustrate men and Angels, and to bless them with wisdom and happiness, which is done solely through the reception of Divine truth in doctrine and at the same time in life.

885<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that there are many in (the solifidian) Churches who teach faith conjoined with life, and life conjoined with faith; but others who teach faith separated from life. The latter is done by (those) who teach from doctrine, the former by (those) who teach from the Word . . . and this is permitted . . . because the Word manifestly teaches life, and faith according to life . . .

899<sup>7</sup>. 'To pass from death into life' (John v. 24)= resurrection and life in Heaven.

901. 'Their works follow with them'=that they have spiritual life, which is the life of the Angels of Heaven. Ex.

— . The reason 'works'=the life of man, is that they make his life . . . That which is in the thought and in the will, and not in act, does indeed enter the man and commence his life; but still it goes out and disappears, because it is not as yet terminated. Whereas that which is in the will of a man and thence in act, makes his life, and is permanent, whether it is evil or good. That thought alone does not make the life of man may be evident from the fact that a man can think many things which he does not will . . . The reason the thought and will of a man without act do not make his life, is that the will is not fixed, and will not fixed is like water which evaporates; for it is easily changed by a love which is adverse to it. (Thus) by 'works' . . . is signified the life of man. That works, love, will, and act, and the life of man, make one, see above.

1004<sup>4</sup>. There are consorts in the Heavens who are in such conjugal love that both can be one flesh . . . They said that they have one life; and that they are like the life of good in truth, and the life of truth in good; and that they are like the pairs (of organs) in man . . . which although two still are one as to life, and as to the exercise of life . . . They said that their life thus conjoined is full of Heaven, and that it is the life of Heaven itself with its infinite blessednesses . . .

1005<sup>6</sup>. Whereas in chaste marriages the life of the man through the seed adds itself to the life of the wife; whence is the inmost conjunction from which they become not two but one flesh . . .

1121<sup>3</sup>. The life regarded in itself which is God cannot create another who is life alone; for the life which is God is uncreate, is what holds together, and is not separable. Hence it is that God is one. But the life which is God can create forms from substances, which (forms) are not lives, and it can be in these, and can give them as it were to live. These forms are men, which, being receptacles of life, could not at the first creation be anything but images and likenesses of God . . . for life and its recipient adapt themselves together as the active and the passive, but do not commingle themselves. Hence it is that human forms, which are recipients of life, do not live from themselves, but from God, who alone is life; and therefore, as is known, all the good of love and truth of faith are from God . . . for if man had the least bit of life as his own, he could will and do good from himself, and also understand and believe truth from himself . . . when yet if he believes this, the form which is recipient of life closes itself above it, is perverted, and intelligence perishes. Good and its love, and truth and its faith, are the life which is God; for God is good itself and truth itself; and therefore God dwells in these with man.

1122<sup>2</sup>. It appears to man as if he lives from himself, but this is a fallacy; for if it were not a fallacy, man could love God from himself, and be wise from himself. The reason life appears as if it were in man, is that it inflows from the Lord into his inmosts, which are remote from the sight of his thought, and thus from his perception; and also because the principal cause, which is life, and the instrumental cause, which is the recipient of life, act together as one cause; and this is felt in the instrumental cause, which is the recipient, as if it were in it. Ex. . . He who examines more deeply is able to know that man as to each and all things which belong to him is an organ of life; and that that which produces sense and perception inflows from without; and that it is the life itself which causes man to feel and perceive as of himself. Another reason why life appears as if it were in man, is that the Divine love is such that it wants that which is its own to belong to man, but still teaches that it does not belong to man. Ath. 69.

1124<sup>2</sup>. If it is said and thought that life itself is God, or that God is life itself, and there is not at the same time any idea of what life is, then . . . it is not understood what God is. In the thought of man there are two ideas—one abstract, which is spiritual, and the other not abstract, which is natural. The abstract idea . . . about the life which is God, is that it is love itself and wisdom itself, and that the love is of the wisdom, and the wisdom of the love. But the non-abstract idea about the life which is God, is that His love is like fire, and His wisdom like light, and that both together are like the sunbeam . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. But it is not allowable to have an idea about the life which is God as of fire, or of heat, or of light, unless at the same time there is in them the idea of love and wisdom . . . For God is a perfect Man, in face . . . and in body. There is no difference as to form, but as to essence. His essence is that He is love itself, and that He is wisdom itself, thus life itself.

1125<sup>2</sup>. No idea can be obtained of the life which is God unless there is also obtained an idea of the degrees through which life descends from its inmosts to its ultimates. (Continued under DEGREE.)

1126<sup>2</sup>. As God is life, it follows that He is uncreate . . . because life cannot be created, but it can create . . . If life came forth from another, there would be another who was life, and this life would be life in itself. Or, if this First were not life in itself, it would be either from another or from itself; and life from itself cannot be said, because from itself involves an origin . . . This, therefore, is the life itself which is God, and which is a Man.

1127<sup>2</sup>. That all things are from the life itself which is God, and which is a Man, may be illustrated by the man who has been created. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. The life itself with him is a man, both the sensuous and the natural, as well as the rational, the spiritual, and the celestial . . . The man in which these are, is only the recipient. . . So the universal angelic Heaven . . . is a man; each Heaven by itself . . . is a man; each Society . . . is a man; so is the Church on earth . . . The reason is that the life which is from the Lord is a man. Life from the Lord is love and wisdom; hence such as is the reception of the love and wisdom from the Lord, such is the man. These things testify, in the first place, that all things have been created from the life which is God, and which is a Man.

1129<sup>3</sup>. That all things are from the life itself which is God, and which is wisdom and love, may also be illustrated by created things, when they are regarded from order. Ex.

1134<sup>2</sup>. The reason God has all power, and men and Angels none at all, is that God alone is life, and men and Angels are only recipients of life; and life is that which acts, and the recipient of life is that which is acted upon. Ex. . . If man does not live from himself, it follows that he does not think and will from himself . . .

1136<sup>2</sup>. The laws of order which are called the laws of the Divine Providence, are the following. I. That man should not feel and perceive, and thence should know no otherwise than that life is in him, thus that he thinks and wills from himself, and thence speaks and acts from himself; but yet that he should acknowledge and believe that the truths which he thinks and speaks, and the goods which he wills and does, are from God, thus as from himself. 1138<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

1143<sup>3</sup>. See HALF-DEAD, here.

1147<sup>3</sup>. For fifteen years I have manifestly perceived that I do not think and will anything from myself; also that everything evil and false inflows from infernal Societies, and everything good and true from the Lord. Observing this, some Spirits said that I do not live; to whom it was given to reply that I live more than they do, because I feel the influx of what is good and true from the Lord, and I see and perceive the illustration; and that from the Lord I perceive the evils and falsities from Hell; not only that evils are thence, but also from whom they are; and it has also been given me to speak to them, to reprehend them, and to reject them together with their evils and falsities; and thus to be delivered from them. And it was further given to say that now I know that I live; and before not so much.

1162<sup>3</sup>. Man is in the midst of these Societies . . . and if he were to be plucked away from them . . . he would fall down dead, life remaining solely in the inmost through which he is a man and not a beast, and through which he lives to eternity.

1171<sup>6</sup>. Such, then, is the life of man, not only the life of his lower mind, but also the life of his body; for the life of the lower mind acts as one with the life of the body by correspondences; for the life of the will corresponds to the life of the heart, and the life of the understanding to the life of the lungs, which are the two fountains of the life of the body. . . Hence it is that an evil person cannot live in Heaven, and that a good one cannot live in Hell. Both the one and the other become as dead, if they are not among those with whom the life of their will and the derivative life of their understanding act as one . . .

1196<sup>2</sup>. Something shall now be said about the life of animals. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. From its origin what is spiritual has life in it; but what is natural has from its origin nothing of life in it . . .

1199<sup>2</sup>. No one can know the quality of the life possessed by the beasts of the earth, the birds of the heavens, and the fishes of the sea, unless he knows what their soul is, and the quality of it. Ex.

1207<sup>2</sup>. Nature and life are two distinct things. Nature begins from the sun of the world, and life begins from the Sun of Heaven. . . That which proceeds from the Sun which is pure love is called life . . .

1212<sup>2</sup>. The Spiritual from which (are animals and plants) is alive in its mediates, but in its ultimates is not alive. In its ultimates the Spiritual retains no more of what is alive than is sufficient to produce a likeness of what is alive . . .

1222<sup>0</sup>. As Angels are only recipients . . . it is evident that the Lord is the life of that Man, that is, of Heaven and the Church.

1223<sup>2</sup>. That as life is in each thing and in the most singular things of man, and Knows all their state; so the Lord is in each thing and in the most singular things of the Angels of Heaven and of the men of the Church. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason life is in each thing and in the most singular things of man, is that the animal form . . . is the real-ipsa-form of life; for, from its first Fountain, which is the Sun of Heaven or the Lord, life is in the perpetual endeavour to form a likeness and image of itself, that is, a man, and from man an Angel; and therefore from the ultimates which it has created it adjoins to itself things conformable, by means of which there is man, in whom it may live.

De Verbo 2<sup>0</sup>. From these things it is evident that the Word is interiorly alive . . . 'The words which I speak to you are spirit, and are life' (John vi. 63). The life which inflows through the Word from the Lord is the light of truth in the understanding, and the love of good in the will. This love and that light conjointly make the life of Heaven with man, which is called eternal life, as the Lord teaches: 'God was the Word; in Him was life, and the life was the light of men.'

Ligament. Ligamentum.

See COLLIGAMENT.

W. 403<sup>2</sup>. The viscera of the whole body are conjoined with the chamber of the breast by ligaments; and so conjoined that when the lungs respire, each and all . . . receive something of the respiratory motion . . . and, together with these, all the lower things of the body which are in connection with them by means of ligaments . . . 408<sup>2</sup>.

D. 983. On the Spirits who relate to the external ligaments.

— . All the viscera of the body . . . have their external ligaments through which there are communications not only with the internal things—and in fact with the least things, as is evident—but also with the things which are outside; and especially with those which act in society. The ligaments of the viscera . . . relate to generals, as to the peritoneum, the pleura, the diaphragm, the mediastinum, the pericardium . . . and according to these connections [there are] communications and relations . . .

984. Among Spirits there are those who relate, as it were, to the ligaments in the body. The internal ligaments are those Spirits who are near . . . in order that the Societies which are distant may perceive the things thought by me. (These emissaries) place themselves near the head, so that they perceive whatever inflows . . .

985. Those who relate to the ligaments between Angels and men, are Spirits so collocated into order by the Lord that the thoughts of man—nay, the causes and beginnings of his thoughts—can be uplifted . . . The Lord Himself is in all, and, when it so pleases Him, has no need of mediations.

986. The external ligaments are the Spirits who as it were run higher and thither; and when they hear anything, they at once fly to their own Society and tell it in a sonorous voice . . . They are those who in the life of the body have loved to be able to discern what others are thinking, or to seem to themselves to be able to do so; and when they hear [anything] they cannot rest; but are carried away by a certain cupidity of the lower mind to tell it to others . . . There are similar explorers in general as in each of the Societies in particular. In the same way do these persons run about in the other life, and for the sake of this end they are admitted, and thus they suppose themselves to be loved; but they are loved only as means to ends.

D. Min. 4582. Those who are still more envious operate into . . . the ligaments towards the testicles.

Light. Levis.

A. 2540<sup>2</sup>. These things appear as of no consequence to the man to whom worldly and bodily things are a matter of care and of the heart; but to the Angels they are precious. . . Hence it is manifest that many things which are of no consequence to man . . . are most highly valued by the Angels . . . and, on the other hand, that the things which are most highly valued by man . . . are of no consequence to the Angels. 2551<sup>6</sup>. 2574<sup>6</sup>.

3768. Unless they were significative, these things would be of too slight consequence to be mentioned in the Divine Word.

6346. 'Unstable as water'=to be of no weight or strength. E.434<sup>17</sup>.

8279. Truth from good is of such a nature that it ascends upwards, like a light body in the world.

Light. Lux.

See LUCID, and LUMEN; and under HEAT.

See also under COLOUR, ENLIGHTEN, EYE, FLAME, GLORY, ILLUMINATE, SHINE-lucere, SIGHT, and SOUTH.

A. 18. Man has then nothing of light. 19.

20. 'Let there be light, and there was light' (Gen. i. 3) ... When man is being conceived anew, he first begins to know that his goods are not goods; and when he comes more to the light [he begins to know] that the Lord exists, and that the Lord is good itself and truth itself. (Ill. by John i. 1-9.)

21. 'And God saw the light, that it was good; and God distinguished between the light and the darkness. And God called the light day, and the darkness He called night' (Gen. i. 4, 5). The light is called 'good' because it is from the Lord ... 'Darkness' = the things which ... (before) had appeared as light ... All things which are of the Lord are compared to 'day,' because they are of the light ...

34. Those who are in knowledge ... without love, are in such ... dim light that ...

—<sup>2</sup>. Like the light of the sun without its heat, as in winter ...

38. 'To distinguish between the light and the darkness' (ver. 18) ... By 'the light' is meant truth ...

51. The spiritual man ... is called 'a son of light' (John xii. 36).

182. The spiritual Angels give the use of light to (those who are being resuscitated). D. 1106<sup>4</sup>.

322. Good and angelic Spirits, and Angels, live in light so great, that the noon-day light in the world can scarcely be compared to it.

1042. See RAINBOW, here.

— . In spiritual things ... black is ... evil, which absorbs and extinguishes the rays of light; whereas snow-white is the truth and good which a man supposes that he does from himself, which reflects and rejects from itself the rays of light. The rays of light which fall upon them, and as it were modify them, are from the Lord, as from the Sun of wisdom and intelligence; for the rays of spiritual light are nothing else, and are from no other source.

1053<sup>2</sup>. The Angels live in light so great that the light of the world is relatively nothing. Compared to the light of the world, the light of Heaven in which the Angels live is like the lumen of the noon-day sun as compared with the lumen of a candle, which is extinguished and becomes null when the sun rises. In Heaven there are celestial light and spiritual light. Celestial light ... is like the light of the sun, and spiritual light is like the light of the moon, but with every difference according to the state of the Angel receiving the light ... 1525.

1116. The second and third posterity of the Most Ancient Church ... live in an aura of ... resplendent pearly light, and sometimes in a diamond-like one.

1117. They live in the highest [degree of] light. The light of the world can scarcely be compared to that light in which they live. That light has been shown me by means of a flaming light which as it were fell down before my eyes; and those who belonged to the Most Ancient Church said that they have such light, and one still more intense.

1321. For all the light of the Truth is from the Lord, and all thick darkness is from man; and when, in worship, man succeeds in place of the Lord, the light of truth becomes thick darkness, and then light is regarded by them as thick darkness, and thick darkness as light ...

1440<sup>0</sup>. The light itself of the soul is in celestial things, because in them is the Divine Itself ...

1458. In Heaven those are in light who are in a state of wisdom and intelligence, exactly according to their state, and those are in the highest light who are in a state of the highest wisdom and intelligence ...

— . Knowledges are celestial and spiritual truths, which in Heaven are so many radiations of light, and they are also presented visibly by light. ... As, therefore, the Lord was to be imbued with Knowledges, in order that as to the Human Essence also He might become the light itself of Heaven, it is here said that 'Abram journeyed ... towards the south.'

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Thy light shall arise in the darkness' (Is. lviii. 10) = that they will have the intelligence of truth.

1521. On the light in which the Angels live. Gen. art. — . The light in Heaven is such as to incredibly surpass the very noon-day light of the solar world. But they have no light from this world, because they are above or within the sphere of that light; but their light is from the Lord, who is the Sun to them. Moreover, to the Angels the light of the world is like a dense thick darkness; and when they are permitted to look into that light it is as if they were looking at mere darkness ... From this may be evident what a difference there is between the light of Heaven and the light of the world.

1522. I have so often seen the light in which Spirits and Angels live, that at last I have ceased to marvel at it, because it has become familiar. It would be too prolix to adduce all my experience, therefore I may adduce only these few things.

1523. In order that I might know the quality of that light, I have sometimes been withdrawn into the abodes of good Spirits and Angels ... I have also seen infants and their mothers in light of brightness and resplendence so great that anything brighter is quite impossible.

1524. An intense flaming fell down before my eyes which greatly dazzled not only my eye-sight, but also my interior sight. Presently there appeared an obscure something like an opaque cloud in which there was as it were something earthy ... So great is the light with the Angels in Heaven relatively to the light in the World of Spirits ... And as is the case with the light, so also is it with the intelligence and wisdom of the Angels above the intelligence and wisdom of Spirits ; and not only the intelligence and wisdom, but also all things which belong to intelligence and wisdom, as speech, thought, joys, happinesses, for these correspond to the light.

1526. I have been withdrawn from the ideas . . . of the body, so as to be held in spiritual ideas, and there then appeared a vivid sparkling of diamond-like light . . . I can describe the light in no other way, for it was as if it were sparkling with diamonds in all its minutest [particles]; and while I was kept in that light I perceived the particulars which were worldly and corporeal as if they were beneath me, and far removed ; by which I was instructed in what great light are those who are withdrawn from material ideas into spiritual ones. 3885.

1529. It is very well known in Heaven, but not so well in the World of Spirits, whence comes such great light, namely, from the Lord. . . In the third Heaven the Lord appears to the celestial Angels as a Sun, and to the spiritual Angels as a moon. The origin itself of light is from no other source. But the Angels have light in proportion to the Celestial and Spiritual with them ; and such as are the Celestial and Spiritual such is the light. Thus the Lord's Celestial and Spiritual itself manifests itself before their external sight by means of light. 1530, Ill. 1531, Ill.

1532. By virtue of the Lord's light in Heaven there appear things wonderful and innumerable beyond utterance. They are continual representatives of the Lord and of His Kingdom, such as are in the Prophets and the Apocalypse . . .

1783<sup>d</sup>. When heavenly light appears, the light of the world is like thick darkness . . . Whereas when anyone is in the light of the world, heavenly light, if it then appears, is like thick darkness.

2157. Celestial ideas can scarcely be called ideas, but so many lights of affections and perceptions, which follow in a continuous series . . .

2196<sup>19</sup>. From appearances man supposes that no other light is possible than that which is from the light of the world ; when yet in the Heavens there is not one whit of the light of the world ; and still there is light so great as to exceed a thousand times the noon-day light of the world.

2349<sup>2</sup>. 'The light'=faith in the Lord, and the Lord Himself. Ill.

2353<sup>3</sup>. 'The light is not in him' (John xi. 10) . . . 'The light'=what is true and good.

2388<sup>2</sup>. In the other life truth manifests itself by light, and good by heat ; but truth without good by a cold light, but with good by a vernal light.

2441<sup>2</sup>. It is the Divine Celestial of the Lord's love which thus appears before their eyes, and makes the very light of Heaven as its effect. In proportion therefore as they are in celestial love, they are elevated into that celestial light, which is from the Lord ; but in proportion as they are remote from celestial love, they cast themselves away from the light into infernal darkness.

2576<sup>19</sup>. The Holy itself of the Lord's Divine Human was 'the raiment' which appeared 'as the light' . . . when He was transfigured. (=the Divine truth. 4677<sup>3</sup>.)

2588<sup>2</sup>. For man has light from no other source than through rational and scientific things.

—<sup>5</sup>. A certain Divine light inflows with some . . . when the Word is being read.

—<sup>8</sup>. For truth is the light itself of Heaven.

2682<sup>2</sup>. For the light of truth from the Lord cannot inflow into the Persuasive which is from the proprium ; for this is of such a nature that it extinguishes that light. In the other life what is persuasive appears like a wintry light ; but at the approach of the light of Heaven it becomes full of darkness . . .

2699<sup>2</sup>. Those who have been in vastation . . . are (then) elevated . . . from a state of shade, which is a state of ignorance, into a state of light, which is a state of illustration and of recreation thence, thus into joy, which affects their inmosts. It is actually light into which they come, which is such that it illustrates not only the sight but also the understanding ; and how greatly they are recreated by that light may be evident from the opposite state from which they have been delivered. Des.

[A.]2701<sup>3</sup>. The sight of the eye is from the light of the world; the sight of the understanding is from the light of Heaven inflowing into those things which are of the light of the world; but the sight of faith is from the light of Heaven.

2708. With the celestial there is a light as it were visual and also perceptive of good and truth from the Lord like the light of day from the sun; whereas with the spiritual there is a light from the Lord like the light of night from the moon. Ex. 2849.

2714. 'Brightness' and 'light' (Hab.iii.4)=illumination.

2715<sup>e</sup>. As the spiritual dispute whether it is so, they cannot for a long time come to the first boundary of the light of the celestial, still less can they view anything from that light.

2741. Like the light of the sun inflowing into objects, which is received according to their form . . . 2888. 3001<sup>e</sup>. 3484<sup>e</sup>. 3646. 3743<sup>e</sup>. 8819<sup>2</sup>.

2776<sup>3</sup>. The light of Heaven is such that when it illuminates the sight of Spirits and Angels, it also illuminates the understanding at the same time . . . so that in proportion as anyone in Heaven has of external light, he has in the same proportion of internal light, that is, in the same proportion he has of understanding. Hence it is evident in what the light of Heaven differs from the light of the world . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The light of Heaven from the Lord's Divine Human can reach no others than those who live in the good of faith . . .

2813<sup>4</sup>. Here, when they ask who is the Son of Man, Jesus replies concerning the light, which is the truth; and [says] that He Himself is the light or truth in which they should believe.

2814. The Divine truth in the Lord's glorified Human is above appearances; nor can it ever come to any understanding . . . of man, and not even to that of the Angels . . . It appears in the Heavens as the light which is from the Lord.

2935<sup>2</sup>. So long as they are in such a state, the light of truth from the Lord cannot inflow.

2973<sup>3</sup>. Celestial flame, and spiritual light. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. Simulate Angels of light.

3017<sup>e</sup>. Concerning (these arcana) the Angels have clear light from the Lord; for in the light of Heaven these things are evident as in clear day; whereas in the light of the world, in which man is, scarcely anything [is evident], except something obscurely with a regenerate person; for he too is in some light of Heaven. 3086<sup>e</sup>.

3086. For all light, life, and order in the natural man are from influx from the Divine.

3094. Illustration is from light; but such as the light is, such is the illustration.

—<sup>2</sup>. The light of Heaven is from the Lord's Divine good through His Divine truth . . . and it penetrates not only to the celestial, but also to the spiritual, and illustrates all in Heaven with wisdom and intelligence.

3108. Those who are not in good and the derivative faith have no other ideas of thought than those which have been formed from the objects of the light of the world . . .

3138. There are two lights which form the intellectual things of man—the light of Heaven, and the light of the world. The light of Heaven is from the Lord . . . the light of the world is from the sun and moon . . . The internal man has his sight and his understanding from the light of Heaven, but the external man has his sight and his understanding from the light of the world. The influx of the light of Heaven into those things which are of the light of the world makes illustration, and at the same time apperception; if there is correspondence, the apperception of truth, if there is not correspondence, the apperception of falsity instead of truth. But illustration and apperception are impossible unless there is affection or love, which is spiritual heat, and which gives life to those things which are illustrated by the light; just as the light of the sun does not give life to plants, but the heat which is in the light.

—<sup>2</sup>. In the verses which immediately follow there is described a further preparation; namely, that the light of Heaven, which is the Divine light of the Lord, inflowed into those things which were of the light of the world in His natural man.

3167. The spiritual man is he who understands and is wise from those things which are of the light of Heaven, but the natural man from those things which are of the light of the world.

—<sup>2</sup>. For then the light of Heaven inflows, and illustrates those things which are in the natural man, and causes the things therein to receive light; the goods therein, the heat of light, that is, love and charity; and the truth, the rays of light, that is, faith.

3190. When truth is being elevated from the Natural into the Rational, it is then taken out of the sphere of worldly light into the sphere of heavenly light, thus as it were from the obscurity of night into the clearness of day; for the things which are of the light of the world, in which are all natural things, are relatively as in the night; whereas the things which are of the light of Heaven, in which are spiritual things, are relatively as in the day . . .

3195. (The Lord's Divine Rational as to good) in Divine light. Sig. and Ex. 3261.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Light' is many times mentioned in the Word, and by it in the internal sense is signified the truth which is from good. But in the supreme internal sense by 'light' is signified the Lord Himself, because He is good and truth itself. There also actually is light in Heaven, but infinitely brighter than the light on earth. Refs. Spirits and Angels see each other in that light . . . As to its lucidity, that light does indeed appear like the light in the world, but still it is not like it, for it is not natural, but it is spiritual, having wisdom in it, so that it is nothing else than wisdom which thus shines before their eyes; and therefore the wiser the Angels are, the brighter is the light in which they are. This light also illuminates the understanding of man, especially of a regenerate man, but it is not apperceived by the man so long as he is living in the body, on account of the light of the world which then reigns.

Evil Spirits in the other life also see each other . . . and this indeed from the light of Heaven, but it is a lumen like that from a coal fire ; for into such a lumen is turned the light of Heaven when it comes to them.

—<sup>3</sup>. As concerns the origin itself of light, it was from eternity from the Lord alone ; for the Divine good itself and the Divine truth, from which is the light, is the Lord. The Divine Human which was from eternity was that very light ; and as this light could no longer affect the human race . . . the Lord willed to put on the Human itself through birth ; for thus He could illuminate not only the rational things of man, but also his natural things . . . 4180<sup>5</sup>.

—<sup>4</sup>. That the Lord is 'the light,' that is, good and truth itself, and that thus from Him are all intelligence and wisdom, and consequently salvation. Ill.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The light' = Divine truth. 5954<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>6</sup>. From these passages it is manifestly evident that the Lord as to the Divine good and truth in the Divine Human is called 'the light.'

—<sup>8</sup>. 'The sun no more a light by day . . . ' = not those things which are of natural light, but those things which are of spiritual light, which are signified by Jehovah's being 'for the light of eternity' (Is. lx. 19, 20).

3222. Truths (there) are represented by lights, and by innumerable modifications of light. Hence it may be evident whence it is . . . that by 'lights' in the Word are signified the truths which are of faith.

3223. There are two lights by which man is illuminated—the light of the world and the light of Heaven. The light of the world is from the sun, the light of Heaven is from the Lord. The light of the world is for the natural or external man, thus for those things which are in him. Although the things in him do not appear to be of this light, still they are so ; for nothing can be apprehended by the natural man, except by means of such things as come forth and appear in the solar world, and thus unless they have somewhat of form from the light and shade there. All ideas of time, and all ideas of space . . . without which the natural man cannot think, are also of the light of the world.

— But the light of Heaven is for the spiritual or internal man. The interior mind of man, where his intellectual ideas are . . . is in this light. This is unknown to man, although he calls his understanding sight, and ascribes light to it. The reason is that so long as he is in worldly and corporeal things, he has a perception only of such things as are of the light of the world, and not of such things as are of the light of Heaven. The light of Heaven is from the Lord alone ; and the universal Heaven is in that light. This light of Heaven is immensely more perfect than the light of the world. The things which in the light of the world make one ray, in the light of Heaven make myriads. There are intelligence and wisdom in the light of Heaven. This is the light which inflows into the light of the world which is in the external or natural man, and causes him to perceive sensuously the objects of things. Unless this light inflowed man would never have any apperception ; for the things which are of the lumen of the world have life in them thence. When the external man makes one with the internal there exists a correspondence between these two lights, or between the things which are in the light of Heaven and those in the light of the world ; and then the things which come forth in the light of the world are representative of such things as are in the light of Heaven.

3224. It is wonderful that man does not yet know that his intellectual mind is in a kind of light, which is quite different from the light of the world. But such is the condition, that to those who are in the light of the world the light of Heaven is as it were darkness ; and to those who are in the light of Heaven the light of the world is as it were darkness. This comes principally from the loves, which are the heats of the light. They who are in the loves of self and of the world, thus who are only in the heat of the light of the world, are to the same extent affected solely with evils and falsities ; and these are what extinguish truths, which are of the light of Heaven. But they who are in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour, thus in spiritual heat, which is of the light of Heaven, are affected with goods and truths, which extinguish falsities ; but still the correspondence exists with these.

—<sup>2</sup>. Spirits who are solely in the things which are of the light of the world, and are thence in falsities from evils, in the other life do indeed have light from Heaven, but such a light as is fatuous, and such as flows forth from an ignited coal or torch ; but at the approach of the light of Heaven this light is at once extinguished, and becomes thick darkness. They who are in this light are in phantasies . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. For the truths and goods which are from the light of Heaven inflow into the interior mind, which with them is closed ; and therefore the light inflows around and outside of that mind, and becomes such that it is modified solely by falsities which appear to them as truths. Truths and goods cannot be acknowledged except with those in whom that interior mind has been opened, into which light from the Lord inflows . . .

3225. Hence it may now be evident . . . that correspondence is between those things which are of the light of Heaven and those which are of the light of the world . . .

3236<sup>e</sup>. And the new understanding must have its light from the new will.

3283<sup>e</sup>. The Rational is like a higher sight . . . The light of that sight is the light of truth ; but the origin of this light is of the good in the Rational.

3343. Spiritual things, which are of truth, take place by modifications of heavenly light, in which are affections . . .

3374. By the Spiritual in the genuine sense is meant the light itself of truth which is from the Lord . . . Hence it may be evident, that as this light inflows from the Lord, into both the Rational and the Natural of man, the Spiritual is predicated of both.

[A.] 3412<sup>3</sup>. With (those who have receded from charity) . . . there sometimes appears a snowy light, but this light is such as is the winter light . . . and therefore when such approach Heaven their light is turned into mere darkness . . .

3413<sup>2</sup>. For at the approach of the light of truth from the Lord those who are in doctrine alone, and not in life, are completely darkened . . .

3427<sup>4</sup>. With those who are in doctrinals alone and not in the good of life, the interiors are closed, so that the light of truth from the Lord cannot inflow, and give them to apperceive that [the truth] is so. Whereas with those who are in love to the Lord the interiors are open, so that the light of truth from the Lord can inflow . . .

3438<sup>2</sup>. Man's interiors are in the light of Heaven, and his exteriors in the light of the world. The nature of the difference between the light of Heaven and the light of the world, consequently between those things which are of the light of Heaven, and those things which are of the light of the world, may be seen above. Refs. It is such as is the difference between the light of day and the shade of night. As man is in this shade, and does not want to know that there is light in truth from the Lord, he cannot believe otherwise than that his shade is light; and also, conversely, that that light is shade. (Continued under INTERNAL SENSE.)

3485. The representations which come forth in the other life . . . are alive, because they are from the light of life. The light of life is the Divine wisdom, which is from the Lord alone. Hence all things which come forth from that light are real; not like those which are from the light of the world . . .

3493<sup>2</sup>. For the Rational has its sight from the light of Heaven, and the Natural has its sight from the light of the world . . . and when there is correspondence the things in the Natural appear to the Rational in light, because then the things which are of the light of the world are illustrated by those which are of the light of Heaven . . .

3573<sup>2</sup>. Of which he can have scarcely any idea through those things which are of the light of the world, that is, which are of the natural lumen with him; but through those things which are of the light of Heaven, that is, which are of rational light.

3579. In the other life . . . ideas are formed from the light of Heaven, in which there is intelligence.

3596. (These things) cannot be seen except in the light in which is the rational or internal man, in which light are few at this day, because few are regenerate.

3628<sup>1</sup>. Unless there were an interior light which is of life, to which corresponded the exterior light which is of the sun, sight would never come forth.

3636. It is a most universal thing that the Lord is the Sun of Heaven, and that thence is all the light in the other life; and that nothing whatever from the light of the world appears to . . . those who are in the other life; and also that to the Angels the light of the world which is from the sun is nothing else than thick darkness. . . Spiritual light appears before their eyes as light, but it has in it intelligence and wisdom, because it is from that source . . . and therefore . . . intelligence is called spiritual light, and also presents the light of man's life. From this universal correspondence are all the rest derived.

3643. Those who are in the Heavens are in a serene aura of light, like the light of early morning, of noon, and also of the approach of evening . . .

3646. Thus when spiritual light inflows into the souls of the brutes, it is received quite dissimilarly, and therefore actuates them dissimilarly . . .

3679<sup>2</sup>. The internal man is in the light of Heaven, in which light there are intelligence and wisdom from the Lord; but the external man is in the light of the world, in which there is no intelligence, and not even life; and therefore unless the internal man thought in the external, nothing could ever be thought. Ex. N. 34. 37.

—<sup>4</sup>. With him whose Natural corresponds to his Rational, communication is opened, so that the light of Heaven from the Lord can inflow through the Rational into the Natural, and illustrate it with intelligence and wisdom; hence it is that this man is rational and thinks spiritually. Whereas with him whose Natural does not correspond to his Rational, the communication is closed, and there inflows only somewhat of light round about and through chinks through the Rational into the Natural; hence this man is not rational, and does not think spiritually; for accordingly as a man has influx of the light of Heaven so does he think.

3693<sup>4</sup>. For the Angels have changes of state between the highest amount of light and less light, or between the highest amount of wisdom and less wisdom . . .

3704. In its essence the sun is nothing but fire, and the light which thence appears is not in the sun, but from the sun. 3969<sup>16</sup>. 5704<sup>2</sup>. 10196<sup>3</sup>.

3723. 'Morning' = the advent of heavenly light; thus, here, elevation from obscurity into light, and consequently a state of illustration.

3769<sup>3</sup>. The loves of self and of the world have self as the end, which end kindles natural lumen, but extinguishes heavenly light; so that they see acutely the things which are of self and the world, and not at all the things which are of the Lord and His Kingdom.

3798<sup>e</sup>. In everyone's love there is the light of his life; for love is like a flame from which is light. Such, therefore, as is the love or flame, such is its light of truth . . .

3833<sup>2</sup>. Hence the light of truth from good increases immensely, and becomes as it were a continuous lucidity; for the man is then in the light of Heaven which is from the Lord.

3862. That all celestial and spiritual light, or faith, appears in the external form in Heaven as the light which is from the Sun . . . and that this light has intelligence in it, and this because it is from the Lord, who is the Sun there. Refs. From this it is evident . . . that all truth is from the light thence; and it is also evident from this . . . that all thoughts which are of faith or truth, are variegations of that celestial and spiritual light which is from the Lord, and that thence is intelligence. (Continued under HEAT.)

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence they received answers by lights (from the urim and thummim). —<sup>3</sup>. —<sup>6</sup>, Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. For all the light of Heaven is varied according to the states of a thing . . .

3863<sup>7</sup>. 'To see a great light' (Is.ix.2)=to receive and believe the truths which are of faith. Heavenly light is said to shine forth upon those who are in faith; for the light which is in Heaven is Divine truth from Divine good.

—<sup>15</sup>. That 'to see'=to have faith in the Lord, is evident from (the fact) that the light of Heaven, being from the Lord, is attended with intelligence and wisdom, consequently with faith in Him . . . and therefore to see from that light, as the Angels do, cannot signify anything else than faith in the Lord; for the Lord Himself is within that light, because it proceeds from Him. It is moreover this light which shines in the conscience of those who have faith in Him, although the man is unaware of this so long as he lives in the body, for then the light of the world obscures that light.

3957<sup>2</sup>. When a man dies he passes relatively from shade into light . . .

3969<sup>3</sup>. These arcana cannot be seen except by those who are in the charity of faith; for as to their interiors these are in the light of Heaven, in which light there is also intelligence. They cannot be seen by those who are in the light of the world, for in this light there is no intelligence, except in so far as it has in it the light of Heaven. 3993<sup>7</sup>.

4104<sup>3</sup>. When a man acknowledges (spiritual things) as primary, and (natural things) as secondary, Truths and their affections are elevated with him; for in the same proportion he is translated into the light of Heaven, in which are intelligence and wisdom; and in the same proportion the things of the light of the world are to him images and as it were mirrors in which he sees them. . . (Otherwise) Truths and their affections are not elevated, but are either suffocated, rejected, or perverted; for he is in natural light into which there does not inflow anything of heavenly light.

4156<sup>3</sup>. With him who clearly sees that good is good, and that truth is truth, and that evil is evil, and falsity falsity, there inflows light from Heaven, and illustrates his Intellectual, and causes the reasons which he sees in the understanding to be so many rays of that light. The same light also illuminates scientifics, so that they confirm; and besides disposes them into order and into the heavenly form. But they who are against good and truth—as are all who are in a life of evil—do not admit that heavenly light, but are delighted solely with their own fatuous lumen.

4214<sup>3</sup>. The light of Heaven which inflows with them is at once turned into fatuous lumen . . .

4302<sup>2</sup>. For those who are in heavenly perception are in the light of Heaven . . . in which light are intelligence and wisdom. But those who are in natural light are not in any intelligence and wisdom, except in so far as the light of Heaven inflows into this light, and so disposes it that the things of Heaven appear as it were in a mirror . . . in the things of natural light. For without the influx of the light of Heaven, natural light presents to view nothing of spiritual truth.

4319<sup>6</sup>. For heavenly light is received by those (who know and believe); but it is not received by those who only know . . . and consequently neither are the intelligence and wisdom which are in that light; and therefore when they approach the angelic Societies, that is, heavenly light, it is turned with them into darkness.

4335<sup>2</sup>. 'The light of a lamp shall not shine in thee' (Rev.xviii.23)=no intelligence of truth.

4379. These arcana are manifest solely to those who are in the light of Heaven; and as to some rude image to those who are in the light of the world when the light of Heaven is admitted into this light.

4387<sup>6</sup>. The thought of the Angels is from the light of Heaven . . .

4402<sup>3</sup>. The spiritual man is so called from the fact that the light of Heaven . . . inflows into the things with him which are of the light of the world; and causes the things of the light of Heaven to be represented in those which are of the light of the world, and thereby to correspond. For, regarded in itself, the Spiritual is the Divine light itself which is from the Lord . . . But, with the spiritual man, that light falls into the things of faith with him . . . whereas with the celestial man it falls into the good of love.

4403. Continuation concerning correspondence with . . . with the eye, and with light. Gen.art.

4405. For there are two lights, one which is of the world from the sun, and the other which is of Heaven from the Lord. In the light of the world there is nothing of intelligence, whereas there is intelligence in the light of Heaven. Hence in proportion as the things of the light of the world with a man are illuminated by the things of the light of Heaven—thus in proportion as they correspond—the man is intelligent and wise.

4406<sup>6</sup>. For man's spirit is in the light of Heaven, and his body in the light of the world.

4408<sup>2</sup>. It is clearly evident that there is an interior light, in which there is life, consequently intelligence and wisdom, which illuminates the interior sight, and which meets the things which have entered through the external sight; and also that the interior light operates according to the arrangement of the things which are there from the light of the world.

4411. When the light which proceeds from the Lord inflows into the Third Heaven, it is received there as the good which is called charity; and when it inflows into the Second Heaven, mediately and immediately, it is received as the truth which is from charity; whereas when this truth inflows into the First Heaven, mediately and immediately, it is received substantially, and appears there as a paradise, and elsewhere as a City containing palaces . . .

4413. That the light of Heaven has in it intelligence and wisdom; and that it is the intelligence of truth and the wisdom of good from the Lord which appears before the eyes of the Angels as light, has been given me to know by living experience. I have been elevated into the light, which sparkled like the light radiating from diamonds; and while I was kept in it I seemed to myself to be withdrawn from corporeal ideas, and to be led into spiritual ideas . . . The ideas of thought which had originated from the light of the world then appeared to be removed from me, and as it were not to belong to me, although they were obscurely present. Hence it was given to know that in proportion as a man comes into that light he comes into intelligence. Hence it is that the more intelligent the Angels are, in so much the greater and brighter light they are.

[A.] 4414. The differences of light in Heaven are as many as are the angelic Societies . . . nay, as many as are the Angels in each Society. The reason is that Heaven is ordained according to all the differences of good and truth, thus according to all states of intelligence and wisdom, consequently according to the receptions of the light which is from the Lord. Hence it is that nowhere in the universal Heaven is there an exactly similar light; but it differs according to the temperings of it with what is flaming and with what is bright white, and according to the degrees of its intensity; for intelligence and wisdom are nothing else than an eminent modification of the heavenly light which is from the Lord.

4415. Novitiate Spirits . . . are very greatly surprised that there is light in the other life, for they bring with them the notion that light is from no other source than the sun and material flame; and still less do they know that there is a light which illuminates the understanding . . . and still less that that light gives the faculty of thinking; and, by influx into the forms which are from the light of the world, presents all things which are of the understanding. If they have been good, and in order that they may be instructed, they are elevated to the heavenly Societies, from Society into Society, in order that by living experience they may perceive that there is light in the other life, and that it is more intense than is ever possible in the world; and that they may at the same time apperceive that in proportion as they are in the light there, they are in intelligence. Some, who had been taken up into the spheres of celestial light, spoke to me thence, and confessed that they had never believed such a thing, and that the light of the world is relatively darkness. They also looked thence through my eyes into the light of the world, and perceived it as no other than a dark mist; and with pity said that in such is man. Hence it may be evident why the Angels of Heaven are called in the Word 'Angels of light,' and why the Lord is said to be 'the light,' and thence 'the life of men.' 4531.

—<sup>2</sup>. But those who are in evil and the derivative falsities appear in a lumen like that of a coal fire. At the light of Heaven this lumen becomes altogether dusky; but the lumens themselves from which they see are varied according to the falsity and evil in which they are. Hence it has been evident why those who are leading a life of evil can never, from a sincere heart, have faith in Divine truths; for they are in that smoky lumen, which becomes full of darkness to them when heavenly light falls upon it, so that they see neither with their eyes nor with their minds; and besides they then fall into agonies, and some as it were into swoons. Hence it is that the evil can never receive truth, but only the good.

—<sup>3</sup>. The man who is leading a life of evil cannot believe that he is in such a lumen, because he does not see the lumen in which his spirit is, but only the lumen in which is his eye-sight, and thence his natural mind. But if he saw the lumen of his spirit, and were to experience what it would become if the light of truth and good from Heaven were to inflow into it, he would know manifestly how far he was from receiving the things which are of light, that is, which are of faith, and still further from imbuing those which are of charity; thus how far distant he was from Heaven. 4417<sup>2</sup>.

4419<sup>3</sup>. The quality of intelligence from the proprium, and that of intelligence from the Divine, was shown to him by means of lights; for in the other life such things are presented to view in a wonderful way by means of variegations of light. Des.

4423<sup>2</sup>. For the light of Heaven . . . cannot penetrate into that mist. This is the state of a vastated Church.

4430. 'Shechem' = the first of light; consequently interior truth; for this is the first of light, (which the descendants of Jacob extinguished with themselves.) Tr.

4523. Continuation concerning the correspondence of the eye and of light with the Grand Man. Gen.art.

4526. The reason man can acquire wisdom through the things which appear to him in the light of the world, is that a higher light—that is, the light of Heaven—inflows into the objects which are of the light of the world, and causes them to appear representatively and correspondently. For the light which is above the light of the world is that which proceeds from the Lord . . . The intelligence and wisdom which are from the Lord appear there as light. It is this light—which makes the understanding or internal sight of man—which when it inflows through the understanding into the objects which are from the light of the world, causes them to appear representatively and correspondently, and thus intellectually.

4527. I have spoken with some a few days after their decease, and as they were recently arrived they were in some light there which to them differed but little from the light of the world; and as the light had appeared such to them they were in doubt as to whether they had light from any other source. They were therefore taken up into the first of Heaven, where the light was still brighter, and they said to me from there that they had never seen such light; and this took place after the sun had set. (Compare 7174. H.126.)

4598<sup>2</sup>. They who are in exterior things only are relatively in a mist . . . whereas those who are in interior things are in light, and consequently in wisdom, for the light there is wisdom. And, wonderful to say, those who are in the mist cannot see that those who are in the light are in light; whereas those who are in the light can see that those who are in the mist are in mist.

4627. A beautiful yellowish light seen. Further des.

4742. The light of Heaven . . . is varied with everyone according to reception. All the thought of the Angels is effected by means of the variegation of this light, as also is the thought of man, although man is not aware of this, because with him this light falls into material images or ideas which are in his external man from the light of the world. Hence that light is so obscured with him, that he scarcely knows that his intellectual light and sight are thence; whereas, in the other life, when the sight of the eye is no longer in the light of the world, but in the light of Heaven, the fact manifests itself that his thought is thence.

4760<sup>4</sup>. The learned . . . consult scientifics . . . from what is negative, and thereby destroy with themselves the [mental] view from what is higher or interior, (and then) they no longer see anything from the light of Heaven, but from the light of the world, for scientifics are in the light of the world, and if they are not illuminated by the light of Heaven, they induce darkness.

4805. They believe that they alone are in light.

4809. 'When the Son of Man shall come in His glory' = when Divine truth will appear in its own light, which takes place with every man when he dies, for he then comes into the light of Heaven, in which he is able to perceive what is truth and good, and thus of what quality he is.

4835<sup>0</sup>. This is like one who is in darkness, and from it sees the things which are of light; or, what is the same, like one who is in the light of the world, and from it sees the things which are of the light of Heaven. For, relatively to the light of Heaven, the light of the world is like darkness. The things of the light of Heaven do not appear as they are in themselves, in darkness, that is, in the light of the world; but they appear as in a representative image, as the mind of a man appears in his face. And therefore when the light of Heaven appears in its clearness, the darkness or representative images are dissipated. This is effected by the Advent of the Lord.

4881. 'To arise' = elevation . . . from a state of ignorance into a state of intelligence; for thus is man elevated from a state of the light of the world into a state of the light of Heaven. 4884. 4903.

4930<sup>0</sup>. Good is that which first rises and gives light; by which light are illustrated the things which are in the natural man, so that they are seen, acknowledged, and finally believed. Unless there were light from good within man, he could never see truths with acknowledgment and faith . . .

4967<sup>2</sup>. With a regenerate man scientifics are illustrated by the light of Heaven; but with a non-regenerate man . . . they are illustrated by the light which inflows through Spirits who are in falsity and evil; which light is indeed from the light of Heaven, but with them it is made opaque . . .

5008<sup>0</sup>. It is impossible from natural light to see the things which are of spiritual light. This is contrary to order. But it is according to order that the things which are in natural light should be seen from spiritual light.

5097. All times . . . = various states according to the variations of the light of Heaven. The variations of the light of Heaven are not variations like those of the light in the world . . . but they are variations of intelligence and love. For the light of Heaven is nothing else than Divine intelligence from the Lord, which also shines before the eyes . . . and it is this light which makes the Intellectual of man.

5114<sup>2</sup>. There exist in man derivations from the Intellectual, which is in the light of Heaven, to the Sensuous which is in the light of the world; (otherwise) the Sensuous could not have any life such as is human. The Sensuous has not life from the fact that it sees from the light of the world, for the light of the world has no life in it; but from the fact that it sees from the light of Heaven, for this light has life in it. When this light falls with a man upon those things which are of the light of the world, it vivifies them, and causes the man to see the objects intellectually, thus as a man. Hence man has intelligence and wisdom from the scientifics which have been born from the things he has seen and heard in the world; and from that intelligence and wisdom he has civil, moral, and spiritual life.

5212. See KNOW-scire, here.

5219. For the light of Heaven is Divine truth from the Lord; hence the truths with Angels, Spirits, and men are subsidiary lights; but they have their light from the Divine truth through the good in the truths. For unless truths are from good . . . they cannot receive any light from the Divine . . . for good is like fire, and truths are like the lights thence. Truths without good do indeed also shine in the other life, but they shine with a wintry light; which light at the light of Heaven becomes thick darkness.

5319. The brightness and resplendence of Heaven are from the light which is from the Lord; and the light which is from the Lord is the Divine truth itself. Refs. and III.

5328<sup>0</sup>. By the Spiritual is meant that in the Natural which is of the light of Heaven; and by the Natural is meant that in the Natural which is of the light of the world. 5344.

5387<sup>0</sup>. For in the other life everyone appears in the light of Heaven according to correspondence.

5400<sup>2</sup>. The light of Heaven, by means of which there is sight there, is Divine truth from the Lord. This appears before the eyes of the Angels as light a thousand times brighter than the noon-day light in the world; and as this light has life in it, therefore at the same time that it illuminates the eye-sight of the Angels, it also illuminates the sight of their understanding, and causes the apperception of truth, according to the quantity and the quality of the good in which they are.

[A.] 5411<sup>2</sup>. For the light of Heaven is intelligence itself from the Divine; hence comes the perceptivity in each thing which is represented by means of that light. This is impossible in the light of the world, for this light has nothing of intelligence in it; but understanding takes place by means of it through the influx of the light of Heaven into it, together with the simultaneous influx of the perceptivity which is in the light of Heaven. Hence it is that a man is in the light of Heaven in the proportion that he is in intelligence, and that he is in intelligence in proportion as he is in the truths of faith, and that he is in the truths of faith in proportion as he is in the good of love; consequently, that a man is in the light of Heaven in proportion as he is in the good of love.

5427. From the light in which is the Celestial of the Spiritual, thus from the heavenly light of the Spiritual . . . which is truth from the Divine, appear each and all the truths which are below, or which are in the Natural; but not contrariwise if there is no medium, and still less if there is not correspondence, and through correspondence, conjunction; which is manifestly evident from the fact that the Angels who are in the Heavens—thus who are in the light of Heaven—can see each and all things which are taking place in the World of Spirits . . . in the Lower Earth, and in the Hells; but the reverse is not the case. (Moreover) the Angels of a higher Heaven can see all things which are taking place below them in a lower Heaven; but not conversely, unless there is a medium. For there are mediate Spirits through whom communication is effected backwards and forwards. Therefore those below who have no medium . . . see nothing whatever when they look into the light of Heaven . . . Tr.

—<sup>3</sup>. But when there is correspondence the exterior man sees through the medium what is being done in the interior man; for the light belonging to the interior man inflows through the medium into the light which belongs to the exterior man—that is, heavenly light into natural light—and illuminates this light; from which illumination that which comes forth with the interior man appears, whence comes intelligence and wisdom to the exterior or natural man . . .

5428. That truth from the Divine did not appear in natural light not as yet illuminated by heavenly light. Sig. and Ex.

— . Take for example the glory of Heaven. They who think about the glory of Heaven from natural light not illuminated by the light of Heaven—because they are without a medium, and still more if there is not correspondence—can have no other idea about that glory than as of the glory of the world . . . (Other examples given.)

5477. That from the natural light in which are those truths it is not believed that all things appear from spiritual light. Sig. and Ex.

— . 'Joseph' = the Celestial of the Spiritual, which is in spiritual light. That from this light the truths in the Natural appear, is signified by 'Joseph heard.'

—<sup>2</sup>. With natural light, and spiritual light, the case is this. Natural light is from the sun of the world, and spiritual light is from the Sun of heaven which is the Lord. All the truths of faith which man imbibes from infancy are apprehended by means of such objects and the derivative ideas as are from the light of the world . . . A man who has not been regenerated is utterly unaware that spiritual light exists; and even that in Heaven there exists a light which has nothing in common with the light of the world; still less does he know that it is that light which illustrates the ideas and objects which are from the light of the world, and causes man to be able to think, conclude, and reflect. The reason spiritual light is able to do this, is that that light is the wisdom itself which proceeds from the Lord: this wisdom is presented as light before the sight of the Angels in Heaven. From this light appear each and all things which are below, or which are with man from natural light; but not conversely, unless the man has been regenerated. In that case the things of Heaven . . . appear in the Natural from illustration by spiritual light as in a representative mirror. Hence it is evident that the Lord, who is the Light itself, sees each and all things which are in the thought and will of man; nay, which are in universal nature . . .

5563<sup>o</sup>. (Such) have their skulls . . . as of ebony, by which the rays of light—which are truths—are wholly reflected.

5585<sup>4</sup>. 'To lift up the light of faces' (Ps. iv. 6) = to give good from mercy.

5637<sup>o</sup>. When scientifics are illustrated by the light of Heaven. Ex.

5680<sup>o</sup>. In the Spiritual World all things live from the light which is from the Lord; for in that light there are intelligence and wisdom.

5704<sup>e</sup>. 'Light' = truth. Refs.

5865<sup>e</sup>. When Spirits look into the things which are of the light of the world, the things which are there appear like mere darkness.

5965<sup>2</sup>. That is called the Spiritual which is in the light of Heaven; for that which is in that light has in it the affection of good and the perception of truth; these are in that light because that light is from the Lord; and therefore those who are in spiritual good and truth are in the internal of the Church . . . But that is called the Natural which is in the light of the world; and that which is in this light has not the affection of good and the perception of truth in it, but outside of it; for the light of Heaven inflows and makes an illumination round about, thus outside and not within, and causes it to be known that good is good and truth truth, because it is so said, and not that it is perceived to be so; and therefore those who are in natural good are in the external of the Church . . .

6000<sup>2</sup>. Hence the light of truth . . . is absorbed and suffocated.

6032. Spiritual light, and spiritual heat. Fully ex. (See HEAT, here.)

—<sup>2</sup>. As to spiritual light, this is circumstanced in the understanding of man as natural light is in his external sight; namely, that in order for the eye to see there must be a light which illuminates, and then the eye sees in the light all things which are outside of itself round about. Just so the intellectual mind, which is the internal eye of man. In order for this eye to see it is necessary for the light of Heaven . . . to illuminate; and when this eye has been illuminated by this light, it then sees the things which are outside of it round about. But the objects which it sees are spiritual, namely, scientifics and truths. But when this light does not illuminate, the intellectual mind . . . is like the eye of the body in the dark, and it sees nothing; that is, from scientifics it sees nothing of truth, and from truths nothing of good. The light which illuminates the intellectual mind is truly light, and is such light as a thousand times surpasses the noon-day light of the world. From this light all the Angels in the Heavens see the things which are outside of them round about; and also from the same light they see and perceive the truths which are of faith, and the quality of them.

6055. Thus the internal man is in the light of Heaven, and the external man is in the light of the world. Ex. 9755, Ex.

6125<sup>2</sup>. For the Intellectual translates the things of the light of Heaven into those which are of the lumen of nature . . .

6309<sup>e</sup>. For the things of the light of Heaven become darkness when they fall into those which are of the lumen of the world; because, in themselves, they are contrary. But in order that they may not be contrary, man is regenerated . . .

6310. According to the degrees in man there are also lights . . .

6313<sup>e</sup>. The three Heavens are no otherwise distinct than according to elevations towards the interiors, thus also according to the degrees of light. Ex.

6335<sup>2</sup>. The lights in Heaven are varied according to the goods and the derivative truths; and the states of intelligence and wisdom are varied according to the lights . . .

6359<sup>e</sup>. Thus when the light of Heaven . . . falls upon the hardness of falsity from evil, it is reflected; whereas when the light of Heaven . . . falls upon the softness of truth from good it is received.

6388<sup>e</sup>. They are like objects which do not remit the rays of light, but absorb them . . .

6400. Truth is in no light unless good is with it or in it; for good is like a flame which gives off light from itself . . .

6608. Intellectual light has been given me, has been taken away, diminished, and moderated, in the things being thought, spoken, and written, and this frequently; and it has been given me to perceive the varieties and differences. The light itself has been perceived as an illumination which illustrated the substances of the interior sight, as the lumen of the sun does the organs of sight . . .

6751<sup>e</sup>. These planes are what are illustrated by the light of Heaven.

6775<sup>e</sup>. For spiritual light cannot there inflow into singulars . . .

6829. But when man emerges from temptation, then appears light with its spiritual heat; that is, truth with its good.

—<sup>e</sup>. When light from the Divine appears, falsities and evils are removed . . .

6832<sup>2</sup>. In the First Heaven the Lord does not appear either as a Sun or as a Moon, but only as light; which light far surpasses the light of the world.

6865<sup>2</sup>. For the light of the world has the predominance with them, which light appears clear so long as the light of Heaven does not inflow into it . . .

6907<sup>3</sup>. They who are in evil of life and thence in falsity are in the light of the world; for there is a light by which intellectual objects are seen. With those who are in falsity from evil this light is sparkling, and the more they are in falsity from evil the more it sparkles. The glory of the world which is from the love of self kindles it, and causes it to sparkle. This being the case, truths appear therein exactly like falsities, and falsities exactly like truths. The reason is, that heavenly light cannot inflow into the beam of this light; but with such a light it becomes thick darkness. Hence it is that such are in a strong persuasive in favour of falsities against truths, because so they see them in that light. Whereas with those who are in truths from good the light of the world does not sparkle, but is obscure. With these the light of Heaven is bright; and (therefore) truths appear in it as truths, and falsities as falsities; for when this light falls upon falsities . . . it not only obscures but completely extinguishes them. This light . . . becomes successively more and more bright with them, inasmuch that at last the light of the world cannot be compared to it.

7130<sup>e</sup>. The things which are of the natural mind are for the most part in the light of the world, which light is called the lumen of nature; but the things which are of the rational mind are in the light of Heaven, which light is spiritual light.

7486. (Artificial light in Mars.)

7625. In the Word . . . the truth conjoined with good which proceeds from the Lord is compared to 'light;' and the truth of faith is also therein called 'light'. . . for love is the fire of life, and faith is the light of life.

7711<sup>2</sup>. 'To await light' (Is. lix. 9) = to await truth.

7719. 'All the sons of Israel had light in their dwellings' (Ex. x. 23) = that those of the Spiritual Church had illustration everywhere in their minds. . . Light = illustration; for the light which is from the Lord illuminates the understanding; for in this light there are intelligence and wisdom. Refs.

—<sup>e</sup>. Moreover there is light in the dwellings of the Angels according to the intelligence and wisdom of their minds; and in proportion as they have light, in the same proportion those who are in the opposite—who are those who have infested them—have thick darkness.

[A.] 7870°. (Thus) in the other life everyone has light according to his faculty of understanding, as furnished with truths from good, or with falsities from evil.

7950°. All spiritual light comes through good from the Lord, thus through charity; for the good of charity is like a flame from which is light . . .

8197°. The presence of the Lord—which is here signified by 'the pillar'—is heavenly light itself. Heaven has its light thence, which light is a thousand times brighter than the noon-day light of the world. But the same light becomes thick darkness with the evil, even if they are in the light itself. . . The reason is that the truth Divine proceeding from the Lord appears before the eyes of the Angels as light; but to those who are in falsities from evil it cannot appear as light, but as thick darkness; because falsity is opposite to truth, and extinguishes it. Tr.

8328°. See HEAT, here. 8530. 8644.

8512°. Whereas when a man is led by means of good, he sees in light.

8604°. By the truth which is from Himself the Lord gives life to man; for the light which is from the Lord is Divine truth, and is 'life.' (Continued under LIFE.)

8694°. For through Heaven from the Lord there is a light which circumfuses and illustrates the understanding. . . The things which then appear in this light are truths; for this light itself is the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord.

8707. The light of intelligence and the derivative life. Sig. and Ex. 8708.

—, From the immediate influx of truth from the Lord there is not the apperception of truth, but the light which gives the faculty of understanding. It is with this light as it is with the light of the eye-sight. For the eye to see objects—res objectas—there must be a light giving a general illumination. In this light the eye sees and discriminates objects. . . The case is similar with the sight of the internal eye, which is the understanding. For this to see there must also be a light giving a general illumination, in which appear the objects which are the things of intelligence and wisdom. This light is from the Divine truth which proceeds immediately from the Lord. The things presented as objects in this light appear beautiful and delightful according to their agreement with the good in each person.

8750°. There are in general two states of life, namely, a state of thought . . . and a state of affection . . . The (former) state is that which is illustrated by the light from the Sun of Heaven . . .

8764. That thus through truths they have been elevated to heavenly light. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For the Intellectual sees from the light of Heaven, (which) is spiritual truth; that is, the truth of faith.

8871. 'The things in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath'=the things which are in spiritual light, and which are in natural light.

8872. 'And in the waters under the earth'= . . . That these are what are in the corporeal Sensuous, is evident from the successive degrees of light which belong to the Intellectual in man. In the first degree are those which are in spiritual light . . . in the second are those which are in natural light; and in the third are those which are in corporeal sensuous light.

8878. For those who are in evil are not in heavenly light, but are in natural light, and at last are in sensuous light which is from the Corporeal. From this lumen these persons cannot possibly see the Human of the Lord otherwise than as human . . . —<sup>e</sup>.

8977<sup>4</sup>. For those who are in the good of charity are in the light of Heaven, and from it see the things which are in the light of the world. Whereas those who are in the truth of faith, and not in the good of charity, are in the light of the world, from which they cannot see the things which are in the light of Heaven; for the light of Heaven is above—that is, within—whereas the light of the world is below or without; and lower things can be seen from higher, but not conversely. Heaven can inflow into the world, but not the world into Heaven.

9103°. The Natural sees things in the light of the world, which light is called natural lumen. Man acquires this lumen by means of the objects which enter through the sight and the hearing. . . When light from Heaven inflows into these, the man begins to see them spiritually, and to discriminate between things useful and not useful; thus he begins to have a clear view of truth. . . This clear view increases according to the influx of the light of Heaven. . . for the light of Heaven inflows through the internal man into the external. Hence the man has perception, but not spiritual perception; for this perception does not come forth from natural truths, but from spiritual truths. Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. For the things in the external man live from the light of Heaven, because this light is alive. . . But they do not live from natural light. . . In order that the things in this light may live, there must be an influx of the living light. . .

9141°. (The fire of life and the light of life. Ex. See LIFE, here.)

9144. So long as the fires of evil are kept shut up in the will, the understanding is in light. . . But when those fires pour forth their light into the understanding, the previous light is dissipated, and the man is obscured as to the apperception of good and truth. . .

9176°. For the Angels are in the light of Heaven, (which) has infinite things in it, because (it) is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord. 9212<sup>4</sup>.

9227°. The things stored up in the memory, and which appear in the memory before the understanding, appear in the light of the world, which is called natural lumen; whereas the things which enter the will. . . are in the light of Heaven, (which) is the truth of good from the Lord. When these things go forth thence into act, they return into the light of the world, but then appear in that light under quite a different form. . .

9245. 'To come to the light' (John iii.21)=to faith in the Lord, thus to faith from the Lord.

9405°. The elevation of man into the light of Heaven. 9407<sup>15</sup>.

9435. (A Spirit the upper part of whose face only was seen to be in the light of Heaven.)

9467<sup>2</sup>. For heavenly light is real, and in itself is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord's Divine good. 9498°. 10703.

9468<sup>3</sup>. (This) Divine truth appears as a flaming light in the Inmost Heaven, and as a bright white light in the Middle Heaven.

9470<sup>6</sup>. Spiritual truth . . . and celestial truth . . . differ as do the light from the sun, and the light from the stars.

9548<sup>5</sup>. 'Light' = faith, thus also intelligence and wisdom.

9568<sup>3</sup>. The Scientific is truth appearing in the light of the world; whereas the truth of faith, in so far as it is of faith with a man, is truth appearing in the light of Heaven.

9570. ('The seven lamps') = the light of the Spiritual Heaven. Ex.

— The light of the Spiritual Heaven is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord, and the derivative faith, and intelligence of truth and wisdom of good. How the case is with the light of the Spiritual Heaven shall be told in a few words. In the Lord's Celestial Kingdom,—which is the inmost or Third Heaven—there is a light which immensely transcends the light which is in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, which is the Middle or Second Heaven. The light of the Celestial Kingdom . . . does not appear as light, but as flame, because in that Heaven there reigns the good of love . . . Whereas in the Spiritual Kingdom . . . there is a light which immensely transcends the light of the world, but still it appears bright white, because in that Heaven there reigns the truth of faith from the good of charity. Hence, too, by 'light' in the Word is signified the truth which is from good; and, in the supreme sense, the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord's Divine good. 9865<sup>2</sup>.

9571°. The Lord's Divine Human is the source of light in Heaven; for the Divine cannot be seen except under the human form. Sig.

9577<sup>2</sup>. The light of Heaven is for man's spirit, and the light of the world is for his body; and . . . the things which are in the light of Heaven are in thick darkness when man sees from the light of the world; and, on the other hand, the things which are in the light of the world are in thick darkness when man sees from the light of Heaven. Hence it is that when the light of the world is taken away from the sight of the bodily eye, the eyes of the spirit are opened, and the things which are in the light of Heaven are seen.

9642. For in the Heavens light—and with light intelligence and wisdom—increases towards interior things.

9653°. All the Scientific, being of the natural man, is in the light of the world.

9684. Those in the Celestial Kingdom have light from the Lord as a Sun; and those in the Spiritual Kingdom have light from the Lord as a Moon. Ex.

9695. Therefore (the Spirits of the First Earth) have light from a certain flame . . . because they do not adore the Lord; and therefore they have no light from the Sun of Heaven, but from an angelic Society; for an angelic Society, when permitted by the Lord, is able to present such a light to Spirits who are in a lower sphere.

9723. For the things which a man loves he sees in the light; but the things which he does not love he sees in the shade.

9783. Light, received, is faith.

9797. In proportion as the internal man has been opened towards Heaven, thus to the Lord, in the same proportion it is in the light of Heaven, thus in the same proportion it is in the understanding of truth. The light of Heaven is the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord; and to be illustrated by this light is to understand truth.

9801. But in proportion as the internal man has been closed towards Heaven . . . it is in cold and thick darkness as to the things of Heaven; and then in proportion as the external man has been opened towards the world, he thinks falsity and wills evil . . . for the light of the world with him extinguishes the light of Heaven.

9814. The Divine Spiritual is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord's Divine good. In Heaven this appears as light; and also is the light which illuminates the Angels' sight, both external and internal. The modification of this light according to the subjects which receive it, which are Angels, presents various phenomena to view, as clouds, rainbows, colours . . . and also shining garments around the Angels.

9857°. 'For a light of the peoples' (Is. li. 4) = for illustration.

9905<sup>2</sup>. That the light of Heaven is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord's Divine good. Refs.

10019°. 'Light of faces' = Divine truth from Divine good.

10135°. 'Light' = the Lord as to Divine truth. 10574<sup>10</sup>.

10156. The knowledge of the natural, that is, of the unregenerate man, is in the light of the world; whereas the intelligence of the spiritual, that is, of the regenerate man, is in the light of Heaven. And so long as a man is in the light of the world he is in Hell; whereas when he is at the same time in the light of Heaven he is in Heaven . . .

10551<sup>3</sup>. In proportion as they think from self and the world, in the same proportion they think from natural light separated from heavenly light; (which) is mere thick darkness in spiritual things.

10574<sup>5</sup>. 'Light' = the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord. Ill.

10605<sup>2</sup>. The light (in Heaven) does not undergo diurnal changes like the light in the world; but is varied according to the states of love and faith with the Angels . . . Ex.

10694<sup>2</sup>. These loves are opposites, and therefore so also are the lights. Ex.

H. 43. The Angels who are in the middle (of a Society) are in the greatest light; and those at the circumferences are in less and less light. S.107.

[H.] 118<sup>2</sup>. The good of love corresponds to fire . . . and the good of faith corresponds to light; and, in the spiritual sense, light is faith.

126. On light and heat in Heaven. Gen.art.

— That there is light in the Heavens cannot be apprehended by those who think solely from nature; when yet the light in the Heavens is so great as to exceed by many degrees the noon-day light in the world. I have often seen it, even in the times of evening and night. At first I had wondered when I heard the Angels saying that relatively to the light of Heaven it is scarcely anything but shade; but now that I have seen it I can bear witness to it. The brightness and brilliancy of it are such that they cannot be described. The things which have been seen by me in the Heavens were seen in that light; thus more clearly and distinctly than things in the world.

127. The light of Heaven is not natural, like the light of the world, but is spiritual; for it is from the Lord as a Sun, which Sun is Divine love. (Continued under HEAT.)

128. The reason Divine truth is light to the Angels, is that the Angels are spiritual, and not natural. The spiritual see from their own Sun, and the natural from theirs; and the Divine truth is that from which the Angels have understanding; and the understanding is their internal sight, which inflows into their external sight and produces it. Hence the things which appear in Heaven from the Lord as a Sun appear in light. As this is the origin of light in Heaven, the light is varied there according to the reception of Divine truth from the Lord; or, what is the same thing, according to the intelligence and wisdom in which the Angels are. And therefore the light is different in the Celestial Kingdom from what it is in the Spiritual Kingdom; and it is different in every Society. The light in the Celestial Kingdom appears flaming, because the Angels who are there receive light from the Lord as a Sun; whereas the light in the Spiritual Kingdom is bright white, because the Angels who are there receive light from the Lord as a Moon. Moreover, the light in one Society is not like what it is in another; and in each Society also it differs; those who are in the middle being in greater light, and those around being in less. In a word, in the same degree in which the Angels are receptions of Divine truth, that is to say, in the same degree in which they are in intelligence and wisdom from the Lord, in the same degree they have light. Hence the Angels of Heaven are called 'Angels of light.' W.253<sup>2</sup>. 380.

129. As the Lord in the Heavens is the Divine truth, and the Divine truth there is light, therefore in the Word the Lord is called 'the Light.' III.

130. That the light in the Heavens is spiritual, and that that light is the Divine truth, may also be concluded from the fact that man also has spiritual light, and that he has illustration from that light in proportion as he is in intelligence and wisdom from Divine truth. The spiritual light of man is the light of his understanding, the objects of which are truths, which he disposes analytically into orders, forms into reasons, and from them concludes things in a series. The natural man does not know that it is real light from which the understanding sees such things, because he does not see it with his eyes, nor apperceive it in his thought; but still many know it, and also distinguish it from the natural light in which are those who think naturally and not spiritually . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That it is true light which illustrates the mind, quite distinct from the light which is called natural lumen, has frequently been given me to perceive, and also to see. I have been elevated into that light interiorly, through the degrees; and, as I was elevated, my understanding was illustrated, so that at last I perceived . . . such things as I could not even comprehend in thought from natural lumen. I have sometimes been indignant that they were not comprehended, when yet in heavenly light they were clearly and perspicuously perceived.

—<sup>3</sup>. As there is a light for the understanding, the like is said of it that is said of the eye; as that it sees and is in the light, when it perceives . . .

131. As the light of Heaven is the Divine truth, that light is also Divine wisdom and intelligence; whence the same is meant by being elevated into the light of Heaven, as by being elevated into intelligence and wisdom, and by being illustrated; and therefore the light with the Angels is exactly in the same degree as is their intelligence and wisdom. As the light of Heaven is Divine wisdom, all are Known in the light of Heaven in respect to their quality . . . Those who are below Heaven, and do not will what is good, are exceedingly afraid of being looked at in the light of Heaven; and, wonderful to say, those who are in Hell among themselves appear as men, but in the light of Heaven as monsters . . . exactly in the form of their evil. (553.) . . . Hence it is evident that in the light of Heaven all things are made manifest; (the reason of which is) that the light of Heaven is the Divine truth.

132<sup>2</sup>. The cold light (of truths without good) disappears when the light of Heaven falls upon it. Ex.

137<sup>6</sup>. (As there is such great power in Divine truth) 'light' is what is first mentioned in (Genesis).

203<sup>2</sup>. Without the light which illuminates the understanding, man cannot think at all.

239<sup>3</sup>. The ideas of thought of the Angels . . . are modifications of the light of Heaven.

265<sup>6</sup>. For delectation is attended with light, because it is from love; and with those who love such things as are of Divine and heavenly wisdom, light shines from Heaven, and there is illustration.

266. See WISDOM, here.

308<sup>6</sup>. Comprehensible (only) to those who are in spiritual light.

309. The human Rational comes forth from the influx of the light of Heaven. 430.

310<sup>2</sup>. Without such a Word there would be no light of Heaven with the men of our Earth; thus no conjunction of Heaven with them; for in proportion as the light of Heaven is present with a man, in the same proportion there is conjunction.

312°. (Such) cannot be elevated into the light of Heaven.

347. Those who are affected and delighted with truth itself, are affected and delighted with the light of Heaven; and those who are affected and delighted with the light of Heaven, are also affected and delighted with Divine truth; nay, with the Lord Himself; for the light of Heaven is the Divine truth, and the Divine truth is the Lord in Heaven. This light enters solely into the interiors of the mind, for the interiors of the mind have been formed to receive it; and as it enters it also affects and delights . . .

—2. Hence it is that these are in the light of the world, and not in the light of Heaven. 352.

466. (The absorption, reflection, and transmission of spiritual light, mentioned and ex.)

481<sup>1</sup>. They who are in corporeal love see nothing in the light of Heaven. To them the light of Heaven is thick darkness; but the light of Hell—which is like the light from burning coals—is clear light . . . 584°.

489<sup>2</sup>. They who from interior affection have loved Divine truths and the Word—that is, from the affection of truth itself—in the other life dwell in light, on lofty places . . .

553°. In the light of Heaven everything appears as it is in itself.

569°. So the light of Heaven, when it inflows into truths of good, gives intelligence and wisdom; but when it inflows into falsities of evil, it is there turned into insanities and phantasies of various kinds.

584°. From these things it is most clearly evident that a man comes into the light of Heaven in proportion as he acknowledges the Divine, and confirms with himself the things which are of Heaven and the Church . . .

603°. For whatever is loved enters with light into the idea of the mind; especially when truth is loved, because all truth is in light.

N. 19°. Everything heavenly is in light, and everything infernal is in darkness.

37. With the evil the Internal is in the world and its light, and in the same light is their external; and therefore they see nothing from the light of Heaven, but solely from the light of the world . . .

J. 38<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as a man from internal becomes external, in the same proportion is spiritual light darkened with him, even until he does not see Divine truth from . . . the light of Heaven . . . but only from natural light, which is of such a nature that when it is alone and not illustrated by spiritual light, it sees Divine truth as it were in light. Further ex.

C. J. 14°. For in its essence spiritual light is Divine wisdom . . .

30. After the Last Judgment . . . there was light in the World of Spirits such as there had not been before. Ex. . . A like light also arose for men in the world, from which they have new illustration.

L. 1<sup>2</sup>. 'The light' = the Divine wisdom. W. 98.

30<sup>3</sup>. 'The light of the gentiles' = the Lord as to the Human.

S. 41. When such read the Word in illustration from the Lord they see Divine truths in natural light; for the light of Heaven, in which is the spiritual sense of the Word, inflows into the natural light, in which is the sense of the letter, and illuminates the Intellectual of the man . . . 58.

73. For in proportion as the Angels are in the understanding of the Word, in the same proportion they are in light. The light of Heaven is the Divine wisdom, which, before their eyes, is light. In the Sacrament in which the copy of the Word is laid, there is a flaming and bright white light, which surpasses every degree of light which is outside of it in Heaven.

104. That through the Word there is light for those who are outside the Church. Gen.art.

W. 23<sup>2</sup>. By the faculty (of thinking rationally) man is either in the light of Heaven, or derives thence the General of his thought; and it is a universal of the light of Heaven that there is one God.

96. That spiritual light is quite distinct from natural light, may be known to everyone if he attends to the thoughts of his own mind . . .

156<sup>2</sup>. These things transcend the ideas of the thoughts which are in natural light, but not those which are in spiritual light . . .

175. See ATMOSPHERE, here.

182. As to the spiritual light in which the Angels are, it has been granted me to see it with my eyes. The light with the Angels of the higher Heavens is so shining white that it cannot be described, not even by the shining whiteness of snow; and it is also so sparkling that this also cannot be described, not even by the beams of the sun of the world. In a word, that light surpasses a thousand times the noon-day light on earth. But the light with the Angels of the lower Heavens can be in some measure described by means of comparisons; but still it surpasses the highest degree of the light of our world. The reason the light of the Angels of the higher Heavens cannot be described, is that their light makes one with their wisdom . . . (Thus) there are degrees of light.

243. That the understanding can be elevated into the light of Heaven . . . but not the will into the heat of Heaven . . . unless the man shuns evils as sins and looks to the Lord. (Shown from experience.) 244. 413. 416. I. 14, Gen.art. T. 602, Ex.

245. The nature of the influx of light into the three degrees of life . . . with man. Ex. (Continued under HEAT.)

247. By the influx of spiritual light into all the three degrees of the mind, man is distinguished from beasts, and is able to think analytically, to see truths both natural and spiritual . . . and thus to be reformed and regenerated. The faculty of receiving spiritual light is what is meant by rationality . . .

[W.] 254<sup>2</sup>. The closing up of the spiritual degree is like the retorsion of a spire, which is the reason why after this degree has been closed it reflects (that is, repels) the light of Heaven; consequently instead of the light of Heaven, there is thick darkness there; and the Truth, which is in the light of Heaven, becomes nauseous.

—<sup>3</sup>. In the light of Heaven (a sensuous man) appears . . . as a monster, with a retracted nose . . . because the nose corresponds to the perception of truth; and he cannot endure a ray of the light of Heaven. In their caverns such have no other light than a light as it were from live coals, or burning charcoal.

257. The natural mind can be elevated even to the light of Heaven in which the Angels are, and perceive naturally what the Angels perceive spiritually, thus not so fully; but still the natural mind of man cannot be elevated into the angelic light itself. When a man is (thus) elevated to the light of Heaven, he can think and even speak with the Angels; but the thought and speech of the Angels are then inflowing into the natural thought and speech of the man . . . and therefore the Angels speak with the man in . . . his own vernacular.

429. (These) are in the Ultimate Heaven, and are in a light there like the nocturnal lunar light.

P. 166. The understanding . . . is illustrated by spiritual light . . . There is spiritual light, and there is natural light, both alike as to the external appearance, but unlike as to the internal appearance; for natural light is from the sun of the natural world, and thence is in itself dead; but spiritual light is from the Sun of the Spiritual World, and thence is in itself alive. This light illustrates the human understanding, and not natural light. The natural and rational lumen is not from this latter light, but from the former. It is called natural and rational lumen, because it is spiritual natural. For there are three degrees of light in the Spiritual World,—celestial light, spiritual light, and spiritual natural light. Celestial light is a flaming sparkling light; this light is with those who are in the Third Heaven. Spiritual light is a resplendent bright white light; this light is with those who are in the Middle Heaven. And spiritual natural light is such as is the diurnal light in our world; this light is with those who are in the Ultimate Heaven, and also with those who are in the World of Spirits . . . but with the good there it is like the summer light, and with the evil like the winter light, on earth. But it is to be known that all the light of the Spiritual World has nothing in common with the light of the natural world: they differ as what is alive and what is dead. From these things it is evident that natural light, such as there is before our eyes, does not illustrate the understanding, but spiritual light. R. 231.

167. Something shall also be said concerning the light of Hell. The light in Hell is also of three degrees. The light in the lowest Hell is like the light from burning charcoal; the light in the middle Hell is like the light from a flame on the hearth; and the light in the highest Hell is like the light from candles, and with some is like the nocturnal light from the moon. Neither are these lights natural, but they are spiritual; for all natural light is dead, and extinguishes the understanding; and with those who are in Hell there is the faculty of understanding which is called rationality . . . and rationality itself is from spiritual light, and not one whit from natural light; but the spiritual light, which they have from their rationality, is turned into infernal light, as the light of day is turned into the darkness of night.

—<sup>2</sup>. But still all in the Spiritual World . . . see in their own light as clearly as man does in his in the daytime; the reason of which is, that the eye-sight of all has been formed to the reception of the light in which it is . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. But the difference between these lights is clearly seen by those who look from one light into the other . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. From these things it may be evident that such as is the understanding which a man has, such is the light which he has; and that after death everyone comes into his own light, for he cannot see in any other . . . The life's love of everyone makes for itself the understanding, and thus also the light; for the love is like the fire of the life, from which is the light of the life.

168<sup>5</sup>. The light of confirmation . . .

173. As man has light through the Word . . . it follows that from light in its origin there is light in its derivations, which are the perceptions and thoughts . . .

187<sup>e</sup>. Because the natural light inflowing from below would at once extinguish the spiritual light inflowing from above.

233<sup>12</sup>. He who continually immerses his thoughts in his own proprium, cannot be elevated out of natural light into spiritual light . . .

317. Truths (then) appear in their own light. Ex.

318<sup>8</sup>. The difference cannot be seen between the light of confirmation, and the light of the perception of truth. (The difference ex.)

R. 53<sup>2</sup>. 'The light of the moon' (Is. xxx. 26) = faith from charity; 'the light of the sun' = intelligence and wisdom from love then from the Lord.

224<sup>4</sup>. Every man . . . is able to see the truths of the Word in light . . .

386. Light would have inflowed from Heaven and would have confused them.

—<sup>e</sup>. For light inflowing from Heaven on the right side affects the will . . . but light inflowing from Heaven on the left side affects the understanding; and every man can be in the light of Heaven as to the understanding, provided the will is closed as to its evil.

414. By 'light' in general is signified Divine truth, which is truth from the Word; by 'the light of the sun,' spiritual Divine truth; and by 'the light of the moon and of the stars,' natural Divine truth, both from the Word . . .

566<sup>2</sup>. Fatuous light is the light of the confirmation of falsity. This light corresponds to the light in which are owls and bats . . . When they looked upwards to Heaven . . . they saw darkness; but when they looked downwards to the abyss . . . they saw light . . . They said that thus light and darkness are not anything, but only the state of the eye . . . But it was shown that their light was fatuous light . . . and that their light was only the activity of their minds originating from the fire of concupiscences; being not unlike the light of cats . . .

131<sup>19</sup>. The light of Heaven is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord.

186<sup>14</sup>. The life itself which proceeds from the Lord, and which infills Heaven and the world, is the life of His love, and appears in Heaven as light; which, being life, illuminates the minds of the Angels, and gives them to understand and be wise. Hence it is that the Lord is called not only 'the Life,' but also 'the Light.'

III. . . And hence it is that 'light,' in the Word, = Divine truth, and the derivative intelligence and wisdom; and that the Lord Himself is called 'the Light,' 196. 294<sup>16</sup>.

349<sup>10</sup>. 'The light of men' = the life of their thought and understanding. For the proceeding Divine . . . appears in Heaven as light . . . This light proceeding from the Lord is life itself, which not only illuminates the understanding . . . but also vivifies it according to the reception; and when this light is received in the life, it is called 'the light of life' (John viii.12).

351<sup>2</sup>. (The propagation of spiritual light to the gentiles. Ex.)

386<sup>23</sup>. 'Light' = truth in the light.

391<sup>3</sup>. 'Light' = the illustration in which Truths appear.

401. All the light possessed by the natural mind . . . is from the light of its spiritual mind, which light is the light of Heaven.

—<sup>18</sup>. Light from Heaven was then given to the Israelites . . .

405<sup>32</sup>. 'The light of the world' (Matt.v.14) = the truth of the Church.

406. When the spiritual mind is open, the light of Heaven inflows through it into the natural mind, and illustrates it . . . But when the spiritual mind has not been opened . . . the light of Heaven is let into the natural mind only through chinks round about, whence it has the faculty of thinking, reasoning, and speaking, and also the faculty of understanding truths, but not the faculty of loving them, or of doing them from affection; for the faculty of loving truths because they are truths is given solely through the influx of the light of Heaven through the spiritual mind; for the light of Heaven [which comes] through the spiritual mind is conjoined with the heat of Heaven, which is love . . . whereas the light of Heaven which inflows into the Natural through chinks is light separated from the heat of Heaven . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. 'For a light of the peoples' = illustration.

408. Wisdom is from the light of Heaven ; whereas intelligence is from the light of the world illustrated by the light of Heaven. Ex.

411. The light of Heaven, which is Divine truth united to Divine good (effecting the Last Judgment). —<sup>2</sup>.

412<sup>1</sup>. 'The light of the 'faces of Jehovah' = Divine truth from the Divine love. Ill.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'In the light of Thy faces' (Ps.xc.8) = in the light of Heaven from the Lord as a Sun . . . As this light is the Divine truth itself from which are all intelligence and wisdom, the quality of everything which comes into it is manifested as in clear day. Hence it is that when the evil come into that light, they appear exactly as they are, deformed and monstrous according to the hidden evils with them.

422<sup>3</sup>. The light, which is spiritual light or Divine truth, also inflows directly from the east into the west, and also flows both ways into the sides ; but with this difference, that the Divine truth which inflows from the east into the west in its essence is the good of love ; whereas that which inflows into the sides in its essence is truth from that good ; and therefore those who dwell in the south and in the north . . . are in the light of truth ; those in the south in the clear light of truth, and those in the north in the obscure light of truth. The light of truth is intelligence and wisdom.

—<sup>13</sup>. 'The nations shall walk to Thy light' (Is.lx.3) = life according to Divine truth.

434<sup>6</sup>. The light of Heaven is the Divine good in form . . .

483<sup>10</sup>. 'In Thy light shall we see light' (Ps.xxxvi.9) = . . . in the Divine truth.

526<sup>13</sup>. That care is to be taken lest the truth once perceived in the understanding and received in the will be turned into falsity, which is done from evil, is meant by, 'See therefore lest the light which is in thee be darkness' (Luke xi.34).

527<sup>2</sup>. By 'light from the sun' . . . is meant spiritual light, such as there is with the Angels who see the Lord as a Sun ; whereas by 'light from the moon and stars' . . . is meant natural light such as is with the Angels who look to the Lord as a Moon. (These two lights ex.) —<sup>4</sup>.

—<sup>4</sup>. By 'the light' which was made on the first day is signified Divine light, which in itself is Divine truth, thus spiritual light, which illustrates the understanding . . . For without the illustration thereof by the Lord no reformation can be effected . . . and therefore 'light' is spoken of first of all . . . Its being said that 'God saw the light that it was good' = that there had been good illustration and reception with them. But by 'the darkness' is signified the lumen which is in the natural man . . . because, relatively to spiritual light, this lumen is darkness. . . Hence it is said (further) that 'God distinguished between the light and the darkness ; and called the light day, and the darkness night ;' from which it may be evident that by 'day' is signified spiritual light, and by 'darkness' natural light. —<sup>6</sup>.

541. That the light of truth from the Lord became thick darkness through infernal falsities. Sig. and Ex.

559<sup>6</sup>. Elevation into the light of Heaven . . . is actual elevation of the interiors . . .

588<sup>2</sup>. It follows that falsities are of no light.

595<sup>3</sup>. For the light of Heaven, in like manner as the light of the world, presents variegations of colours according to its incidence . . .

612<sup>2</sup>. 'Light' = Divine truth manifested. 644<sup>22</sup>. 678<sup>2</sup>.

678<sup>3</sup>. The light of Heaven, which in its essence is Divine truth and Divine wisdom, is the Divine love proceeding. 714<sup>10</sup>.

734<sup>2</sup>. 'Let us go in the light of Jehovah' (Is.ii.5) . . . = that they will lead the life of wisdom. 'The light of Jehovah' = the Divine truth ; and 'to go in it' = to live according to it, thus to be in the life of wisdom.

744. The joy of the Angels from the light and wisdom then with them. Sig. and Ex.

832<sup>4</sup>. The love of truth is what receives the light of Heaven . . .

846<sup>2</sup>. The natural understanding . . . cannot be illustrated by its own lumen ; but is illustrated by the light of the rational man, (which is illustrated) from spiritual light. Ex.

864<sup>3</sup>. 'I am the Light of the world' = that the Lord is the Divine truth itself. 'He who followeth Me' = that he who acknowledges His Divine, and does His precepts ; 'shall not walk in darkness' = shall not be in falsities ; 'but shall have the light of life' = but shall be in Divine truths, which teach a man eternal life, and lead him to Heaven.

1171. The light of the understanding before reformation is like the clear light of the moon, according to the Knowledges of truth and good ; whereas after reformation it is like the light of the sun, clear according to the application of them to the uses of life.

D. Wis. i. That the Divine wisdom . . . appears before the eyes of the Angels as light. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. The Divine wisdom which in the Heavens appears as light, in its own essence is not light, but clothes itself with light, so that it may appear before the sight also of the Angels. The wisdom in its own essence is Divine truth, and the light is its appearance and correspondence. As light corresponds to wisdom, and the Lord is the Divine wisdom, the Lord is called 'the Light' in many places. III.

[D. Wis. i. 1]. That light is the appearance of wisdom, and that it is its correspondence, is evident in Heaven . . . for in Heaven there is no other light than spiritual light, which is the light of wisdom, illustrating all things which come forth from the Divine love there. The wisdom with the Angels gives them to understand these things in their essence, and the light gives them to see them in their form, and therefore the light in the Heavens is in an equal degree with the wisdom of the Angels. In the highest Heavens there is a flaming light which sparkles as from the most refulgent gold; the reason is that they are in wisdom. In the lower Heavens the light is bright white, and resplendent as from the brightest silver; the reason is that they are in intelligence. And the light in the lowest Heavens is like the noon-day light of the world; the reason is, that they are in knowledge. The light of the higher Heavens is bright white, exactly as a star appears, refulgent and resplendent in itself by night; and is continuous light, because the Sun does not set there. It is this same light which in the world illustrates the understanding of those men who love to be wise; but it does not appear to them, because they are natural . . . It can appear, for it has appeared to me, but before the eyes of my spirit; and it has also been granted me to perceive that in the light of the Highest Heaven I was in wisdom, in the light of the Second Heaven in intelligence, and in the light of the Ultimate Heaven in knowledge; and that when I was solely in natural light I was in ignorance of spiritual things.

—<sup>5</sup>. In order that I might know in what light were the learned in the world at this day, I saw two ways. (Continued under LEARNED—eruditus.)

—<sup>c</sup>. Those have spiritual light who love to understand whether what is said by another is true; but those have natural light who only love to confirm that which has been said by others.

C. 123. Into the lowest thought inflows light from man or from the world; but into the general thought there inflows light from Heaven. This constantly inflows into the understanding of man, provided he does not let himself down into his own light; he then extinguishes the light of Heaven . . .

3900°. 'For as the lightning goeth forth from the east, and appeareth even to the west, so also shall the Advent of the Son of Man be' (Matt. xxiv. 27)=that it was with the internal worship of the Lord as it is with lightning, in that it is at once dissipated; for by 'the lightning' is signified that which is of heavenly light, thus that which is predicated of love and faith. 'The east'=the Lord . . . and 'the west,' what has set or ceased to be. . . thus 'the lightning . . . from the east . . . to the west'=dissipation.

4530. The flashing of colours there. Ex. . . Their flashing is from the good which is of wisdom. —<sup>a</sup>.

8112. (Lightning a sign in Jupiter of disagreement.)

8813°. 'Lightning' (Deut. xxxii. 41)=the resplendence of Divine truth which glances on the Intellectual, and bereaves it of the faculty of seeing truth. III.

— By 'lightning' is meant truth Divine in Matt. xxviii. 3; Luke xvii. 24.

8914. 'The torches' or lightnings (Ex. xx. 18)=the resplendences which truths have from the good of love.

9865°. Colours which flash . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Carbuncle,' in the Hebrew, is derived from a word which means flashing, such as there is from fire.

R. 236. 'Out of the throne . . . lightnings . . .' (Rev. iv. 5)=illustration. From the flame which glances on the eyes, 'lightnings'=illustration. III. 396. E. 273.

530. 'Lightnings, voices, and thunders' (Rev. xi. 19)=reasonings.

710. 'Voices, lightnings, and thunders' (Rev. xvi. 18)=reasonings, falsifications of truth, and argumentations from falsities.

926°. As it were lightning flashed upon the walls . . .

M. 787. Such lightning is a sign to us of the coming of the Ancient one from the east . . .

T. 77. I saw through the window as it were lightning flashing, and presently I heard as it were thunder rolling, (which) were correspondences of the combat and collision of arguments (concerning) God and nature . . .

E. 273. 'Lightning' is predicated of the illustration of Divine truth.

— Lightnings and thunders . . . in general= Divine truth received and uttered by the higher Angels and which when it descends to the lower Angels some times appears as lightning, and is heard as thunder with voices. Hence it is that 'lightning'=Divine truth as to illustration; 'thunder,' Divine truth as to understanding; and 'voices,' Divine truth as to perception. III.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'Lightning' (2 Sam. xxii. 15)=the light of Divine truths; which, as they vivify and illustrate the good, so do they terrify and blind the evil . . .

353°. Hence the things which fall down from the Third Heaven correspond to thunder, and those which fall down from the Second Heaven correspond to lightning . . .

357. 'His arrow shall go forth as the lightning' (Zech. ix. 14)=truth illustrated, thus truth from the good of love.

419<sup>13</sup>. 'Lightnings' are mentioned from the light of Heaven.

498. 'Thunders and lightnings'=conflicts and disturbances of the affections and derivative thoughts concerning good and evil, and truth and falsity . . . Such things . . . appear at a distance, where they are not heard, as thunders and lightnings; as thunders from the conflict of affections; and as lightnings from the conflict of the derivative thoughts. Ex. 702.

644<sup>10</sup>. 'He maketh lightnings for the rain' (Jer.x.13; li.16)=illustration from the influx of Divine truth with them.

— The lintel and the posts have a like signification to that of the forehead and hands. Ex. and Ill.

Lion. Leo.

A. 430. 'A young lion' (Is. xi. 6) = what is opposite (to the innocence and love signified by 'a calf.')

3240°. Those called 'Sheba and Dedan' fight for and defend the Knowledges of good and truth, and therefore they are called 'young lions' (Ezek. xxxviii. 13).

3901<sup>4</sup>. It is the first state of the Church which is described by 'the lion with eagle's wings' (Dan. vii. 4).

3923<sup>3</sup>. 'Dan is a lion's whelp' (Deut. xxxiii. 22). In the internal sense 'a lion' = the truth of the Church, from its strength; for truth is that which fights and conquers; hence 'a lion's whelp' = the first of truth, which is affirmation and acknowledgment.

5313<sup>15</sup>. There were 'two lions standing beside the hands;' and 'twelve lions standing there upon the six steps . . .' (1 Kings x. 19, 20) . . . 'Lions' = Divine truths fighting and conquering. 'Twelve lions' = all these truths in one complex.

5828<sup>6</sup>. The tearing to pieces of good by falsities and evils is meant in, 'The likeness of the impious is as a lion; he hath longed to rend; and as a young lion which sitteth in secret places' (Ps. xvii. 12); 'They have opened their mouth against me, a lion tearing and roaring' (Ps. xxii. 13); 'Lest they seize as a lion my soul, rending but not rescuing' (Ps. vii. 2). 'A lion' = those who vastate the Church.

6367. 'Judah is a lion's whelp' (Gen. xlix. 9) = innocence with inborn forces. 'A lion' = the good of love and the derivative truth in their power. E. 433<sup>4</sup>.

— The reason 'a lion's whelp' = innocence, is that 'a lion' = the good of celestial love, and a whelp is as its infant, thus innocence.

— 2. That 'a lion' = the good of celestial love and the derivative truth in their power; and also that in the opposite sense, it = the evil of the love of self in its power, is evident from the places in the Word where 'a lion' is mentioned. Ill.

— In Rev. v. 5, the Lord is called 'the lion (of the tribe of Judah)' from the omnipotence which appertains to His Divine love and the derivative Divine truth.

— Elsewhere also in the Word Jehovah or the Lord is compared to 'a lion;' as in Hos. xi. 10; Is. xxxi. 4; where the omnipotence of the Divine good is compared to 'a lion,' and the omnipotence of the derivative Divine truth is compared to 'a young lion.'

— 4. That the cherubim had the face of a lion, was from the omnipotence of the Divine truth from the Divine good, which is of Providence.

— 5. That the celestial, who are in power from good and the derivative truth, which are from the Lord, are meant by 'lions,' Ill.

— 8. That 'a lion,' in the opposite sense, = the evil of the love of self in its power. Ill.

— 9. In these passages, 'a lion' = the power which appertains to the evil of the love of self, when it is destroying and vastating. Further ill.

6369. 'He bowed himself, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion' (Gen. xlix. 9) = the good of love and the derivative truth in their power. . . For when a lion bows himself, he hardens his sinews, and strengthens himself, as is the case when he sees his prey. . . 'A lion,' and 'an old lion,' = the good of love and the derivative truth in their power. 'A young lion' = one who is in power through truth from good; and 'an old lion' = one who is in power through good; for those who are in celestial good never fight, but are safe through good; for where they come the evil flee away, because they cannot endure their presence. These are they who are signified by 'an old lion.'

6441<sup>e</sup>. The lion (like the wolf) is a rapacious animal, and it is also said of it that it seizes the prey, gathers the spoil, and preys on prey . . . and yet in a good sense 'a lion' = truth in power from good.

9052<sup>3</sup>. 'The teeth of lions' (Ps. lvii. 4) = falsities destroying truths; 'lions' = falsities from evil in their power.

9348<sup>4</sup>. 'A lion's whelp' = evil in its power. Ref.

— 'The voice of the roaring of a lion' = falsity.

9391<sup>3</sup>. Truth and the derivative good in the external form are signified by 'the lion,' and 'the calf' (Rev. iv.) . . . 'A lion' = truth from good in its power.

1050<sup>2</sup>. 'A lion' (Amos iii. 12) = those who vastate the Church.

10236<sup>6</sup>. By 'the lions' (1 Kings vii.) are signified protection lest truths should enter; for 'lions' = truths in their power. Ex.

10383. Before the punishing Spirit comes, there appears to them the wide gape of a lion . . . D. 1687.

S. 13<sup>2</sup>. 'Their teeth were as those of lions' (Rev. ix. 8) = that Sensuous things appeared to them as if they had power over all things. R. 435. E. 556.

241. 'The first animal was like a lion' (Rev. iv. 7) = the Divine truth of the Word as to power. That 'a lion' = truth in its power, here the Divine truth of the Word as to power, may be evident from the power of the lion, which is greater than that of any animal of the earth; and also from the lions in the Spiritual World, in that they are images representative of the power of Divine truth; and also from the Word, where they = Divine truth in its power. 296.

— Hence it is that Jehovah or the Lord is compared to 'a lion,' and is also called 'a lion.' Ill.

— In these passages, the power of the Divine truth which is from the Lord is described by 'a lion.'

245. By 'the wings' of the lion is signified the power of fighting against evils and falsities from Hell. This power is of the Divine truth of the Word from the Lord.

265. 'Behold the lion' (Rev. v. 5) = the Lord, in that from His Own power He had subjugated the Hells, and had reduced all things into order, when He was in the world. 'A lion' = the Divine truth of the Word as to power; and as the Lord is the Divine truth itself, or the Word, He is called 'a lion.' E. 309.

341<sup>e</sup>. Suddenly . . . they appeared as one great person, whose face was like the face of a lion . . .

435. 'A lion' = power. 451.

471. 'He cried with a great voice as a lion roareth' (Rev. x. 3) = grievous lamentation because the Church has been taken away from Him. . . For the lion roars when he sees his enemies and their insults, and when he sees his whelps and his prey taken away . . . Ill.

573<sup>2</sup>. The reason 'a lion,' and 'a bear,' are mentioned in these passages, is that by 'a lion' is signified falsity destroying the truths of the Word . . .

574. 'His mouth as the mouth of a lion' (Rev. xiii. 2) = reasonings from falsities as from truths. . . By 'a lion' is signified Divine truth in power; but here, falsity in power appearing as truth by means of reasonings.

— 2. By 'the lion' (Dan. vii.) is signified the Divine truth of the Word in its first state, and the instauration of the Church thereby . . .

[A.] 875<sup>5</sup>. At the sides of the steps (of the Temple of Wisdom) appeared as it were lions with their whelps.

T. 87<sup>a</sup>. In that World those who are in Divine truths from the Lord are like lions, although they have no more bodily strength than sheep.

123<sup>o</sup>. For Hell is like . . . a huge lion, to which it is also compared in the Word.

D. 3191<sup>2</sup>. (A lion seen in connection with Gustavus Adolphus.)

E. 163<sup>3</sup>. 'A lion' (Amos iii.12)=the Church; here, those therein who are destroying goods and truths.

223<sup>7</sup>. 'A lion out of the thicket' (Jer.iv.7)=falsity from evil. 304<sup>9</sup>. (=falsity from evil destroying the truths of the Church. 637<sup>8</sup>.)

253<sup>7</sup>. 'Lions'=the truths of the Church in their power; 'twelve'=all. 430<sup>12</sup>.

278. 'The first animal was like a lion'=the appearance in ultimates as to the power and the effect of the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord. 'A lion'=the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord as to its power and effect.

—<sup>2</sup>. That 'a lion'=the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord as to power. III.

—<sup>10</sup>. As by 'a lion' is signified power . . .

—<sup>11</sup>. As by lions was represented power, guard, and protection against falsities and evils, there were two lions beside the two hands of the throne built by Solomon, and twelve lions upon its six steps.

—<sup>12</sup>. By 'lions' is also signified the power of falsity from evil, through which the Church is destroyed and devastated. III.

316<sup>24</sup>. 'A lion'=falsity strongly destroying truth. 328<sup>11</sup>.

386<sup>19</sup>. 'The young lions do lack and hunger' (Ps. xxxiv.10)=those who know and are wise from themselves.

388<sup>9</sup>. 'A huge lion' (Hos.xiii.8)=the power of falsity from evil.

—<sup>10</sup>. 'No lion shall be there' (Is.xxxv.9)=no falsity destroying truth.

435<sup>8</sup>. That he is safe from falsities, is signified by, 'he dwelleth as a lion' (Deut.xxxiii.20).

455<sup>17</sup>. 'Lions' (Ps.lvii.4)=those who ravage the Church of its truths, and thus destroy it.

539<sup>7</sup>. 'Young lions' (Nahum ii.11)=the principal and protecting truths of the Church.

556<sup>2</sup>. 'Lions'=those who through falsities destroy the truths of the Church.

577. 'The heads of the horses as the heads of lions' (Rev.ix.17)=knowledge and the derivative thought destructive of truth. . . The reason 'the heads of lions' here =the destruction of truth, is that 'a lion' in the supreme sense=Divine truth as to power, and in the opposite sense falsity destroying truth, consequently the destruction of truth; and 'the head of a lion'=the forces of the lower mind by which it destroys.

600<sup>14</sup>. The reason the faces of a man and of a lion were seen to the south (Ezek.i.10), is that by 'a man' is signified Divine truth in light and intelligence, and by 'a lion' Divine truth in power thence, such as there is in Heaven in the south.

601<sup>4</sup>. 'A lion' is frequently mentioned in the Word, and by 'a lion,' in the supreme sense, is signified the Lord as to Divine truth, and in like manner Heaven and the Church as to that truth from the Lord; and thence by 'a lion'; is signified Divine truth as to power. —<sup>5</sup>.

—<sup>9</sup>. Those are called 'lions' who are in Divine truths.

—<sup>13</sup>. 'A young lion' (Ezek.xix.3,5,6)=the falsity of evil in its ardour to destroy the truth of the Church.

619<sup>18</sup>. Faith separated from charity, which destroys the good of charity, was represented by 'the young lion' which attacked Samson with the intention of rending him. But Samson, being a Nazarite, and thereby representing the Lord as to His ultimate Natural, tore the lion, and afterwards found in its carcase a swarm of bees, and honey, by which was signified that after that faith has been dissipated, the good of charity succeeds in its place.

650<sup>38</sup>. 'A lion out of the forest which uttered its voice against God' (Jer.xii.8)=falsity of evil in the whole complex.

654<sup>41</sup>. 'The young lion,' and the 'old lion' which are over them (Is.xxx.6)=the power of the falsity which destroys the truth and good of the Church.

714<sup>24</sup>. To destroy the interior and the exterior falsities which are devastating the truths of the Church, is signified by 'to tread on the lion and the asp' (Ps.xci.13); and to destroy the interior and the exterior falsities which are devastating the goods of the Church, is signified by, 'to trample on the lion and the dragon.'

750<sup>37</sup>. 'Lion'=falsities destroying the truths of the Church.

780<sup>6</sup>. 'A lion'=infernal falsity as to its power and desire to destroy Divine truth.

—<sup>7</sup>. 'The lion out of the forest which hath smitten the magnates' (Jer.v.6)=the dominion of infernal falsity.

—<sup>10</sup>. 'I became to them as a lion' (Hos.xiii.7)=the devastation of all the truth of the Church.

781<sup>12</sup>. 'A lion'=the power of Divine spiritual truth; and, in the opposite sense, the power of infernal falsity against Divine truth.

—<sup>14</sup>. 'I will devour them like a huge lion' (Hos. xiii.8)=the destruction and devastation of all the truth of the Word and thence of the Church.

—<sup>15</sup>. 'A lion in secret places' (Lam.iii.10)=that the interior natural man, from the evils in him, perverts all the meaning of the truth of the Word and thence of the Church, whence come falsities.

782. 'A lion'=infernal falsity as to power. . . The reason is that by 'a lion' is signified Divine truth, and therefore the Lord is called 'a lion.' Hence, in the opposite sense, by 'a lion' is signified infernal falsity as to the power of destroying Divine truth, thus the Word, which is especially effected by means of adulterations and falsifications of it; and as the lion is an animal more powerful than all the rest, and its power increases according to its hunger to devour, thus to seize upon and tear to pieces, therefore by 'a lion' is also signified the cupidity of destroying the truths of the Word. Like things are also represented by lions in the Spiritual World, for there also lions appear, but the forms of lions there are appearances originating from the cupidity of those who can powerfully adulterate and falsify the truths of the Word, by means of which the latter are destroyed; and whose power increases according to their faculty of reasoning. It is from this that by 'lions' in the Word, in the opposite sense, is signified infernal falsity destroying the truths of the Church.

But that speech in general can be expressed by means of the lips, is evident to me from the manifold series of muscular fibres which are folded

See BILE, and HEPATIC.

A. 5183. The gyres of those who belong to the province of the liver . . . were gentle, being circumfluent variously according to the operation of that viscus; they affected me with much delectation. Their operation is diverse, but the general form of it is orbicular. Their diverse operation is represented in the functions of the liver, in that they are diverse. For the liver draws to it the blood, and separates it, and pours the better blood into the veins, commits that of a middle sort to the hepatic duct, and leaves the vile for the gall bladder. This is the case in adults. But in embryos the liver receives the blood from the womb of the mother, and purifies it, and insinuates the purer blood into the veins, so that it may inflow into the heart by a shorter way. At that time it acts as a guard before the heart.

10031. 'The caul upon the liver-jecur' (Ex.xxix.13) =the interior good of the external man. . . By 'the liver' is signified interior purification; for the liver purifies the blood . . . 10073.

— Otherwise, by 'the liver-jecur seu hepatem'—is signified the external good of innocence, such as there is with infants; for the reason that infants are nourished by means of the liver-jecur, before the rest of the viscera have been fully formed for their use—as is the case when they are embryos—for thither is brought through the placenta and navel all the nutritious juice from the womb of the mother. This juice corresponds to the good of innocence.

—<sup>3</sup>. That this good is signified by 'the liver-jecur.' III.

H. 96<sup>2</sup>. Those who are in the liver, pancreas, and spleen, are in various purifications of good and truth.

D. 368. On those who form the liver-jecur seu hepar. —Spirits from the liver in whom there is something of innocence; and therefore in infants the liver is the largest organ of the body, and the infant is nourished thence, and it acts in the stead of many of the viscera.

1005. On the provinces of the spleen, liver, and pancreas.

1008. As to the liver, it acts mildly, and in fact near the head, thus almost at the tract of the head beneath the province of the spleen. These act by rather gentle gyres, and thus separate. The gyres in which their operation flows is diverse, but is orbicular.

D. Wis. iii. 5. In the embryo . . . the liver leaps . . . for the reception of the nourishment. The motion of the rest of the viscera is from those of the heart and the liver . . .

Locust. Locusta.

A. 5620<sup>12</sup>. 'His food was locusts and wild honey' (Matt.iii.4)=the Word such as is its literal sense as to good. 7643<sup>10</sup>.

7643. 'I bring the locusts into thy boundary' (Ex.x. 4)=that falsity will take possession of their outermost things. 'The locust'=falsity in the outermost things.

—<sup>3</sup>. By 'the locust' is signified falsity from evil in the outermost things.

—<sup>4</sup>. In the Word, where the vastation of the evil is treated of, mention is sometimes made of 'the locust,' and 'the bruchus' (or unwinged locust); and by 'the locust' is there meant the falsity which vastates the outermost things . . . The falsity which is in the outermost things of the Natural is there meant by 'the locust,' and the evil there by 'the bruchus.' —<sup>5</sup>, Ill.

—<sup>6</sup>. As by 'the locust' is meant the falsity which is in the outermost things of the Natural, it is said that the locust shall be brought 'into the boundary,' and that it shall cover 'the surface of the earth' . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. When 'the locust' is mentioned (without the bruchus), it=both falsity and evil together; for 'the locust'=falsity from evil. —<sup>7</sup>.

—<sup>7</sup>. Here, 'the locust'=falsity in the outermost things vastating truths and goods.

—<sup>8</sup>. 'The locusts' (in Rev.ix.)=reasonings from fallacies and the derivative falsities, which have also been confirmed by philosophical things. Thus by 'locusts' are also signified the falsities which are in the outermost things with man, and which are more earthly and corporeal than all other falsities; and by which men can be easily deceived and seduced. (The passage fully ex.)

—<sup>10</sup>. By 'the locust' in a good sense is signified ultimate and most general truth, and also the pleasantness thereof. Ill.

—<sup>e</sup>. That the locust was to be eaten, see Lev.xi.22.

7646. The falsities which are signified by 'the locust' are the falsities in the outermost things of the Natural. These are the falsities which consume the most general truths and goods . . .

7674. 'The locust'=falsity in the outermost things with those who are infesting.

7682. 'The east wind brought the locust' (Ex.x.13)=dense falsity with those who were infesting . . . 7683.

7686. 'Before it there was no such locust as it, and after it there shall not be such' (ver.14)=that there has been no such falsity from the first time of the Church, and that there shall be no such. 'The locust'=falsity in the outermost things. 7703. 8764<sup>e</sup>. 10071<sup>2</sup>.

9052<sup>e</sup>. 'Locusts' (Rev.ix.)=those who are in external falsities.

9372<sup>8</sup>. 'Locusts' (Matt.iii.)=ultimate or most general truths.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'The locust'=truth which nourishes in the outermosts.

S. 13<sup>2</sup>. 'The locusts which went forth out of the smoke of the pit' (Rev.ix.)=falsities in the outermost things such as are with those who have become sensuous, and who see and judge of all things from fallacies. Fully ex. R.424, Ex.

W. 345<sup>e</sup>. See FROG, here.

R. 424. Falsities in the outermost things are those which are in the outermost things of man's life, which are called sensuous things: these are signified by 'locusts' in the Word. But it is to be known that they did not appear like the locusts in the fields . . . but like pigmies or dwarfs, as is evident from the description of them . . . That dwarfs were called locusts by the Ancients. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. As falsities in the outermost things . . . are signified by 'locusts,' such persons are called 'locusts,' and are also said to be 'crowned,' and to 'exercise command' (Nahum iii. 15, 17).

— . That because falsities in the outermost things consume the nascent truths and goods of the Church with man, they are signified by the locusts which consume the grass . . . Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. By the miracle of the locusts in Egypt is described vastation by means of falsities in the outermost things; and as these are infernal when the interior things on which they depend are closed, the locusts were cast into the sea Suph, by which is signified Hell.

430. 'The likenesses of the locusts' (Rev. ix. 7) = the appearances and images of those who have confirmed with themselves faith separated from charity. . . By 'locusts' are signified falsities in the outermost things; and as falsities make one with those who are in the falsities, they themselves are also signified by 'locusts.' That those who have confirmed faith alone with themselves, or their falsities, are meant by 'the locusts,' has been clearly evident to me from the fact that the presbyters who were in that faith embraced and kissed the locusts which were seen, and wanted to introduce them into their houses. B. 87. 89.

566<sup>2</sup>. There (then) ascended some out of the abyss who at first appeared like locusts, but afterwards as men. Des. T. 162<sup>2</sup>.

T. 71. The ground opened . . . and locusts rose up, which leaped upon the grass, and made a desert everywhere.

—<sup>2</sup>. The locusts leaped into the sea which is there called Suph . . . and the earth was cleansed . . .

E. 283<sup>15</sup>. 'Locusts' = falsities in the outermost things.

543. 'Out of the smoke went forth locusts into the earth' = that from infernal falsities they become corporeal sensuous in the Church. . . 'Locusts' = the ultimate Sensuous of man which is in the falsity of evil. —<sup>2</sup> Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. That nothing else is signified by 'the locust' than this Sensuous of man which has just been (fully) described, may be evident from other places in the Word where 'the locust' is mentioned. Fully ill.

— . The plague of the locusts in Egypt = the destruction of the whole natural man by the irruption of evil and falsity from the Sensuous. . . By 'the locust' is signified the falsity and evil of the sensuous man vastating the natural man; that is, destroying there all the truth and good of the Church. . . As the falsity and evil of the sensuous man is the most grievous of all, being corporeal and earthly, it is said that that locust was exceedingly grievous . . . (The rest of the passage ex.)

—<sup>8</sup>. As by 'the locust' here is signified the Sensuous as to falsity and evil; or, what is the same, the falsity and evil of the sensuous man; the like is signified by 'the locust' and 'the bruchus' in David. Ill.

— . 'The bruchus' is also a locust. Shown.

—<sup>12</sup>. The Sensuous of man is the ultimate and lowest of the life of his thought and affection; and as what is lowest is (relatively) little, it is compared to 'locusts' (Is. xl. 22; Num. xiii. 3). Ex.

—<sup>14</sup>. As by 'the locust' is signified the Sensuous, which is the ultimate . . . in which the understanding ceases and upon which it subsists . . . the sense of the letter of the Word . . . is meant in a good sense by 'the locust,' and consequently also the truth and good thereof. Hence John the Baptist ate locusts; and the sons of Israel were allowed to eat them. . . 'The locust' (which John ate) = the Sensuous as to truth.

—<sup>15</sup>. See LEG, here.

546<sup>8</sup>. It is said of the locusts that they should 'hurt men,' but not 'the grass of the earth, the green thing, or the trees;' for by 'the locust' is signified the ultimate of man's life which is called the Sensuous; and when this is in the persuasion of falsity and reads or hears the Word it does no harm to anything of the Word in the sense of its letter . . . but it injures the understanding of truth and the perception of good . . .

552. 'The likenesses of the locusts were like unto horses prepared for war' (Rev. ix. 7) = that the sensuous man has become a reasoner as if from the understanding of truth. 'Locusts' = the men of the Church become sensuous through the falsities which are from evil. —<sup>2</sup>.

619<sup>16</sup>. 'The locust' (Matt. iii.) = the truth of the natural man.

799<sup>18</sup>. 'Its inhabitants are as locusts' (Is. xl. 22) = men in outermost things; for 'the locusts' = what is alive in ultimates; in special, the truth, and in the opposite sense, the falsity, there.

5 M. 23. Further towards the north they saw as it were bruchuses and locusts falling from a cloud, which were consuming the grass of the earth; (and which signified) falsities of faith.

Loins. Lumbi.

A. 1042<sup>3</sup>. 'From the loins upwards' (Ezek. i. 27) = the Celestial of love . . . 'From the loins downwards' = the Celestial Spiritual. Thus the Celestial Heaven . . . was represented by, 'from the loins upwards;' and the Spiritual Heaven . . . by, 'from the loins downwards.'

For the things which are below the loins . . . in the Grand Man = natural things. E. 595<sup>4</sup>.

[A.] 1773<sup>2</sup>. The loins mentioned.

2757. See HEAT=calor, here.

3021. The thighs together with the loins correspond to conjugal love.

—<sup>3</sup>. As the thighs and the loins = the things which are of conjugal love, they also = the things which are of love and charity, because conjugal love is the fundamental love of all love.

—<sup>4</sup>. As 'justice' is predicated of the good of love, it is called 'the girdle of His loins' (Is. xi. 5). Thus 'the loins' are predicated of the love of good; and 'the thighs,' of the love of truth.

—<sup>7</sup>. The Divine love in the Celestial Kingdom is 'the loins' (Dan. x. 5).

—<sup>e</sup>. 'The thighs' and 'loins' = conjugal love principally, and thence all genuine love. Ill. In the opposite sense (they signify) love contrary to these, namely that of self and of the world.

3294. For 'the womb,' and 'the loins,' are predicated of the things which are of love, that is, of good.

4280<sup>2</sup>. With the Ancient Church the thighs and loins signified what is conjugal.

4403<sup>2</sup>. The Spirits who are at the loins are those who are in conjugal love.

4575. 'Kings shall go forth out of thy loins' (Gen. xxxv. 11) = truths from the Divine marriage. . . 'The loins' = the things which are of conjugal love; consequently the things which are of the heavenly marriage; and, in the supreme sense, of the Divine marriage.

4779. 'He put sackcloth upon his loins' (Gen. xxxvii. 34) = mourning for good destroyed. . . For 'the loins' = conjugal love, and thence all celestial and spiritual love; and this from correspondence; for . . . the loins . . . correspond to those in the Grand Man who have been in genuine conjugal love; and as conjugal love is the fundamental of all loves, by the loins is signified all celestial and spiritual love in general. Hence came this ritual of putting sackcloth upon the loins when they were mourning over good destroyed; for all good is of love. Ill.

4931. On the correspondence with the Grand Man of the . . . loins, etc. Gen. art. 5050.

5050. It is to be known in general that the loins and the members which adhere to them correspond to genuine conjugal love, consequently to those Societies where such are. Those who are there are more celestial than all others, and live in the delight of peace above all others. 5051. De Conj. 102. 103.

5051. There is a communication (from the loins) through the feet with the soles and the heels. Ex.

5059. When those who had lived in . . . adulteries approached me, they infused pain into the loins . . .

5060<sup>2</sup>. He let himself down towards the loins, and seemed as it were to bend himself about them both, by which was represented that they want to present themselves [as being] in chaste conjugal love.

—<sup>3</sup>. His Hell was deep down beneath the middle part of the loins.

5714<sup>9</sup>. When (that great adulterer) was permitted to emerge, he inflicted pain . . . especially on the periosteum in the loins . . .

6372. The truth which is from good (is) signified; for that interior part of the feet signifies this from its communication with the loins.

6432<sup>6</sup>. 'To gird themselves upon the loins' (Is. xxxii. 11) = to be in grief on account of lost good.

6832<sup>4</sup>. 'The loins' = conjugal love, and thence all heavenly love.

7045. For the loins together with the genitals correspond to conjugal love; and as they correspond to conjugal love, they correspond to all celestial and spiritual love. Refs.

7622<sup>2</sup>. The Spirits who ascend from what is lower through the region of the loins to the region of the breast, are in a strong Persuasive that they are in the Lord.

7863. 'Your loins girded' (Ex. xii. 11) = as to the interiors. 'The loins' = the things which are of conjugal love, thus the things which are of the love of good and truth, for conjugal love descends from this. Refs. For this reason, and also because the loins are above the feet . . . they = the interiors. By their loins being girded is signified fitness to receive the influx of good and truth from the Lord, and also to act according to the influx . . .

9212<sup>8</sup>. For 'the loins' = the goods of love. Hence 'to gird the loins' = to invest good with truths.

9341<sup>6</sup>. 'The girdle of the loins' (Jer. xiii. 4) = the external bond holding together all things of love, and thence of faith.

9731. The Sensuous which is signified by 'the grating' extends itself with man from the head even to the loins, and there ceases. . . From the loins however, there is continued with man the Sensuous proximately interior, which was represented by the general covering of brass around the altar.

9828<sup>3</sup>. By girdles of the loins were represented celestial goods. Ill.

—<sup>4</sup>. For 'the loins,' from their correspondence, = the good of celestial love.

9872<sup>2</sup>. 'The loins' = conjugal love, which is that of good and truth. Refs. Hence it is that his loins are said to be 'girded with gold of Uphaz' (Dan. x. 5); for 'gold' = the good of love.

9960. The 'loins' = conjugal love . . . In the opposite sense (as implied here) the loins, genitals, and flesh = the evil, filthy, and infernal things of that love. Refs.

—<sup>10</sup>. See NAKEDNESS, here.

9961. 'From the loins even to the thighs they shall be' (Ex. xxviii. 42) = the extension . . . of the exteriors of conjugal love, which are signified by 'the linen breeches' . . . (For 'the loins,' and 'the thighs' = the things which are of conjugal love; 'the loins,' the things which are of its interiors; and 'the thighs,' the things which are of its exteriors. . . The reason 'the loins'=the interior things of that love, is that they are above . . .

10005<sup>4</sup>. The breast down to the loins corresponds to the Second Heaven, where there is spiritual good.

10075. See FLANK, here.

10755. They were girded with a covering round the loins.

H. 96. Those who in the Grand Man are in the loins . . . are in conjugal love.

97. Hence it is that . . . by 'the loins,' in the Word, is signified conjugal love.

R. 466. 'The fire of the loins'=celestial love.

830. The thighs and loins=conjugal love; and as this love is the fundamental of all loves, the thighs and loins=the good of love.

M. 263. The loins (of the devil) were quite on fire.

264. The loins (of the second devil) were naked, and were black like soot, through which fire shone duskiely . . .

505<sup>4</sup>. (Deflowerers there) walk with the loins contracted, and thus bowed . . .

510<sup>3</sup>. (Those who have been addicted to the lust of varieties) have no loins, but their ankles commence from the bottom of the belly. The reason is that the loins with men correspond to conjugal love, and this they do not possess.

T. 119. The Church on earth constitutes the loins and feet.

D. 1858<sup>e</sup>. The region (of this inmost heat) is from the loins, or from the middle between the loins, upwards . . .

3152<sup>e</sup>. The province (of those who love infants tenderly) is between the loins.

3315<sup>e</sup>. Their continual deliciousnesses were to love their consorts for the sake of offspring, which was shown me by this,—that a deliciousness of the whole body, in both wakefulness and sleep, took possession of the region of the loins.

3319. There was also shown me a respiration which was solely of the loins, down to the soles of the feet . . .

3861<sup>2</sup>. The general natural influx puts itself forth especially in the face, and in the region of the loins. All other things depend more upon the will . . .

3862. The general sense operates also into the province of the loins, by their like external influx, like an afflatus, which takes possession of the loins, but not of the genital members; for the general operation of the cerebellum . . . is about the loins, where many nerves of the cerebellum flow together . . .

4198<sup>3</sup>. Then the spear revolves them as to the loins.

5007. Those who are at the back where the loins are, enter into the affections of his thought; and when they once come to a man they do not leave him until death. These are the ones who are in his dominant affection.

D. Min. 4786. He inflicted a grievous pain in the hinge of the loins.

E. 240<sup>8</sup>. 'To put off the sackcloth from upon his loins' (Is.xx.2), that is, to present the loins naked, = to reveal filthy loves.

252<sup>4</sup>. By 'the loins being girded' (Luke xii.35) is meant the good of love. 274<sup>2</sup>.

355<sup>25</sup>. 'Oppression upon the loins' (Ps.lxvi.11)=no perception of the good of love.

381<sup>3</sup>. 'The hand upon the loins' (Jer.xxx.6)=to hatch the things (of Own intelligence).

444<sup>10</sup>. The dissipation of falsities by means of truths is signified by 'to smite the loins of those who rise up against him' (Deut.xxxiii.11); and the dissipation of evils, by 'to smite the loins of them that hate him.'

519<sup>3</sup>. 'The loins which shall be shaken' (Ps.lxix.23)=the will of good and its marriage with the understanding of truth. This is signified by 'the loins' elsewhere also in the Word.

595<sup>4</sup>. For the loins correspond to the marriage of good and truth which is with those who are in the higher Heavens.

627<sup>12</sup>. That all the good of love and of charity has been destroyed and dissipated, is signified by, 'Thou hast made all their loins to stand' (Ezek.xxix.7). 'The loins'=the marriage of truth and good; here, therefore, that no truth is conjoined with good . . . 654<sup>52</sup>.

629<sup>8</sup>. 'Waters to the loins' (Ezek.xlvii.4)=intelligence such as is possessed by the spiritual man; for 'the loins'=the marriage of truth and good, which is the Spiritual.

637<sup>18</sup>. 'The loins'=the good of the Church.

721<sup>22</sup>. 'The loins'=marriage; in the spiritual sense, the marriage of truth and good; but 'every man with his hands upon his loins, as one in travail' (Jer.xxx.6)=as if there were the marriage of truth alone without good.

780<sup>6</sup>. By 'His loins' (Is.xi.5) are meant those who are in love to Him.

London. Londinium.

C. J. 42. There are two great cities like London into which most of the English come after death. I have been permitted to see and walk through them. The middle of the one city answers to where in the English London there is . . . the Exchange: there dwell the Directors. Above that middle is the east; below it is the west; at the right hand is the south; at the left is the north. In the eastern quarter dwell those who have pre-eminently led a life of charity; there are magnificent palaces there. In the southern quarter dwell the wise, with whom there is much splendour. In the northern quarter dwell those who pre-eminently love the freedom of speaking and writing. In the western quarter dwell those who profess faith. At the right in this quarter is the entrance into this city, and there is an exit from it. Those who live evilly are sent out there. The presbyters who are at the west, and who as has been said profess faith, dare not enter into the city through the great streets, but through narrow lanes; because no other inhabitants are tolerated in the city itself than those who are in the faith of charity. I have heard them complaining about the preachers in the west, that they make up their discourses with such mingled art and eloquence, and unawares to them so interweave justification by faith, that they do not know whether good is to be done or not. They preach intrinsic good, and separate it from extrinsic good, which they sometimes call meritorious good, and thus not acceptable to God; yet still they call it good, because it is useful. But when those who dwell in the eastern and southern quarters hear such mystical discourses, they go out of the churches; and the preachers are afterwards deprived of the priesthood. Compare T.809.

[C.J.] 43. The other great city like London is not in the Christian Middle, but lies outside of it to the north. Into it come after death those who are interiorly evil. In the middle of it there is an open communication with Hell, by which they are swallowed by turns. T.811.

M. 451. Brothels are tolerated . . . in London, etc.

D. 5012. See ENGLAND, here. 5013<sup>e</sup>.

5016. Continuation concerning the London city.—That city treated of above was situated upon a rock to the left. There is also another city of London which is situated in a plain at the level of the sole of the foot a little to the right. Here also are Englishmen; and the city is according to the pattern of London. I was there also, and in like manner wandered through some of the streets. They said that they saw me when I was in London . . . But no one appeared in the streets; they do not go out except with leave. Men are seized on there. In the middle of that city are the evil, and the good are at the circumference, successively. Sometimes those in the middle there appear to subside, and sometimes those who are there are then overwhelmed. But sometimes that city with all its buildings subsides, and again emerges, and then the worst are swallowed up. Thus is that city preserved from the contagion of evil. I have seen the subsidence in the middle, and the emergence. It was like a wave subsiding.

6098<sup>e</sup>. (These solifidian bishops) were in the western part of London, and many of them were sent out.

J. (Post.) 12. The cities there are like the cities in our world. There is a London there which is like London as to the streets, but not as to the houses, nor as to the inhabitants and the quarters in which they dwell. I was brought into it in the spirit, and wandered through it, and recognized it. I spoke to some there, saying that men in the world would marvel and would scarcely believe that those who live in London will also see a London after death, and that if they are good will also inhabit their own city, although in a different way. They said that neither would they have believed it . . . because such a thing does not fall into sensuous ideas, but only into rational ideas illustrated by spiritual light; and that neither had they known that what is spiritual appears before a Spirit as what is material does before a man; and that all things which are in the Spiritual World are from a spiritual origin . . . in like manner the houses of a city, which are not built as in the world, but rise up in a moment created by the Lord . . . They rejoiced that they are now in England, as before, and in its great city; and they said that there is also another London below, which is not unlike as to the streets, but is unlike as to the houses and as to the inhabitants, in that the evil dwell in the middle, and the upright in the last circumferences; and that those come into that London from the London in the world who had not been in any spiritual love and thence not in any spiritual faith, but had indulged in the pleasures of the body and the concupiscences of the lower mind; and that that city in the middle where the evil live subsides by turns into the deep, and thus the evil are cast into Hell, and the chasm is made whole again, and again the evil are collected into the middle of it, and are again swallowed up by Hell. This is in the World of Spirits. It is different in Heaven, and in Hell.

268. On London.—As to the streets and lanes, London appears like the London in the world, but not like it as to the houses and places of dwelling. The unlikeness does not appear, because everyone there dwells in a quarter and a house which corresponds to his own affection and the derivative thought. The middle of the city is where [on earth] is the Exchange. On the right there dwells the Director, and his officials round about there. The middle way of that city is Holborn; in front there is the east, and backwards as far as Wapping is the west. The south is on the right of that street, and the north is at the left of it. In the eastern quarter, which stretches far outside the city in quite a considerable extension, dwell the best of them. All there worship the Lord. At the south dwell those who are in intelligence, almost as far as to Islington. There are meetings there; and those who dwell there are prudent in speaking and writing. To the north dwell those who are not lettered, and who are in the highest freedom of speaking, which they love. At the west are those who are in the obscure affection of good; those who are there are timid in opening their thoughts. At the southern tract there, where is Moorfields and its neighbourhood, there is a promiscuous crowd; thither are relegated from the city all who incline to evils; and therefore that crowd is by turns cast out; and so continually; and the city is continually cleansed by this route, and those who are led forth thence appear no more. Near the middle of the city they sometimes see a certain wicked person sitting on a seat in a pulpit, and the inhabitants are called together, and he commands them to go hither and thither. Those who approach and listen are led to the place of exit, where the promiscuous crowd is; and, as has been said, are let out through the ways there. Every society is cleansed; and this is the method of cleansing [used] there. (269) Their houses, dress, and food are like what they are in the world. I asked about wines, strong drinks, ales, chocolate, tea, and the like. They said that they have the like. I also asked about the liquor called punch. They said that they have that liquor also, but it is only given to those who are sincere and industrious. They do not tolerate any ruler in the city, who shall impose on or command them what they are to do. They want to be in full freedom.

10420. Those who are in externals separated from what is internal . . . look outwards and downwards . . . For a man looks inwards or upwards when his internal is open ; but he looks outwards or downwards when his internal is closed.

—<sup>3</sup>. In the other life . . . those who love the Lord and the neighbour continually look to the Lord . . .

10550. 'They looked after Moses' (Ex.xxxiii.8)= that they see the external of the Word, etc.

H. 123<sup>d</sup>. All in the other life look to those things which reign in their interiors . . .

130. Those think naturally who look only into the world . . . But those think spiritually who look to Heaven . . .

131<sup>e</sup>. A man, when looked at by the Angels . . .

209. When they look thither they do not see them.

313<sup>d</sup>. So that they had not looked to Heaven, but to the world . . . For in proportion as the interiors are open the man looks to Heaven ; but in proportion as they are closed . . . he looks to Hell.

314<sup>e</sup>. He cannot (then) look upwards to Heaven, but only downwards to Hell.

351<sup>d</sup>. The only means for forming the interiors is that the man looks to the Divine and Heaven . . . and a man looks to the Divine when he believes in the Divine . . .

398. His interiors then look from Heaven to the world, thus backwards.

430<sup>e</sup>. These can look no otherwise than below themselves, that is, to Hell ; and the former no otherwise than above themselves, that is, to Heaven. To look above one's self is to look to the Lord, because He is the common centre to which all things of Heaven look ; whereas to look below one's self is to look backwards from the Lord to the opposite centre, to which look and verge all things of Hell.

438<sup>e</sup>. When men appear (to Spirits) . . . they do not look at others . . .

J. 13. That all things may be regarded by the Divine as its own work, and that all things may at the same time look to the Divine as its work.

242. As he shuns evils as sins, and looks to the Lord. Gen.art. 246.

410<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is that every man, Spirit, and Angel is regarded by the Lord according to his love or good . . .

424. The love of self and of the world looks downwards and outwards ; and the love of the Lord looks upwards and inwards.

P. 20<sup>e</sup>. Such are those who have not looked to God at all in their life. By to look to God in the life is meant to think that this or that evil is a sin against God, and therefore not to do it. 93<sup>e</sup>.

46. That the Divine Providence . . . regards what is infinite and eternal. Gen.art. 52. 55, Ex. 214, Gen. art.

53. The Divine cannot regard anything else than the Divine . . . For no one can regard another except from what is his own in him. Ex.

122. In doing repentance, man must look to the Lord alone. If he looks to God the Father only he cannot be purified ; nor if to the Father for the sake of the Son ; nor if to the Son as a mere man.

125<sup>e</sup>. (It is sufficient for man to know that) he must shun evils as sins and look to the Lord.

R. 565a<sup>e</sup>. No Angel is allowed to look into lower things from Heaven ; but if he likes he may descend.

M. 75<sup>e</sup>. We two look together . . . and therefore it is impossible for us to look at any wife of a companion from lust . . .

146<sup>e</sup>. The purpose or intention of the will is primarily regarded by the Lord.

444<sup>e</sup>. Therefore he who looks with his face to the Lord receives from Him wisdom, and through this love ; whereas he who looks backwards from the Lord receives love and not wisdom ; and love without wisdom is love from man . . .

T. 69<sup>e</sup>. Every man . . . is thus in free will to look upwards to God, or downwards to Hell. If he looks upwards to God, he acknowledges that all wisdom is from God, and as to his spirit he is actually with the Angels in Heaven ; whereas he who looks downwards—as does everyone who is in falsities from evil—is actually as to his spirit with devils in Hell.

135<sup>e</sup>. I noticed that those who were actually thinking of three Gods looked towards Hell ; and that those who were thinking of one God, in whom is the Divine Trinity . . . looked towards Heaven.

A. 1. Each and all things of the Word regard the Lord... 2<sup>o</sup>. 1965. 2895<sup>e</sup>. 2904<sup>2</sup>.

8. The second state is when a distinction is made between the things which are of the Lord and those which are proper to man. The things which are of the Lord are called in the Word 'remains'...

16<sup>2</sup>. Therefore the Lord is called 'the Redeemer,' 'the Former from the womb,' 'the Maker,' and 'the Creator.'

20<sup>2</sup>. That men ought to know that the Lord exists... and that the Lord is good itself or life, and truth itself or light; and thus that there is no good and truth except from the Lord. Ill. 24. 27. 29. 39.

21. The light is called 'good' because it is from the Lord, who is good itself.

—<sup>e</sup>. All things which are of the Lord are compared to 'day'... and all things which are proper to man are compared to 'night.' 22.

30. The very essence and life of faith is the Lord alone; for he who does not believe in the Lord cannot have life. Ill.

31<sup>3</sup>. Every ordinance in the Jewish Church was a representative of the Lord.

32<sup>2</sup>. They who are in love love the Lord from the heart; but know, say, and perceive that all love, thus all life... and thus all happiness, come from the Lord alone... Rep.

33<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as anyone loves himself and the world, he hates the neighbour, and thus the Lord. Therefore true love is love to the Lord; and true life is the life of love from Him; and true joy is the joy of that life.

41. But whatever is from the Lord has life: there is in it what is spiritual and celestial; and when it is presented to view it appears as what is human alive. (Continued under LIFE.)

49. In the Most Ancient Church, with whom the Lord spoke face to face, the Lord appeared as a Man... Therefore they called no one a man except Him, and the things which were of Him...

50<sup>3</sup>. It is the Lord alone who rules man through Angels and Spirits...

54. With the Most Ancient Church... external things (served only to lead them) to the Lord, who to them was everything. 1122<sup>e</sup>.

59<sup>2</sup>. If the Lord did not protect man every moment... he would at once perish...

63. Meanwhile the Lord continually fights for the man... The time of combat is the time of the Lord's operation. Sig.

98. 'The east'=the Lord. 99.

123. That each and all things are the Lord's is... perceived by the celestial man; but is... only known by the spiritual man. 141.

128<sup>e</sup>. He who wants to be wise... from the Lord says in his heart that the Lord is to be believed...

146<sup>e</sup>. Those who desire proprium begin to despise the things which are of the Lord...

149<sup>2</sup>. The Lord alone has proprium... the proprium of the Lord is life...

197<sup>e</sup>. 'The brazen serpent'=the Sensuous of the Lord, who alone was a celestial man, and who alone provides for all; and therefore those who have looked to Him are saved.

245. Jehovah God, or the Lord, never curses anyone, is never angry with anyone, never leads anyone into temptation, punishes no one... Such things can never come from the Fountain of mercy, peace, and goodness. The reason (these things are attributed to the Lord in the Word) is in order that men may believe that the Lord rules and disposes each and all things in the universe... and after they have received this most general idea, that they may then learn how He rules and disposes them, and that He turns into good the evil of penalty and the evil of temptation. 592, Fully ex. 2395.

300<sup>e</sup>. By 'Jehovah God' is meant the Lord alone. Ex.

408<sup>e</sup>. This was why the Lord did not come into the world until the Jewish Church acknowledged and believed nothing.

552. Angelic Spirits were forming a candelabrum... in honour of the Lord... It was given me manifestly to apperceive that they could invent nothing of themselves. At last, after some hours, they said that they had formed a very beautiful representative candelabrum in honour of the Lord... But I told them that they had invented and formed nothing whatever from themselves, but the Lord alone had done it for them . . . The case is the same with all other representatives, and with each and all things of affection and thought, and thus with heavenly joys and happinesses, in that the least of all things of them is from the Lord alone.

588. It is predicated of the Lord that He repents and grieves, because such things appear to be in all human mercy . . . What the Lord's mercy is no one can know . . . This is the reason why human properties are so often predicated of the attributes of . . . the Lord . . .

696. The Lord never sends anyone into Hell, but wills to lead all from Hell. Still less does He lead into torment; but as an evil Spirit himself rushes into it, the Lord turns all the penalty and torment into good . . .

840. So long as temptation lasts the man supposes that the Lord is absent . . . But the Lord is then more present than he can ever believe . . .

904. 'God spake to Noah' = the presence of the Lord with this man of the Church. . . The Lord speaks to every man; for whatever a man wills and thinks which is good and true is from the Lord. . . All the good and truth which the Angels inspire is the Lord's; and thus the Lord is continually speaking to man; but quite differently with one man than with another. To those who suffer themselves to be led away by evil Spirits the Lord speaks as if He were absent, or from afar . . . But to those who are led by the Lord, the Lord speaks more presently, as may be sufficiently evident from this, that no one can ever think anything good and true except from the Lord. The presence of the Lord is predicated according to the state of love towards the neighbour and of faith in which the man is. The Lord is present in love towards the neighbour, because He is present in all good; not so much in faith, as it is called, without love. . . He, therefore, who is not in such love that he is merciful towards others, loves others, and wants to make them happy, cannot be conjoined with the Lord . . . To view the Lord by faith . . . and to hate the neighbour is . . . to have an infernal deep between one's self and the Lord . . . The presence of the Lord with a man is given for the first time when he loves the neighbour; in the love is the Lord; and the Lord is present in proportion as the man is in the love; and in proportion as the Lord is present, in the same proportion He speaks to the man. The man knows no otherwise than that he is thinking from himself; but . . . he has not the least of an idea from himself. . . (The Lord's presence with man in charity further treated of. 981<sup>2</sup>. 1023, Sig. 1032. 1038.)

987<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) it is the Lord alone who dominates over the evil with man, and over the Hell with him . . .

—e. All good and truth are from the Lord. 990<sup>e</sup>. 1025. 2227. 2284. (See Good, at 1911.)

1013<sup>4</sup>. The universal Heaven is a likeness of the Lord; for the Lord is all in all things of them.

VOL. IV.

1384. They perceive . . . what is from the Lord, and what is from some other source . . .

1401. The things said in (Gen. xii.) about Abram, represent the state of the Lord from His first childhood to His adolescence. As the Lord was born like another man, He advanced from an obscure state to a more lucid one. 1402. 1430.

1414. There is here meant the Lord's first state when He was born, which being most arcane cannot be so well set forth; merely that He was born like another man, except that He had been conceived of Jehovah; but that . . . by birth from the virgin woman He derived infirmities such as are those of man in general. These infirmities are corporeal things, of which it is said in this verse that He should recede from them, in order that celestial and spiritual things might be presented to Him. . . The Hereditary of the Lord from the Father was Divine; but the Hereditary from the mother was the infirm human. This (latter) is a corporeal something which is dispersed . . .

1419<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord is love itself . . . He wills to give to the human race all things which belong to Him. Sig.

1434<sup>e</sup>. As the Lord alone was a celestial man, these and the like sensuous truths were insinuated into Him in His first childhood; and He was thus prepared to receive celestial things.

1438. Here is described the Lord's first life, namely, that from His birth to His childhood, in that He arrived at the celestial things of love . . . He was first of all imbued with these; for thence, as from their seed, all things were afterwards fructified. He had with Him the celestial seed itself, because He was born from Jehovah; and therefore He was the only one who had this seed in him . . .

1440. The second state of the Lord, when the celestial things of love appeared to Him. Sig. and Ex. . . He advanced to the celestial things of love, and (then) arrived at them; (and then) they appeared to Him.

1442. As soon as Jehovah had appeared to the Lord in His celestial things, He acquired (His first) perception; for all perception is from celestial things. Sig. and Ex. 1443, Ex.

1444. 'The Canaanite was then in the Land' = the hereditary evil from the mother in the Lord's external man. . . It is known that the Lord underwent the most grievous temptations . . . so that He fought alone, and from His own power, against the whole of Hell. No one can undergo temptation unless evil adheres to him . . . With the Lord there was not any actual evil, or evil of His Own . . . but hereditary evil from the mother . . .

—, The Lord was born as another man. (See BORN, here.)

1450. The fourth state of the Lord when a child. Sig. and Ex.

1457. Here begin the progressions of the Lord into Knowledges. That the Lord was also instructed like another man, is evident from Luke i. 80; ii. 40, 46-49.

1458. The Lord was now to be imbued with Knowledges, in order that as to the Human essence also He might become the Light of Heaven. Sig.

[A.] 1460. A scarcity of Knowledges as yet with the Lord when a child. Sig. and Ex. . . Knowledges never come in childhood from within, but from the objects of the senses, and especially from hearing . . . Knowledges are learned and implanted in the memory according to the influx of the internal man. So also was it with the Lord when a child; for He was born as another man, and instructed as another. But with Him the interiors were celestial things, which adapted the vessels for the reception of Knowledges, and that the Knowledges might afterwards become vessels to receive the Divine. The interiors with Him were Divine from Jehovah His Father; the exteriors were human from Mary His mother. Hence it may be evident that with the Lord, equally as with other men, there was in childhood a scarcity of Knowledges in His external man.

1461<sup>2</sup>. Hence it may be evident that the Lord in His childhood did not will to imbue any other Knowledges than those of the Word: which to Him was open from Jehovah His Father . . . and that the more because there is nothing said in the Word which in its inmosts does not regard Him, and which did not previously come from Him; for the Human essence was only an additament to His Divine essence, which had been from eternity. Sig. 1462<sup>6</sup>.

1464. The Lord had the power of learning above every other man; but as He was to be instructed in celestial things before He was instructed in spiritual things, differently from other men, it is first said (that there was much scarcity in His external man).

1469. For all truth was previously with the Lord; the Celestial has truth with it . . . but it was hidden in His internal man, which was Divine. The scientifics and Knowledges which He learned are not truths, but only recipient vessels. . . These vessels were to be formed by the Lord, or rather opened, through instruction in Knowledges from the Word; not only that celestial things might be insinuated into them, but that they might also become celestial and thus Divine; for the Lord conjoined the Divine essence with the Human essence in order that His Human essence might also become Divine.

1472<sup>6</sup>. The Lord knew this when a child, and thought thus . . . namely, that if He were carried away by the mere desire for the knowledge of Knowledges, then knowledge would be such as no longer to care for celestial things . . . Sig.

1475<sup>2</sup>. Here are contained these arcana—how the Lord was instructed by His Father according to all order, and thus how His external man was conjoined with His internal man . . . This was effected through Knowledges . . .

1477. It will be evident from what follows that celestial or Divine things were not adjoined to the Lord so as to act as one essence until He had endured temptations, and had thus expelled the hereditary evil from the mother.

1479. 'When Abram came into Egypt'=when the Lord began to be instructed. Abram=the Lord when a child.

1482. 'Egypt,' or 'Pharaoh,' are here used in the best sense, because they are predicated of the knowledge of Knowledges which the Lord in His childhood learned with avidity first.

1484. 'The woman was taken into the house of Pharaoh'=that they captivated the lower mind. . . 'The woman'=truth, here the truth which is in knowledges, with the deliciousnesses of which the Lord was captivated in His childhood . . .

1485. (The consequent multiplication of scientifics with the Lord.) Sig. and Ex. 1486.

1487. Scientifics are acquired in childhood from no other end than that of knowing, but with the Lord, from the deliciousnesses and affection of truth. (After they had served their use they were destroyed. Sig. 1489, Ex.)

1489<sup>6</sup>. In the things said about Abram in Egypt there is described the Divine order in which with the Lord the external man was conjoined with the internal, so that the external man also might become Divine.

1491. 'Pharaoh called Abram'=that the Lord remembered. . . The knowledge itself, or the scientifics, which the Lord drew in when a child, are here called 'Pharaoh;' thus it is the knowledge itself which thus addresses the Lord, or Jehovah by means of the knowledge.

1492. 'And said, What is this thou hast done to me?'=that He was grieved. . . The affection in these words is the indignation of knowledge as it were, and the grief of the Lord . . . that the scientifics should be thus destroyed which He had drawn in with deliciousnesses; (just as) little children grieve when they love something which is hurtful to them, and it is taken away from them.

1493. 'That she is thy wife'=that He ought to have no other truth than that which was being conjoined with the Celestial. . . There is here described the order in which the Lord advanced to intelligence, and thus to wisdom . . .

1495. 'Why saidst thou, She is my sister?'=that He then knew no otherwise than that He should have intellectual truth . . . which took place to the end that the Celestial should not be violated, but saved. From these things it is evident that the Lord as a child, when He had drawn in scientifics, at first of all knew no otherwise than that the scientifics were solely for the sake of the intellectual man, or that He might know truths from them; but that it was afterwards disclosed that they had been for the sake of His arriving at celestial things; and that this took place to prevent celestial things from being violated. Ex. 1496, Sig. and Ex.

1496<sup>6</sup>. Intellectual truth is (that truth which is) conjoined with the internal perception that it is so. This truth was with the Lord in His childhood, and with Him opened the way to celestial things.

1499. That scientifics left the Lord. Sig. (by Pharaoh's sending Abram away.)

1502. From these things it is therefore evident that the sojourn of Abram in Egypt represents and signifies nothing else than the Lord, and in fact His instruction in childhood. (Ill. by other passages in the Word.)

—<sup>3</sup>. The arcana concealed in these things are . . . how the Lord became Jehovah as to His Human essence also ; and that He was inaugurated from childhood.

1535. In (Gen.xiii.) it treats of the external man with the Lord, which was to be conjoined with His internal man. . . The former is here represented by Lot, and the latter by Abram. (See EXTERNAL MAN at A.1535. 1536. 1537. 1538. 1539.)

1540. The things which are here continued about Abram=the Lord, and in fact His first life and the quality of it before His external man was conjoined with the internal so that they might act as one thing ; that is, before His external man had become in like manner celestial and Divine.

1542. These words (in ver.1) and those which follow in this chapter, represent the Lord, and it is a continuation of His life from childhood.

— . There are two things with man which prevent his becoming celestial . . . —the empty scientifics which he draws in during childhood and youth . . . and the pleasures from the cupidities which he favours . . . As the Lord was born like another man, and was informed like another, He also had to learn scientifics . . . which empty scientifics at last left Him . . . But that the pleasures which . . . constitute the sensuous man—that is, the outermost—also left Him, is represented in this chapter by Lot, in that he separated himself from Abram. 1563<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

1545. 'He and his wife'=the celestial truths which were then with the Lord. . . That man is man he has from the things with him ; the Lord had it from celestial things ; for He alone was celestial, so as to be the Celestial itself ; and therefore by 'Abram,' and still more by 'Abraham,' are signified celestial things . . . and his 'wife'=truth adjoined to the Celestial . . . Celestial truth is that which derives its origin from the Celestial . . .

1548<sup>e</sup>. With the Lord these (Knowledges) had been implanted in His first celestial things. Hence he had the light which is here called 'the south.'

1549. 'Abram was very heavy with cattle, silver, and gold'=the goods, truths, and goods from truths with which the Lord was then enriched.

1554. From His first infancy the Lord advanced according to all Divine order to celestial things, and into the celestial things (which He had before He was imbued with knowledges). Tr. 1555. 1556.

1557. From the things which have been said it may be evident what the quality of the Lord's state then was, namely, that it was childlike, which is such that worldly things are present ; for worldly things cannot be dispelled until truth and good has been implanted in celestial things by means of Knowledges. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. As to the Lord, inasmuch as He was conjoining human things with Divine ones, He advanced according to order, and now first arrived at that celestial state such as He had when a child, in which state worldly things also are present ; advancing thence into a state still more celestial ; and at last into the celestial state of infancy, in which He fully conjoined the Human essence with the Divine essence.

1573. 'And the Canaanite and the Perizzite were then dwelling in the Land'=evils and falsities in the external man. . . (As) there was hereditary evil from the mother with the Lord in His external man, it follows that there was the derivative falsity . . . and therefore this falsity also was hereditary. (Continued under HEREDITARY.)

—<sup>6</sup>. Much less could Hell have approached the Lord if He had been born Divine, that is, without evil adhering from the mother.

—<sup>7</sup>. The Lord could have assumed the Human essence without birth, as He had sometimes done before, when He was seen . . . But in order that He might also put on evil, to fight against and conquer it, He came into the world . . . But the Lord had no actual evil . . . Ill.

1577. The internal and external man have never been and could not be united with any man : only with the Lord, and therefore also He came into the world. Ex. —<sup>4</sup>. 1587<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

1581. The evil which is in the external man can be separated with no man, except with the Lord. Ex.

1582. Wherever the Lord is, there is the centre, and thence are the right and the left.

1584. 'Lot lifted up his eyes'=that the external man was illuminated by the internal . . . It cannot be doubted that the Lord when a child was often as to the external man in such Divine sight ; because He alone was conjoining the external man with the internal. The external man was His Human essence . . .

1590. That the external man appeared to the Lord such as it is in its beauty when conjoined with the internal. Sig. and Ex.

1593. 'The east,' here,=the Lord's internal man, which was Divine. Thus, that the external man receded from the internal, is signified by 'Lot journeyed from the east.'

1602. 'Jehovah said to Abram'=that Jehovah spake thus to the Lord ; as may be evident from . . . the state itself in which He then was . . . in that the external things which had hindered had been removed. . . The Lord as to the internal man was Divine, because He had been born from Jehovah, and therefore when nothing hindered on the part of the external man, He saw all things to come ; and that this then appeared as if Jehovah had spoken was because it was before the external man. As to the internal man He was one with Jehovah. Ill.

1603<sup>2</sup>. But with the Lord, after He had expelled hereditary evil, and had thus purified the organical things of the Human essence, these also received life ; so that the Lord, as He was life as to the internal man, so also became life as to the external man. Ill.

1607. That the Heavenly Kingdom was the Lord's. Sig. and Ex. 1614.

1616. That the Lord arrived at a still more interior perception. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. See KNOW=cognoscere, here.

1642<sup>e</sup>. What then [must be the case] with the Lord.

1651. In (Gen.xiv.) it treats concerning the Lord's combats of temptations.

[A.] 1652. The goods and truths which were with the external man—but which [only] appeared as goods and truths—were what the Lord fought from, in His childhood, against evils and falsities. Sig. 1655. 1661. —<sup>3</sup>. Ex.

1653. That these evils and falsities against which the Lord fought had not before appeared in His childhood, and that they then burst forth. Sig.

1654. That the Lord then vanquished and conquered all kinds of persuasions of falsity. Sig. Afterwards, the falsities and evils themselves. Sig. And afterwards all other falsities and evils. Sig. 1663.

1657. The Lord's internal man in the interior, or the Divine in the Rational, is 'Melchizedek.'

1661. It here treats of the Lord's . . . first combat, which was in His childhood and first adolescence; and which He for the first time entered upon and endured when He had been imbued with knowledges and Knowledges. . . No one can ever fight against evils and falsities . . . until he has been instructed . . . Thus every man (comes into temptations) in his age of manhood, but the Lord in His age of childhood.

—<sup>5</sup>. As the Lord in His first childhood was introduced into the most grievous combats against evils and falsities, He could then suppose no otherwise (than that the goods and truths from which He was fighting were His own, and thus attribute them to Himself, and also the power by which He resisted); and this both because it was according to Divine order that His Human essence should be introduced to the Divine essence, and united with it, through continual combats and victories; and also because the goods and truths from which He fought against evils and falsities were of the external man; and as these goods and truths were therefore not completely Divine, they are called appearances of good and truth. Thus did His Divine essence introduce the Human essence to conquer from its Own power. . . In a word, in His first combats, the goods and truths with the Lord from which He fought were imbued with hereditary things from the mother, and in proportion as they were imbued with hereditary things from the mother, in the same proportion they were not Divine. But by degrees, as He conquered evil and falsity, they were purified and made Divine.

1663<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord underwent and endured . . . the most grievous temptations, is not so well known from the Word, where it is only mentioned that He was in the wilderness forty days, and was tempted by the devil. The temptations themselves which He then had are not described, except by a few things, which however involve all things. Enum. 1690.

1664<sup>5</sup>. So that it is the Lord alone who endures all combat, and conquers.

1668. 'In the thirteenth year they rebelled'—the beginning of temptations in [the Lord's] childhood. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Evils, or evil Spirits, rebel in proportion as a man who wants to be in goods and truths confirms with himself any evils and falsities, or in proportion as cupidities and Falsities insinuate themselves into his goods and truths . . . and hence come infestation and combat. This [happens] with all who have conscience, and still more [did it happen] with the Lord when a child, who had perception. With those who have conscience there thence arises a dull—mutus—pain; but with those who have perception, a sharp pain; and the more interior the perception is, the sharper is the pain. From this may be evident the nature of the Lord's temptation in comparison with that of men; (for He had) interior and inmost perception.

1673. The persuasions of falsity, or the Hells of such, which the Lord conquered. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Such were the (Nephilim) against which the Lord fought in His first childhood, and which He conquered. (Continued under ADVENT.)

1676. That the Lord's first victory over the Hells signified by these nations as yet extended itself no further (than this). Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Such) may suppose that there was no need of the Lord's advent into the world in order to fight with the Hells . . . since they could have been subjugated by the Divine omnipotence . . . It is sufficient for them to know . . . that unless the Lord had come into the world, and by means of temptations admitted into Himself had subjugated . . . the Hells, the human race would have perished, and none could have been saved who had lived on this Earth from the time of the Most Ancient Church.

1683. The Lord never began a combat with any Hell; but the Hells attacked Him. Ex.

1690. That the Lord's life from His first childhood to the last hour of His life in the world was a continual temptation and a continual victory, is evident from many things in the Word . . . Enum. and Ex. (Continued under TEMPTATION.)

—<sup>3</sup>. The Lord's life was love towards the universal human race . . . and against this His life were admitted continual temptations . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. That the Lord fought against the love of the world. Sig. And against the love of self. Sig.

—<sup>6</sup>. In a word, the Lord from His first childhood to the last hour of His life in the world was assaulted by all the Hells, which were continually overcome, subjugated, and conquered by Him, and this solely from love towards the universal human race; and as this love was not human, but Divine, and as temptation is great in proportion to the love, it may be evident how grievous were His combats, and how great the ferocity on the part of the Hells . . . 1691<sup>5</sup>. Ill. 1692. 1787.

1701<sup>2</sup>. The Lord, who had a perception of all things which were taking place, knew clearly the quality and source of the things which came forth with Him; as, if anything of evil took possession of the affections of His external man, or if anything of falsity, the thoughts . . . Sig.

1705. 'Mamre, Eshcol, and Aner'—the Angels who were with the Lord when He fought in His first childhood. Ex.

1707<sup>5</sup>. In this the Lord was not like any other man, in that His interior man, as to celestial things or goods, was Divine, and from very birth was adjoined to the internal man. The internal man together with this interior man was Jehovah His Father. But He was like other men in this, that His interior man as to spiritual things or truths was adjoined to the external man, and thus was human. But this also, through combats of temptations and continual victories from Own power, was made Divine, that is, Jehovah. 1725<sup>a</sup>.

1741. In the two chapters which precede, 'Abram' represented the Lord, or His state, in childhood; here, he represents the Lord's Rational . . .

1778-1780. In (Gen.xv.) the subject of the Lord is continued . . . His consolation . . . His complaint concerning the Church; and the promise made Him concerning an internal Church.

1789. The Lord never expected any reward of victory for Himself; the reward of His victories was the salvation of the human race . . .

1791. The Lord<sub>4</sub> had an inmost and most perfect perception of all things, (which was) a perceptive sensation and Knowledge of all things which were taking place in Heaven, and was a continual communication and internal colloquy with Jehovah. Sig.

1799<sup>a</sup>. The Lord . . . wants to have all near Himself, and that they should not stand outside . . . in the First Heaven; but He wants them to be in the Third; and, if it were possible, not only with Himself, but in Himself. Such is the Lord's love.

1806<sup>a</sup>. Such was the Lord's sight. Ex. and Sig. 1807<sup>a</sup>.

1812. The Lord's faith then. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. In all His combats of temptations the Lord never fought from the love of self, or for Himself . . . consequently not that He might become the greatest in Heaven, scarcely that He might become the least; but only that all others might become something and be saved. III.

1813. That in this the Lord was first made justice. Sig. and Ex.

1835. That the Lord put to flight these evils and the derivative falsities. Sig. and Ex.

1838. The Lord appears to everyone according to his state. Sig. and Ex. 1861<sup>15</sup>.

1890. In (Gen.xvi.) it treats concerning the first Rational with the Lord. (See under ISHMAEL, and RATIONAL.)

1893<sup>2</sup>. Thus the Lord's first Rational was born as with another man . . .

1898. The Lord's perception then was from truth adjoined to good, which dictated to Him how the case was. Sig.

1904<sup>4</sup>. The Lord alone thought from intellectual truth, when He lived in the world; because this was . . . the Divine Spiritual conjoined with the Divine Celestial. In this the Lord was distinct from every other man. To think from the Divine as from Himself is . . . not possible in man; but solely in Him who had been conceived from Jehovah. Tr. 1914, Ex.

1906<sup>4</sup>. The remains which were with the Lord were all the Divine states which He had procured for Himself, and by means of which He united the Human essence to the Divine essence. They are not to be compared to the remains with man; for these are not Divine but human. Sig.

1911<sup>7</sup>. With the Lord there were no fallacies; but when His Rational was first conceived, there were appearances of truth . . . Hence at its first conception His Rational lightly esteemed intellectual truth; but successively as His Rational was made Divine, the clouds of appearances were dispelled, and intellectual truths appeared to Him in their own light, which is signified by the expulsion of Ishmael when Isaac had grown up. Tr.

1917. The Lord's indignation. Sig. and Ex.

1919<sup>8</sup>. The Lord's perception was immediately from Jehovah, thus from Divine good; but His thought was from intellectual truth and its affection. . . The Lord's Divine perception cannot be apprehended by any idea, not even by an angelic one. . . The Lord's perception . . . was a perception of all things which are in the Heavens, and (consequently) of all things which are on earth . . . But after the Human essence of the Lord had been united to His Divine essence . . . the Lord was above that which is called perception, because He was above the order which is in the Heavens and thence in the earth. Ex.

1925. The thought of the interior man with the Lord. Sig. and Ex. 1926.

1937<sup>6</sup>. For the Lord wills to communicate that which is His to everyone . . .

1985. In (Gen.xvii.) it treats of the union of the Lord's Divine essence with the Human essence, and of the Human essence with the Divine essence; and also of the conjunction of the Lord with the human race through His Human essence.

2025<sup>4</sup>. The Lord's soul was life itself, or the Esse itself which is Jehovah; for He was conceived from Jehovah; thus was He in His least singulars. . . 2026.

2053. The conjunction of the Lord with man in his impurity. Sig. and Ex.

2122. (Christians) do not acknowledge the Lord Himself; nay, they hate all who profess Him.

2135<sup>3</sup>. 'The Lord said to my Lord' . . . treats of the Lord.

2136. In (Gen.xviii.) it treats of the state of perception of the Lord in the Human, and of communication then with the Divine, before the perfect union of His Human essence with His Divine essence. 2143.

2138. Secondly, it treats of the Lord's perception in that state concerning the Rational with Him, that it would put off the human, and would become Divine. 2207.

2140. Thirdly, it treats of the Lord's grief and anxiety over the human race . . . for which in that state He interceded, and obtained that those should be saved with whom there were goods and truths. 2250.

2141<sup>6</sup>. That when these things had been done, the Lord returned into His former state of perception. Tr. 2287. 2288.

2156. 'My Lord' (ver.3)=the Trine in one, namely, the Divine itself, the Divine Human, and the proceeding Holy . . . (These three) are the same as the Lord, and the Lord is the same as Jehovah.

[A.] 2162<sup>5</sup>. For the Lord is presented to view according to the things which are then signified. III.

2173. 'Sarah,' here, = the Lord as to truth.

2245. The Lord's thought from the Divine. Sig. . . His thought was from the Human conjoined with the Divine . . . but His perception from which was His thought was from the Divine. 2247, Sig. 2249.

2253. With the Lord, when He was in the world, there was no other life than the life of love towards the universal human race, which He burned to save to eternity. This life is the veriest celestial life by means of which He united Himself to the Divine, and the Divine to Himself . . . 2261<sup>3</sup>.

2255. The Lord's horror. Sig. 2257. 2222.

2293. Infants there know no other Father, and afterwards acknowledge no other, than the Lord alone, and that they have life from Him. 2305.

2329<sup>o</sup>. Even the Jews in the other life, when they hear that the Lord is Jehovah, and that there is only one God, can say nothing . . .

—<sup>o</sup>. The minds of those who are in the faith of charity the Lord applies to Himself.

2332. Before the man, and also before the Angels, to whom the Lord presents Himself to view, He miraculously moderates and tempers the Holy which proceeds from Him, so that they can endure it; or, what is the same, He applies it to their Natural. Sig.

2335<sup>3</sup>. The Lord never judges anyone except from good; for He wants to uplift all . . . into Heaven, and even, if it were possible, to Himself; for the Lord is mercy itself, and good itself.

2349<sup>4</sup>. Hence it is evident how those are against the Lord who are against the good of charity. III.

2354<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is evident that those who are in a life of evil cannot acknowledge the Lord . . . but that those who are in a life of good do acknowledge the Lord, because Heaven is inflowing, in which love and charity is the principal thing, and because Heaven is of the Lord. Refs.

2357<sup>3</sup>. (The danger of profanation) is the reason why it is at this day conceded to so few to believe from the heart that . . . all the Divine is in the Lord; for they are in a life of evil.

2359. No one can be admitted into . . . Heaven unless he is in the good of love and of charity; and no one can be in (this) unless he acknowledges the Divine and the Holy of the Lord; from Him alone does that inflow, and in fact into the good itself which is from Him. The Divine cannot inflow except into the Divine, nor can it be communicated to man except through the Divine Human and the derivative Holy of the Lord. Hence may be understood what it is for the Lord to be all in all things of His Kingdom; and also that nothing of the good which is with man is of man, but of the Lord.

2373. The reason those within the Church reject charity more than they deny the Lord. Ex. and Sig. . . Still, he who rejects the one in both doctrine and life, also rejects the other. Sig.

2496. In (Gen.xx.) it treats of the sojourn of Abraham in Gerar, where Abimelech was, by which in like manner (as by his sojourn in Egypt) is signified the instruction of the Lord, but in the doctrinals of charity and faith.

2500. The advancement of the Lord in the goods and truths of faith. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. As to the Lord's instruction in general, the nature of it shines forth from this chapter in the internal sense, namely, that it was effected by means of continual revelations, and thus by Divine perceptions and thoughts from Himself, that is, from His Divine; which revelations He implanted in Divine intelligence and wisdom, and this even to the perfect union of His Human with His Divine. This way of being wise is never possible with any man; for it inflowed from the Divine itself . . . thus from the Divine love itself. Ex. . . In love itself are wisdom and intelligence . . .

2503. As with the Lord all truth was from a celestial origin.

2511. The things contained in this verse involve the Lord's first thought concerning the doctrine of faith, as to whether it was advantageous to consult the Rational or not. The reason that such was His first thought, is that the Lord advanced according to all Divine order . . . thus He had to put off this human thing—as to whether the Rational was to be consulted in the doctrinal things of faith.

2514. The reason the Lord's first perception is called obscure, is that it was in the human which was to be put off, and the shades of which He was to dispel. The Perceptive of the Lord, although from the Divine, was nevertheless in the human, which is such that it does not receive light itself immediately, but successively as the shades therein are dispelled. That He [afterwards] reduced Himself into what was less obscure as to the doctrine of faith. Sig.

2515<sup>o</sup>. As to the Lord's thought, it transcended all human understanding; for it was immediately from the Divine.

2519<sup>o</sup>. As it appeared at first as if the Rational ought to be present . . . This was the first of thought—as to whether it was to be consulted at the same time. But the Lord revealed and replied to Himself that thus doctrine would become none; and therefore it was not consulted. Sig. 2588.

2520<sup>2</sup>. This love (towards the universal human race) directed the Lord's thoughts while He was still in the maternal human . . .

2523. In the internal sense . . . is described the Lord's whole life such as it was to be in the world, even as to the perceptions and thoughts; for these had been foreseen and provided . . . Unless these things had been as it were present with the Angels through the Word and the rites in the Jewish Church, the Lord would have had to come into the world immediately after the fall of the Most Ancient Church . . . and, what is more, the human race which then [existed] could not have been saved.

—<sup>2</sup>. As regards the Lord's life itself, it was a continual progression of the Human to the Divine, even to absolute union . . . For in order that He might fight with the Hells and conquer them, He had to do so from the Human ; for there can be no combat with the Hells from the Divine ; and therefore it pleased Him to put on the human as another man, to be an infant as another, to grow up into knowledges and into Knowledges, which were represented and signified by the sojourn of Abram in Egypt, and now in Gerar—thus as another man to cultivate the Rational, and thus dispel the shade thereof, and bring it into light, and this from His Own power. That such was the progression of the Lord from the Human to the Divine, can be doubted by no one, if he only considers that He was an infant, and that He learned to speak as an infant, and so on. But there was this difference—that the Divine Itself was in Him, because He was conceived from Jehovah. 2551.

2534. The Lord was represented by Moses, equally as by Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, and many others.

2541<sup>2</sup>. The Angels perceive in these things . . . how the Lord reduced rational and scientific things to obedience ; and in fact so that He reduced to obedience not only the rational and scientific things themselves, but also the affections which were rising up in opposition to the celestial and spiritual things of doctrine . . .

2545. The Lord's thought from the doctrine of faith. Sig. 2552.

2551. The Angels are in their delectable things . . . when they are thinking about the Lord, His Divine and Human, and how the latter was made Divine ; for they are [then] circumfused with a celestial and spiritual sphere which is full of the Lord, so that it may be said that they are in the Lord . . . These things . . . are presented before the Angels . . . when the Word is being read. 3085<sup>o</sup>.

2571. The Lord's perception concerning the doctrine of love and charity. Sig. and Ex.

2572<sup>o</sup>. Hence it is evident that the Lord in Heaven and on earth is in everything where there is good. They are much mistaken who suppose that the Lord is in truth separated from good. He is only in good, and in the derivative truth.

2576<sup>2</sup>. The ark of the covenant represented the Lord Himself . . .

2592<sup>3</sup>. (Conversation with a wise Gentile about the Lord.)

2596<sup>2</sup>. I spoke to (the Chinese Spirits) at last about the Lord. When I called Him Christ, a certain repugnance was perceived in them ; but the reason was disclosed—that they had brought it from the world, from their having known Christians to live worse than they did themselves . . . But when I simply mentioned the Lord, they were inwardly moved. H.325. D.3068.

2660. The Lord's first state when He thought about separating that Rational from Himself, namely, that it was a state of grief from love. Sig.

2661<sup>o</sup>. With the Lord, when He was in the world, were represented all states of the Church, and how they were saved through Him.

2692. 'The Angel of God'=the Lord.

2702<sup>3</sup>. 'Rock'=the Lord.

2739<sup>o</sup>. Therefore in the Heavens they dwell distinct, as it were in nations, families, and houses, which all acknowledge the Lord as their one only Parent.

2759. The rustics and other simple ones . . . said that they know the Lord, to whose name they commend themselves.

2764. In (Gen.xxii.) it treats of the Lord's most grievous and inmost temptations, through which He united the Human essence to the Divine essence . . .

2780. 'Morning'=the Lord . . .

2786<sup>2</sup>. The Lord, from the Divine, could induce on Himself any states He pleased ; and He prepared Himself for temptations by many induced states. 2796, Ex.

2802. (This) is a colloquy of the Lord with His Father. Sig. and Ex.

2807<sup>2</sup>. All the rites . . . represented the Lord . . .

2846. See BLESS, here.

2915. That although the Lord was unknown to them, still He could be with them. Sig. and Ex. . . For the presence of the Lord with a man is in good, and therefore in what is just and fair, and further in what is honourable and decorous.

2921. 'My lord, thou art a prince of God in our midst' (Gen.xxiii.6)=the Lord as to good and truth Divine with them. . . He is called 'Lord' when good is treated of.

— When the Divine power of good, or omnipotence, is treated of, He is called 'Jehovah Zebaoth,' and also 'Lord,' so that 'Jehovah Zebaoth' and 'Lord' have the same meaning and signification. Ill. Hence, namely from the power of good, men and Angels also are called lords . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. In the Word of the Old Testament, 'Lord' involves the like as 'Jehovah ;' namely, in that 'Lord' is said when it treats of good ; and therefore also 'Lord' is distinguished from 'God' in like manner as 'Jehovah' is from 'God.' Ill.

—<sup>5</sup>. But in the Word of the New Testament . . . instead of 'Jehovah,' 'Lord' is said. Ill and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. (Such) believe that our Saviour was called the Lord from the common formula of reverence, like others ; when yet He [was so called] from the fact that He was Jehovah.

2946<sup>2</sup>. Whatever does not come from the Lord is evil and false.

2960. A third state in which they believe that they are reformed by the Lord. (Before this) they do indeed acknowledge that they are reformed by the Lord, but still want [it to be] by themselves . . . Good itself, in which truth has been implanted, causes them not only to acknowledge, but also to believe, that reformation is from the Lord. This is the third state, which is followed by a fourth, in which they perceive that [it is] by the Lord ; but there are few who come to this state in the life of the body, for it is angelic . . .

2974. It is a primary of faith that all good and all truth are of the Lord, thus from the Lord alone. The more interiorly anyone acknowledges this, the more interiorly he is in Heaven, for in Heaven it is perceived to be so; there is a sphere of perception there that it is so, because they are in the good which is from the Lord alone, and this is what is called being in the Lord.

[A.] 299<sup>6</sup>. For the Lord is the only Man, and Heaven represents Him . . .

3021<sup>3</sup>. From the Divine good which is of His love He is called 'Lord of lords' (Rev. xix. 16).

3026. The Divine celestial and spiritual things which the Lord acquired for Himself. Sig.

3029. The Lord's perception concerning the natural man. Sig.

3030<sup>4</sup>. In order that (the Rational) might come forth in like manner with the Lord, and become Divine by His own power, the Lord came into the world, and willed to be born like another man; otherwise He could have assumed the Human without birth, as [He had done] frequently in ancient times when He appeared to men.

3036. The Lord delivering Himself from maternal things. Sig.

3048<sup>2</sup>. It is treating (in Gen. xxiv.) of the process of the conjunction of truth with good in the Lord's Divine Rational; first, of the process of initiation . . . Here, that the Lord in the natural man separated those things which were from Himself—that is, which were Divine—from those things which were from the maternal.

3061<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord had been from eternity, is manifestly evident from the Word, although He was afterwards born in time . . . but this most arcane thing cannot be revealed to anyone except those who are in Divine perception, thus scarcely to others than the Most Ancient Church . . . I have heard from them that Jehovah Himself was the Lord as to the Divine Human when He descended into Heaven and inflowed through Heaven. (Continued under DIVINE HUMAN.)

3116. These things the Lord saw and explored with Himself from the Divine, and from His Own wisdom and intelligence initiated; namely, truths into the good of the Rational. Tr.

3161<sup>3</sup>. The Lord did all these things in Himself from Himself . . .

3195<sup>3</sup>. The Divine good itself, and the Divine truth, from which is light, is the Lord . . .

3209<sup>2</sup>. Rational good in the Lord was Divine, but the truth, which was elevated out of the Natural, was not Divine until conjoined with the Divine good of the Rational.

3230. That the representative of the Lord through Abraham was finished; and that the representative of the Lord through Isaac and Ishmael commenced. Tr.

3235. The second state of the Lord which Abraham represents. Sig. (by Abraham marrying Keturah).

—<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord appears to everyone such as is he who receives Him . . . in one way to the celestial, and in another way to the spiritual; to the celestial the Lord appears as a Sun, but to the spiritual as a Moon. Ex.

3236. As a husband represents good . . . the Lord is called 'the Bridegroom,' 'the Man-vir,' 'the Husband' . . .

3241<sup>2</sup>. Everything unconnected with the Lord is nothing.

3318<sup>3</sup>. The Lord by most grievous combats . . . reduced all things in Himself into Divine order, inasmuch that nothing at all remained from the human which He derived from the mother (Refs.); so that He did not become new, like another man, but altogether Divine. A (regenerated) man retains . . . evil, but is withheld from it by the influx of the life of the Lord's love . . . But the Lord completely cast out all evil . . . and made Himself Divine, even as to the vessels, that is, as to truths. This is what is called 'glorification.'

3514<sup>6</sup>. For there is a parallelism between the Lord and man as to celestial things . . . but not as to spiritual things.

3519<sup>6</sup>. The Lord can appear to no one . . . unless he to whom He appears is in a state of innocence. Sig. Therefore as soon as the Lord is present they are let into a state of innocence; for the Lord enters through innocence, even with the Angels in Heaven.

3539<sup>6</sup>. The humiliation of man is not from the love of glory in the Lord; but . . . because the Lord can thus inflow with good and truth, and make the man blessed . . . 5957<sup>2</sup>. 7550<sup>2</sup>. 8263.

3565<sup>6</sup>. For the Lord acts through ends, and through them successively disposes the intermediates into order.

3605<sup>3</sup>. 'Hatred,' attributed to the Lord, in the internal sense, is mercy . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. Such as a man is, such does the Lord appear to him. Refs.

3638<sup>6</sup>. (Thus) all the Angels are not only with the Lord, but in the Lord; or, what is the same, the Lord is with them, and in them.

3656. In (Gen. xlviii.) it treats, in the supreme sense, of the Lord, how He began to make Divine His Natural as to truth and as to good . . . 3657.

3688<sup>4</sup>. As the Lord is present in good . . . a man, by affection towards good, testifies love to the Lord.

3702. The arcanum hidden in the internal sense of these words is that all goods and truths descend from the Lord, and ascend to Him; that is, that He is the First and the Last; for man has been so created that the Divine things of the Lord may descend through him down to the ultimates of nature, and from the ultimates of nature may ascend to Him . . . if man would only acknowledge with faith of heart the Lord as his first and last end. Ex.

3703<sup>10</sup>. 'Lord' (Mal.i.6)=those who are in the truth of the Church . . . (or) the Lord as to Divine truth.

3704<sup>7</sup>. Little is thought about the Lord (by Christians) in the other life . . .

—<sup>11</sup>. Before He was glorified, the Lord was the Divine truth . . . after He had been glorified, He was the Divine good itself as to both essences . . . (See under DIVINE GOOD.)

3736. The Lord was in the Divine Itself from conception. (See under CONCEIVE.)

3742. Life . . . is from the Lord alone. (See LIFE, here, and at 4320.

3758. In (Gen.xxix.) it treats of the Lord's Natural ('Jacob')—how the good of truth therein was conjoined with related good from a Divine origin ('Laban'); first, through the affection of external truth ('Leah'), and afterwards through the affection of internal truth ('Rachel').

3875<sup>4</sup>. In the supreme sense, the Lord is 'Levi,' from His Divine love and mercy towards those who are in spiritual love. (See under LEVI.)

—<sup>5</sup>. By 'neighbour' . . . in the supreme sense, is signified the Lord, because He . . . is good itself.

3882. When he is (thus far) regenerate, the Lord appears to him. Sig.

3921. For the Lord judges all from justice, and hears all from mercy. (Continued under DIVINE GOOD.)

3938<sup>3</sup>. Existere also is predicated of the Lord, but only while He was in the world, and was there putting on the Divine Esse. (Continued under EXIST.)

3998. With the Lord there are no states; but everything there is eternal and infinite.

4007. By 'Judah' is represented the Lord as to His Divine love.

4054. For whatever inflows from the Lord is an end regarding the salvation of the human race . . .

4060<sup>5</sup>. Not knowing that the Lord has come as often as the Church has been devastated. Not that He has come in person, as when He assumed the Human by birth . . . but by appearances, either manifest, as when He appeared to Abraham in Mamre, to Moses in the bramble, to the Israelitish people on Mount Sinai, to Joshua when he entered into the Land of Canaan; or by appearances not so manifest, as by inspirations, through which is the Word; and afterwards by the Word, for in the Word the Lord is present, because all things of the Word are from Him and about Him.

4065. That He gave to Himself. Sig. . . . For in the supreme sense this is predicated of the Lord, who never took anything of good and truth from another, but from Himself. Other good which had relationship with what was maternal had indeed served Him as a means . . . but by that means He procured for Himself those things whereby He made His Natural Divine by His Own power . . . The Lord procured for Himself by a means because He was born a man . . . but not from a means, because He was conceived from Jehovah . . . and therefore He gave to Himself all the goods and truths which He made Divine; for the Divine Itself has need of nothing, not even of that middle good, except that He willed that all things should be done according to order.

4075. The Lord, when He made the Human in Himself Divine, also had Societies of Spirits and Angels about Him; for He willed that all things should be done according to order. But He associated with Himself such as were of service, and changed them at His good pleasure. He took from them, and applied to Himself, nothing of good and truth; but from the Divine. Thus also He reduced into order both Heaven and Hell; and this successively, even until He had fully glorified Himself. (Examps. of the use such Societies were to Him.)

4206<sup>2</sup>. The reason so many various things of the Lord are represented, is not because they are various in the Lord, but because His Divine is variously received by men.

4211<sup>3</sup>. Those who are in a most holy idea concerning the Lord, and are at the same time in the Knowledges and affections of good and truth . . . are conjoined with the Lord as to His Divine Rational; whereas those who are not in such holiness, nor in such an interior idea and affection, and yet are in the good of charity, are conjoined with the Lord as to His Divine Natural; and those who have a still grosser holiness are conjoined with the Lord as to His Divine Sensuous; this conjunction is that which is represented by 'the brazen serpent.' . . . In this conjunction are those among the gentiles who worship idols, and still live in charity according to their religiosity.

4236. The Tabernacle which was in the midst, and around which they encamped, represented the Lord Himself.

4279<sup>2</sup>. The supreme sense of the Word (treats) of the Lord.

4288<sup>3</sup>. 'Mountains,' in the supreme sense, = the Lord. . . . 'Groves,' in the supreme sense, = the Lord as to spiritual love.

4321<sup>6</sup>. As all appear before the Lord constantly in their own situation according to the states of good and truth, they appear in like manner to each other, because the Lord's life, consequently the Lord, is in all who are in Heaven.

4531. The Lord is present with light everywhere, even in the Hells . . .

4571. For the Divine was in the Lord from conception. This was His Esse, for He was conceived from Jehovah. Hence His perception was from the Divine, but according to the state of reception by the Human . . .

4585<sup>2</sup>. It treats in these verses concerning the progression of the Lord's Divine towards interior things; for when the Lord made His Human Divine, He progressed in a like order to that in which He makes man new by regeneration, namely, from the external to interior things; thus from the truth which is in the ultimate of order to the good which is interior and is called spiritual good, and thence to celestial good.

[A.]4592<sup>2</sup>. The Lord alone was born spiritual celestial; and (therefore) He was born at Bethlehem, (by which) is signified the Spiritual of the Celestial. . . The reason He alone was born Spiritual Celestial, is that the Divine was in Him. Ex. 4594<sup>2</sup>.Ex.

4644. It treats of the good which was Divine in the Lord from birth, and of the conjunction of that good with the truth and good which He acquired for Himself as a Man born, and also of the derivations thence.

4669. 'Joseph,' in the supreme sense, = the Lord as to the Divine Spiritual. (Continued under JOSEPH.)

4724<sup>1</sup>. Those who live the life of faith adore the Lord with bended knees and a humble heart as God the Saviour . . . 4731<sup>6</sup>.

4960. In (Gen.xxxix.) it treats of the Lord, how He made His internal man Divine.

4973<sup>2</sup>. 'The Lord' is frequently mentioned in the Word . . . (and) nowhere where it does not treat of good . . . Hence it is that by 'Lord' is signified good. Ill. . . The Lord is called 'the Lord of lords' from the Divine good which is in Him. Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. When the Lord was in the world He was the Divine truth; but when He was glorified . . . He became the Divine good . . . Hence it is that after His resurrection the disciples did not call Him 'Master,' as they had done before, but 'the Lord.' Ill.

—<sup>6</sup>. As by 'Lord' is meant the Divine good, and by 'King' Divine truth . . . 'dominion' is predicated of Divine good; and 'kingdom,' of Divine truth.

5066. That if they had seen the Lord Himself, every one of them would have performed these offices, but not from love towards Him, but from fear because He was to be the Judge of the universe . . . Sig.

5078<sup>2</sup>. In the former chapter it treated of the Lord, how He glorified the interiors of His Natural; here it treats of the Lord, how He glorified the exteriors of His Natural.

5095. Here Joseph represents the Lord as to the Celestial of the Spiritual from the Rational, and also in the Natural; Pharaoh represents Him as to the new state of the Natural, or as to the interior Natural; the butler and the baker represent Him as to those things which are of the external Natural.

5097<sup>2</sup>. By 'morning,' in the supreme sense, is signified the Lord Himself. Ex.

5110<sup>2</sup>. This Divine . . . is the Lord from eternity. Ex.

5130. He who receives faith, and who has it, is continually in the remembrance of the Lord, even when he is thinking or speaking about something else, and also when he is discharging his public, private, or domestic offices, although he is unaware that he is then remembering the Lord; for the remembrance of the Lord by those who are in faith is what reigns universally; and that which reigns universally is not apperceived, except when the thought is determined thither.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that those who are in Heaven are said to be in the Lord.

5134<sup>6</sup>. With man, evils are separated . . . But with the Lord . . . evils and falsities were completely cast out and blotted out . . .
